To really shut the door to this Mormon error two points must be made: (1) The biblical teaching that our eternal destiny is fixed at death (Luke 16:19-31; Heb. 9:27; 2 Cor. 6:2), and (2) The fallacious nature of the Mormon interpretation of 1 Peter 3:18-20 and 4:6, which they say establishes that the gospel is offered to all in the spirit world.

Rev. Luke P. Wilson
Institute for Religious Research
Grand Rapids, Mich.

I would like to add an opinion I have reached by researching this verse of Scripture since two of my children have been married to those of the Mormon faith.

In Walter Bauer's A Greek-English Lexicon of the New Testament and Other Early Christian Literature, hyper is stated to mean "for, in behalf of, for the sake of someone or something." Since there is no historical proof of anyone being vicariously baptized in the place of someone who is dead, can Carson's "most plausible interpretation" really be the most plausible? I contend that the most plausible interpretation is that if Jesus has not been raised from the dead, then why are we baptized "for his sake" or "on his behalf?" After all, it is common for Christians to pray "for Jesus' sake." Could Carson be wrong about his "most plausible interpretation?" After all, I was baptized "for Jesus' sake" to make his vicarious atonement efficacious for me.

Rev. Marvin L. Ellis
Canton, Ga.

A False Dichotomy?

After reading Chuck Colson and Nancy Pearcey's "The Devil in the DNA" [Aug. 10], I'm continuing to discover (as I also found in Phillip Johnson's Defeating Darwinism), that in regard to human origins, I'm left with two choices. Either I accept the naturalistic explanation with its "purposeless," "materialistic," "arbitrary" processes or I adamantly reject naturalism in favor of intelligent design. And by design, apparently one immediately decides that, in spite of a universe that seems to exhibit endlessly complex processes, human existence itself must have been the result of an "instantaneous" and "supernatural" event (another first cause which came after the first first cause). Consequently, I can investigate origins in some "atheistic," "secular," and "cynical" academic arena, or I can abandon the study of origins, arguing that explaining the means by which humans came into existence lies beyond the scope of scientific investigation. Can a false dichotomy be any more obvious? Evidently not. Clearly there is no middle ground, absolutely no possible harmonization. Is life this simple?

Forgive my "liberal" Christianity and my contentment with some ambiguity, but the descent of humans from other animal ancestors does not necessarily lead one to apostasy and "moral nihilism." Buying into evolution isn't surely boarding a one-way flight to the land of atheism any more than enjoying a hot fudge sundae certainly leads one to purchase a lifetime supply of ice cream.

Korey D. Kwilinski
St. Louis, Mo.

Colson properly recognizes that evolutionism is inimical to Christian theism. But he

The truth about lies and why good people tell them.

Jesus said "I am the way, the TRUTH, and the life," yet as Christians, we allow ourselves to indulge in small lies and deceptions every day.

Author Diane Komp, M.D. dissects this startlingly common behavior with surgeon-like precision in her new book Anatomy of A Lie. Find out how little lies are at the heart of a bigger problem and what you can do to stop small deceptions from becoming a spiritual cancer in your life. Call 1-800-727-3480 or visit your local Christian bookstore today.

Zondervan Publishing House
www.zondervan.com

also constructs a straw man, for no proponent of genetic determinism claims that the genes are the sole causes of actions. Even strict determinist B. F. Skinner recognized the place of environment in Walden Two. Others have noted that, were an adult cloned, the result could not be an exact duplicate of the original because the environment during development would be different. Further, genetic tendencies may be battled: most genetic determinists claim only that heredity plus environment predisposes, not that they produce unconditional consequences. The straw man was unnecessary and improper, for there are more than enough genuine problems in evolutionism and evolutionary psychology and silly claims by adherents, and Christians must be strictly truthful. David F. Siemens, Jr., Ph.D.
Los Angeles Pierce College
Mesa, Ariz.

A True American Hero

Your article on Sen. Dan Coats highlights the important question of what is the proper role of faith in public policy or, put differently, whether the church (or synagogue) should be in and also of the world. Senator Coats who, together with Sen. Joseph Lieberman serves as chairman of our Center for Jewish and Christian Values in Washington, D.C., is truly an exceptional individual whose heightened sense of morality and evangelical Christian faith make him most worthy of lionizing.

What is not always recognized is that Senator Coats's ethical ethos and public-policy posture stems from his distinctly religious sensibilities, not just political motivations. He is a congressional treasure, a true American hero, and a model public servant, precisely because he so effectively expresses his religious convictions in the public square. Moreover, he does so in a manner that is tolerant and respectful of divergent viewpoints and civil toward individuals with whom he disagrees. This demeanor should not be seen as the suspension of religious values but their greatest manifestation.

It is the affirmation of Coats's Christian faith that shapes his morality, not faith's denial. He is, in my book, a paradigm for public servants. The Senate, and our nation as a whole, will not be quite the same, bereft of his leadership. Rabbi Yechiel Eckstein
International Fellowship of Christians and Jews Chicago, Ill.

Male/Female; Left/Right

With regard to John Stackhouse's article on evangelicalism today ["The Perils of

THE DIGITAL HYMNAL

NEW VERSION CP

Now With Acoustic Grand Piano Plus Over 650 New Titles Previously Unavailable

- Instantly plays thousands of new praise and worship music, contemporary selections, traditional hymns, gospel favorites, kid's titles plus wedding, graduation and memorial selections - already stored inside - and indexed to page numbers of popular hymn books
- Acoustic grand piano, pipe organs, choir, strings and brass plus other exciting instruments already stored inside for instant use
- You choose the key, number of verses and style
- Completely self contained - no costly keyboards or disks needed
- Includes remote control and built-in speakers, or use PA system - CD quality sound
- Rechargeable NiCad battery available
- Pre-program an entire service in memory mode

Ask for cassette demo, master list of song titles and color brochure

Gulbransen, Inc.

800-677-7374

2102 Hancock Street, San Diego, CA 92110 • FAX: 619-296-7157

- CONGREGATIONAL SINGING
- OUTDOOR MEETINGS
- HOME USE
- SOLOS AND CHOIR REHEARSAL

Dr. Robert H. Schuller

DR. BUCKNER FANNING

will be one of the distinguished faculty of the November 16-20, 1998 session.

As a pastor, do you ever feel emotionally & spiritually drained?

Come to a place where you can lay your burdens down and have your needs fulfilled.

With over 40 years of experience, Dr. Robert H. Schuller, founder of the Fuqua International School of Communications, understands the hearts of pastors.

"Since beginning my ministry at a drive-in theater, I have seen a series of miracles that have tested and strengthened my faith."

This five-day accredited program will not only sharpen your preaching skills, but provide you with a renewed faith and personal rejuvenation!

Enrollment is limited to ensure personalized service and all sessions are underwritten to keep tuition low. Call for your FREE catalog! 714.971.4238
www.crystalcathedral.org

F U Q U A (formerly ISOCC)
 INTERNATIONAL SCHOOL OF CHRISTIAN COMMUNICATIONS

Winning the Gold Medal set the pace for his life... but he never forgot his faith.

Rafer Johnson's record-breaking decathlon performance in the Rome Olympics was just one of many triumphs in a life of success, but he never neglected his responsibilities to his church and his community. The Best That I Can Be tells his whole inspiring story — from his work as student leader of Campus Crusade for Christ to the great moment when he lit the torch in Los Angeles to his ongoing involvement in the Special Olympics.

"Rafer Johnson is one of our country's greatest!... a national treasure and a world citizen."

— Dr. Bill Bright, Founder and President,
Campus Crusade for Christ International

Available wherever books are sold
Visit our Web site at www.doubleday.com

Left and Right," Aug. 10], I oppose a gender egalitarianism that erases real differences between men and women but holds to the full equality of both sexes under God and to women in ministry. There is no cleavage between Barth and myself on this issue (as Stackhouse's remarks could imply), but we do part ways in some other areas of theology.

Donald G. Bloesch
University of Dubuque Theological Seminary
Dubuque, Iowa

Stackhouse misrepresents my delineations of the evangelical theological landscape. I specifically avoided labeling the ideal types of which I wrote (in my essays in Christian Century and CT) with the polemical labels "left" and "right." Furthermore, I do not see how calling for greater inclusivity through dialogue leading to mutual understanding and acceptance can fairly be called "divisive."

Roger E. Olson
Bethel College & Seminary
St. Paul, Minn.

Orthodox "Converts"

In "Universities Question Orthodox Conversion" [Aug. 10], Scott Swanson continually states that evangelicals convert to Orthodoxy. In common parlance, conversion refers to changing religions. When Christians change churches, it is more appropriate to say that they joined another church. One could say that an evangelical converts to Orthodoxy if the Orthodox Church did not consider evangelicals to be true Christians. This emphasis defines salvation in terms of belonging to the right church. Inherently, this violates the ecumenical spirit. Since the Orthodox communion participates in the World Council of Churches, I doubt that it would publicly subscribe to this opinion.

In my dealings with Orthodox "converts," most were attracted by the church's colorful liturgy, rich tradition, and ecclesiology. They did not feel they were any less evangelical simply because they became Orthodox. As such, they were not converting from their old faith; rather, they were augmenting it. If Orthodoxy seeks to be more receptor oriented and less culture bound, it will attract many more searching evangelicals.

William P. Payne
Parrish, Fla.

Two errors should be corrected: On page 18, column 3, paragraph 1, Swanson misquotes me by writing "He joined the Orthodox Church, even though he detected 10 points of difference between Orthodox theology and CIU's doctrinal statement." What I said was that I joined the church believing that there were no significant differences between the CIU ten-point doctrinal statement and my own understanding of Orthodox theology. Since I could still sign the CIU doctrinal statement and since that statement is the standard used to define the theological parameters of the university, there was no doctrinal reason for asking me to resign.

On page 18, column 3, paragraph 2, Swanson writes, "In November, the school agreed to allow Rommen to teach for a two-year trial period." The veracity of this statement depends on how the terms school and university are used. If school refers to the seminary (CBS, a school within the university) the statement could be considered true, since the dean of that school and his provost approved and champion the proposal. If school refers to the university (CIU) the statement is false, since the university's president rejected the two-year proposal and it was never brought to school's board for approval.

Edward Rommen
Columbia, S.C.

War and Drought in the Sudan

Thank you for your News article [Aug. 10] drawing attention to the tragic situation in the southern Sudan where war and drought have put 2.5 million people at risk of starvation. A word of caution, however. To portray this interminable war as Muslim persecution of Christians is to oversimplify a very complex situation. Religion is a factor. But differences in culture, language, race, and politics are also responsible for the conflict between the peoples of northern and southern Sudan. One key issue, for example, is control of the country's centrally located oil fields.

No one's hands are clean in this war. Fratricidal fighting among the Christian and animist "rebels" who claim to represent the Dinka, Nuer, and other peoples of the southern Sudan has also wreaked havoc on the civilian population. We can end the famine if we can stop the fighting. We can stop the fighting if we can deal with all the issues in all their complexity.

Dean R. Hirsch, President
World Vision International Monrovia, Calif.

Brief letters are welcome. They may be edited for space and clarity and must include the writer's name and address if intended for publication. Due to the volume of mail, we cannot respond personally to individual letters. Write to Eutychus, CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188; fax: 630/260-0114. E-mail: ctedit@aol.com

When You Live It, They Learn It.

Your loved ones can learn a lot from watching your life. Which is why you should be reading the Life Application Study Bible. With 10,000 Life Application notes, book introductions, personality profiles, and timelines, this best-selling Bible is uniquely designed to apply the Scriptures to your life. And it's available in the New Living Translation—the accurate translation that's warm, friendly and easy to understand. So look for the Life Application Study Bible at your favorite bookstore. And let others read it in you.

www.lifeapplication.com

TYNDALE

Live It Now

THE LAST DAYS

We've heard from the "experts"...

What did Jesus say?

Trusted theologian R. C. Sproul addresses a subject that's on everyone's mind as the new millennium approaches — the last days. Sproul focuses on what Jesus himself taught about these perilous times and the timing of his return.

The Last Days according to Jesus also answers such questions as:

- Who is the antichrist?
- When is the resurrection?
- When is the millennium?

Sproul's answers may surprise you.

The Last Days
according to Jesus

*When Did Jesus Say
He Would Return?*

0-8010-1171-X $16.99c

Other volumes
by R. C. Sproul:

Grace Unknown

The Heart of Reformed Theology

0-8010-1121-3 $16.99c

Renewing Your Mind

Basic Christian Beliefs

You Need to Know

0-8010-5815-5 $10.99p

Faith Alone

The Evangelical Doctrine of Justification

0-8010-1090-X $16.99c

Hear R. C. Sproul in person at a Ligonier Ministries' 1998 Fall Conference:

September 25-26: Oakland, CA

October 23-24: Houston, TX

October 8-10: Los Angeles, CA

November 13-14: Trenton, NJ

For more information call 1-800-435-4343.

BAKER

Available at your local bookstore. www.bakerbooks.com

R. C. Sproul can be heard nationally five days each week on his radio program,
Renewing Your Mind.

TELEVISION

PAX TV off the Ground

Viewers fed up with televised sex, violence, and crudity have a new alternative. PAX TV launched its slate of "pro-family" programming August 31, immediately becoming the nation's seventh national over the air network.

Network founder Lowell "Bud" Paxson, 62, has been buying up broadcast rights to shows such as Touched by an Angel, Promised Land, and Dr. Quinn, Medicine Woman. Meanwhile, he has purchased 86 television stations. That, along with deals negotiated with

But Paxson, who co-founded the Home Shopping Network and is based in West Palm Beach, Florida, believes he will have another reason for success.

"This is very highly God-driven," says Paxson, who experienced a dramatic Christian conversion in 1986 after years of pursuing deals at the expense of his family (CT, April 27, 1998, p. 20).

As Paxson sees it, "Each of us has three threads, or elements, of life we need to get through the needle's eye: the business or career thread, the spiritual thread, and the family thread."

In PAX TV, Paxson says he has found a formula that combines all three: a profitable business that gives families positive TV alternatives while "planting the seed that God loves us." But don't dare call his network "Christian TV."

"Christian television stinks," he says. "I think Touched by an Angel does more for the kingdom of God than all of the televangelists combined."

Paxson is paying nearly $1 million per episode for reruns of the CBS program, the anchor of the new network's weeknight prime time schedule, which also features Dr. Quinn, Diagnosis Murder, and Life Goes On. Daytime programming includes Here's Lucy, The Love Boat, and Eight Is Enough. Several of the shows formerly had a home on Pat Robertson's Family Channel before it became part of Rupert Murdoch's media empire (CT, July 14, 1997, p. 60).

Twenty percent of PAX TV will be original programming, including a talk show developed in partnership with Woman's Day magazine, and a live entertainment program from Universal Studios.

From midnight to 5 A.M., PAX TV will air Worship, a low-cost combination of onscreen Bible texts and Christian music.

By Steve Rabey.

RACE RELATIONS

Reconcilers Fellowship Folds

Reconcilers Fellowship, following the death of founder Spencer Perkins, has decided to close, as cofounder Chris Rice goes to seminary.

Rice is leaving Jackson, Mississippi, where he has lived for 18 years, to seek a new direction. Rice, 38, originally came to do volunteer work for Voice of Calvary Ministries, a Christian community-improvement ministry. "For the first time in my life, I saw people making very radical decisions because of their faith in God," says Rice. "Blacks and whites were working together to make a difference in the community."

Rice soon developed a friendship with Spencer Perkins, son of Voice of Calvary founder John Perkins. Their families lived down the hall from each other in a Christian community they called Antioch. Six black and white families lived under one roof, shared incomes, and ate together each night.

In addition, Rice and Perkins became business partners and wrote More than Equals: Racial Healing for the Sake of the Gospel (InterVarsity Press, 1993), later taking their message of reconciliation across the country. The twosome also founded Reconcilers Fellowship, which published Reconcilers magazine.

In January, Perkins died of a heart attack at age 43 (CT, March 2, 1998, p. 73). "Spencer and I were more than friends," says Rice. "We had a real relationship that dealt with race, but transcended race. We were truly reconciled."

Reconcilers will soon publish its final edition. Also, the Antioch Community will disband and sell its six acres and two homes as families go their separate ways.

By Charlotte Graham.

cable companies, means PAX TV (the name has been changed from the original PAX Net to avoid confusion with the Internet) is available to nearly three-fourths of American TV viewers.

"Frankly, when I look at the deluge of trashy programming that's flooding the market today, I don't believe for a second we can fail," he writes in his new book, Threading the Needle (HarperBusiness).

MONEY

LifeLine Subscribers Get Busy Signal

LifeLine, a Christian-based telephone company that donates 10 percent of its customers' domestic long-distance bills to nonprofit organizations, has changed its check-distribution policy. Some of its members are unhappy with the new arrangement.

Since its inception in 1990, LifeLine had mailed monthly donation checks. But in July, the company announced a plan to send checks semiannually to subscribers earning under $25 a month and quarterly payments to those earning between $25 and $500. Subscribers receiving under $25 a month make up about half the participants, most of whom are drawn by LifeLine's biblical values commitment (CT, Oct. 4, 1994, p. 69).

Nonprofits earning more than $500 a month in Life-

Line donations will continue receiving monthly payments.

Jeff Cato, LifeLine's director of marketing and sales, says the move reduces the heavy administrative costs associated with mailing 35,000 checks each month. "It wasn't very cost-efficient," Cato says. "We didn't think we were good stewards. We've even sent checks for 50 cents."

LifeLine's decision has its critics. Ron Corber heads Town and Country, a Christian performing arts center in Norwalk, Ohio, and has been a LifeLine subscriber since 1995. "They have not kept their word," he complains.

Corber, whose monthly check from LifeLine averages $31, believes a shift to quarterly and semiannual payments will negatively affect smaller ministries. "It's not a lot of money," he says, "but it's still money we're counting on."

Cato acknowledges LifeLine has received complaints but rejects the notion the company has broken its promise. "It's not that the 10 percent isn't going to the ministry," he says. "It's just not as frequent." Headquartered in Oklahoma City, LifeLine provides phone service to 700,000 customers nationwide and has approximately 35,000 subscribing ministries. In early 1999, Cato says, the company plans to go public.

By Greg Clugston.

ENVIRONMENT

U.S. Churches Join Global Warming Debate

Environmental stewardship is an act of compassion toward the poor, say mainline Protestants and evangelicals, who are joining with other faith groups to reduce the effects of global warming.

In an uncommon display of unity, the religious groups are supporting the controversial Kyoto Protocol. Thirty-eight nations met in Japan last December, agreeing to reduce fossil fuel emissions by 7 percent of 1990 levels.

Clergy and lay leaders are gathering in Columbus, Ohio, October 25-26 for the Midwest Interfaith Climate Change conference to prepare a grassroots lobbying effort.

"Our main goal is to protect God's creation and the less powerful through climate change," says Jim Ball, director of the Evangelical Climate Campaign, which formed in January to push for adoption of the treaty. The poor in developing countries are most at risk from global warming, Ball says, because of decreased agricultural output and increased threat of disease. "Our role here is to speak about principles, not percentages," says Paul Gorman, executive director of the National Religious Partnership for the Environment, which includes the National Council of Churches (NCC), the U.S. Catholic Conference, the Coalition on Environmental and Jewish Life, and the Evangelical Environmental Network.

"When evangelical Christians take a position on the environment, it's noticed," says Gorman, referring to evangelicals' influential support of the Endangered Species Act in 1995.

By Christine J. Gardner.

Giving and Getting in 1997

Donations in 1997 rose 7.5% to $143.5 billion. Individual gifts to religious causes were the most common.

Urban Kids Meet Wilderness and Christ

A wilderness camp in the Missouri Ozarks that offers a free week of fun—and evangelism—to inner-city kids who live in gang-infested neighborhoods has just finished its twenty-fifth year with a record number of attendees and converts. This summer at Camp Penuel near Ironton, Missouri, 90 miles southwest of Saint Louis, 2,403 kids ages 7 to 11 attended, with 1,180 of them making decisions to become Christians. The trip and stay in the cabins and dorms cost about $200 per child, but the entire amount is subsidized by donors.

"Our whole mission is to go into gang areas, take kids to the camp, win them to Christ, and get them in church before they join gangs," says the camp's founder and director, Harry H. Douma, 65. Workers from neighborhood churches and parachurch groups, particularly inner-city missions, select the participants. Three-fourths of the children receive follow-up ministry from churches and parachurch ministries once they return home.

The camp encompasses 650 acres. A second facility, Camp Penuel East, covers 100 acres and has been operating for five years at Eldred, Pennsylvania, in the Allegheny Mountains, serving 730 children annually. In the past quarter-century, 33,000 kids have been bused in from Saint Louis, Kansas City, Memphis, Chicago, Buffalo, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Rochester, and Washington, D.C., to the two camps.

The camps cost $500,000 a year to operate, and a $1 million building program is in progress.

By John W. Kennedy.

◆ County supervisors in San Francisco voted unanimously August 10 to expand the city's domestic partners policy, making it the only U.S. municipality to order private businesses to provide the same customer discounts offered to married couples. The passage of the ordinance came on the heels of the U.S. House voting 214 to 212 to prevent the city from obtaining federal housing funds because of an ordinance passed last year that forces businesses with city contracts to extend health benefits to partners of homosexuals.

◆ Roman Catholic Bible scholar Raymond E. Brown, 70, died August 8 after suffering a heart attack. Brown, the first Catholic to hold a tenured position at New York's Union Theological Seminary, wrote nearly 40 books, including The Birth of the Messiah, The Death of the Messiah, and landmark commentaries on the gospel and epistles of John. His 1996 book An Introduction to the New Testament responded to liberal theories emerging from the Jesus Seminar.

◆ Due to an outcry by nearly 100 religious schools, the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) on August 11 voted to accommodate schools that had objected to playing Sunday championship games. In April, the NCAA had decided not to give colleges an option. That sparked protests from Campbell University, a Southern Baptist-related school in North Carolina, and Brigham Young, the Mormon institution in Utah. Dozens of other schools joined in complaints.

◆ Kay Ward, 56, a pastoral theology professor at Moravian Theological Seminary in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, on August 10 became the first woman elected as bishop among the 700,000 members of the worldwide Moravian Church. The Moravian Church of America has ordained women since 1975.

◆ Church music composer and choral director Fred Bock, 59, died of cardiac arrest on July 31. Bock, music director at First Presbyterian Church of Hollywood, California, at age 24 founded the music publishing division of Word, Inc. There are more than 400 compositions and musical arrangements by Bock in print.

CT

PERSECUTION

60,000 Churches Join Prayer Effort

More than 200 million Christians worldwide continue to face persecution for their faith, but the church's support of their plight is growing.

This year's International Day of Prayer (IDOP) for the Persecuted Church on November 15 (www.persecutedchurch.org) will involve prayer vigils and worship services in at least 60,000 U.S. churches, but that number could grow to as many as 100,000.

Internationally, a total of 180,000 churches from 115 countries are expected to participate. Two special worship services are scheduled in Rome and Barcelona, sponsored by the Italian and Spanish national fellowships of the World Evangelical Fellowship. In Brazil, which is home to nearly half of all evangelical churches in Latin American, local IDOP coordinators plan to reach 70,000 evangelical churches with the message of the persecuted.

"I'm amazed at how far the awareness has come," says Steve Haas, president of Prayer for the Persecuted Church, the organization coordinating the day of prayer, who acknowledges that for many Christians, "These persecuted Christians don't show up on our personal radar screens." Haas believes Christians may have a limited understanding of today's typical believer, who is not a "white, Anglo male." Instead, she is "a dark-skinned female living in a restricted access world with difficulty finding biblical material."

As IDOP grows in popularity, Haas is concerned about the potential for disunity among supporting organizations. He has worked to build bridges with both Christian and secular advocacy groups that promote human rights.

North American Christians may feel inadequate to pray for the needs of the persecuted, but Haas encourages individuals to pray for similar needs as they pray for their own families: food, shelter, and encouragement in their faith. He asks why Christians aren't "praying for the Sudanese mother who just lost her child?"

"It's the same Lord who's listening."

CT

Methodist Court Affirms Ban on Same-Sex Rites

Conservative United Methodists are relieved, but not overconfident, after the recent ruling by the church's highest court that a prohibition against ministers performing same-sex unions for homosexuals is binding church law.

"We cannot be too jubilant," says James V. Heidinger II, executive director of Good News, the oldest conservative coalition of United Methodists, based in Wilmore, Kentucky. "We know the fight is not over. But it is a bit of encouragement that we have at least clarified this."

After a special session in August in Dallas, the nine-member United Methodist Judicial Council ruled that a statement saying ministers "shall not" conduct homosexual unions is ecclesiastical law. Methodist delegates approved the statement at the 1996 general conference in Denver.

"Conduct in violation of this prohibition renders a pastor liable to a charge of disobedience to the order and discipline of the United Methodist Church," the decision states.

Heidinger expects more battles, though. The 8.5 million-member church is deeply split over the issue, he says, noting that 240 United Methodist ministers earlier this year signed statements saying they would conduct same-sex unions if asked.

"I'm going to guess someone will try ecclesiastical disobedience and push a test case," he says.

CREECH VERDICT FOLLOW-UP: Controversy over the ban erupted when Jimmy Creech, former pastor of the First United Church of Omaha, Nebraska, was narrowly acquitted in a church trial earlier this year after he defied the church's ban and conducted a same-sex ceremony (CT, April 27, 1998, p. 14).

Conservative groups roundly condemned the jury's verdict (CT, June 15, 1998, p. 15), and several Methodist bishops asked the Judicial Council to review the case.

During the council's hearing, Creech and his supporters made emotional pleas, arguing that the prohibition was merely advisory. It appears in the Social Principles section of the Book of Discipline, the Methodist book of rules. And Creech said the Social Principles historically have been considered advisory.

Creech's attorney, Mike McLellan of Omaha, argued that enforcing the ban would mean church leaders would be forced to invade the privacy of individuals. "Don't allow the church to be drawn into a witch-hunt over this," McLellan said.

Meet the press: Jimmy Creech speaks out after the council's verdict.

Speaking to council members, Bishops Bruce Blake of Oklahoma City and Dan Solomon of Baton Rouge, Louisiana, argued that if the edict were ruled "advisory," it would call into question the entire disciplinary system of the nation's second-largest Protestant group.

"This embraces the very integrity of the denomination," Blake says.

"Integrity means following a code. The strength of the United Methodist Church is that we have a code that binds us together." Blake and Solomon represented the South Central Jurisdiction College of Bishops, which had requested the ruling.

In pondering its ruling, council members gave much weight to the "shall not" language of the same-sex union ban. Also, they cited the democratic nature of the general conference to make laws. They declared the statement is clearly prohibitory "notwithstanding its placement" in the Social Principles.

WARNING TO VIOLATORS: The ruling puts pressure on church liberals, such as Bishop Melvin Talbert of San Francisco. He has not disciplined ministers in the California-Nevada conference who have conducted same-sex unions.

Talbert says he is "deeply saddened" by the ruling, but he will abide by the discipline and action of the Judicial Council. No action will be taken against ministers who have performed same-sex ceremonies in the past, Talbert notes.

Creech is urging ministers to defy the ruling. "The church of John Wesley, founded upon principles of social justice and piety, will now be prosecuting pastors for praying God's blessing upon same-sex couples who make covenants of love and fidelity," Creech says. He is hoping those who disagree with the prohibition will organize to change it at the next general conference in 2000.

SECOND-CLASS STATUS?

Homosexual-rights activists are discouraged by the ruling. "This is a sad day for United Methodism," says Mark Bowman of Chicago, director of a nationwide Reconciling Churches program for 150 congregations that intentionally reach out to homosexuals.

"Lesbian and gay persons continue to be second-class members of United Methodist churches," Bowman says. "They can sit in the pew and give their money, but their loving relationships cannot be recognized."

But United Methodist bishops who backed the ruling say it does not mean homosexuals are not welcome. The ruling simply proclaims the validity of a church statement adopted by the general conference, the church's highest legislative body, they say.

Another advocate for homosexual rights, Kathryn Johnson of Washington, D.C., president of the Methodist Federation for Social Concerns, says the church is regressing.

"At a time in history when gay and lesbian persons are gaining . . . greater acceptance in society, it is tragic that the United Methodist Church would be a place where they cannot experience full acceptance."

Conservatives hope the decision signals a trend in the denomination. "This issue has been debated a long time, and this ruling makes it unquestionably clear what the position of the church is," says Dean Posey, a United Methodist pastor in Bedford, Texas.

By Jim Jones in Dallas.

Robert H. Schuller Institute for Successful Church Leadership

January 25-28, 1999 at the Crystal Cathedral

DR. ROBERT H. SCHULLER
Founder and Senior
Pastor, Crystal
Cathedral,
Garden Grove, CA

ARVELLA SCHULLER
Crystal Cathedral,
Garden Grove, CA

BISHOP T. GARROTT
BENJAMIN, JR.
Light of the World
Christian Church
Indianapolis, IN

BISHOP CHARLES
E. BLAKE
West Angeles Church
of God, in Christ
Los Angeles, CA

REV. KIRBYJON CALDWELL
Windsor Village United Methodist Church
Houston, TX

MR. MILLARD FULLER
Founder, Parish and Habitat for Humanity,
Americus, GA

DR. FRANK
HARRINGTON
Preachree
Presbyterian Church,
Atlanta, GA

REV. BILL HYBELS
Willow Creek
Community Church
South Barrington, IL

DR. TED NISSEN, JR.
Colonial Presbyterian
Church,
Kansas City, MO

DR. LYLE A. SCHALLER
Author, Parish and Church Consultant,
Naperville, IL

DR. WALT KALLESTAD
Community
Church of Joy
Glendale, AZ

KEN MEDEMA
Musician
Extraordinaire
Beverly Hills, CA

WORKSHOP LEADERS

THE IMPORTANCE OF SETTING
GOALS FOR YOUR CHURCH
Father Hank Albietz

CULTIVATING LEADERSHIP IN YOUR CHURCH

Reverend Blair Anderson

CHRISTIANITY AND ISLAM -
THE COMMON GROUND

Dr. William W. Baker

ORGANIZING A PASTORS FINANCES
Dr. Wayne C. Barrett, CFP

LEADERSHIP THROUGH SPIRITUAL GIFTS
Reverend Brian Bauknight

DIRECTING AND GUIDING A SUCCESSFUL
CHURCH STAFF

Dr. Fulton W. Buntain

BUILDING A SUCCESSFUL SMALL
CHURCH MINISTRY

Reverend Doretta Clark

SUCCESSFUL PRINCIPLES I HAVE
LEARNED FROM DR. SCHULLER

Dr. Ray Cotton

BEREAVEMENT MINISTRY
Mr. Larry Davis

BUILDING A CITY CHURCH

Dr. J. Howard Edgington

BECOMING A LEADER OF LEADERS

Dr. Dale Galloway

THE MINISTRY FAMILY: BUILDING
A STRONG TEAM

Mrs. Margi Galloway

THE HEART OF PREACHING
Reverend Dr. Deborah Gill

FUNDRAISING STRATEGIES

Mr. Ben Gill

A PASTOR'S HEART

Reverend L. H. Hardwick

RACIAL RECONCILIATION: BUILDING A RACIALLY DIVERSE MINISTRY

Dr. Mark Horst

Rev. Peter G. Singletary, Jr.

PREACHING TO THE BABY BUSTERS

Reverend Cliff Melvin

REACHING GENERATION X
Reverend Tim Milner

SPIRITUAL INVESTING: SECRETS TO
FINANCIAL SUCCESS

Mr. Gary Moore

BUILDING A CHURCH FROM SCRATCH
Dr. Norman Neaves

REACHING THE UNCHURCHED
Dr. Juan Carlos Ortiz

READY SET GO! USING WHAT YOU HAVE LEARNED BACK HOME

Dr. Randolph Riggs

A CONVERSATION WITH LYLE SCHALLER
Dr. Lyle Schaller

KEEPING BALANCE IN A PASTORS LIFE
Dr. Robert A. Schuller

ROBERT SCHULLER'S SUCCESSFUL
METHOD OF PREACHING

Reverend David Tyler Scoates

IN FROM THE COLD

Reverend Michael Ward

GETTING THOUSANDS OF KIDS
TO SUNDAY SCHOOL

Reverend Bill Wilson

CONTEMPORARY WORSHIP IN TODAY'S CHURCH

Reverend Timothy White

☐ YES, I'LL BE THERE!

Name _____ Title _____

Church/Organization _____ Denomination _____

Street Address _____

City _____ State/Prov. _____ Zip/PC. _____

Daytime Phone: () _____ Fax Number () _____

☐ Check or money order enclosed (payable to RHS Institute, Crystal Cathedral) $ _____

Bill my: ☐ VISA ☐ MasterCard ☐ American Express

Card #: _____ Exp. Date _____

Cardholder's Name: _____

Cardholder's Signature: _____

☐ Single/Before Oct. 31	$35.00
☐ Single/After Oct. 31	$65.00
☐ Group: 4 or more	$135.00 ea.
☐ Seminary Students	$30.00
☐ International	$30.00

Crystal Cathedral Reservation Center
12141 Lewis St., Garden Grove CA 92840

TEL: (714) 544-5679

FAX: (714) 971-4165

E-MAIL: rhsinstitute@crystalcathedral.org

Growing smaller: Bill McCartney addressed thinner, but more racially diverse, crowds in 1998.

More PK Downsizing

McCartney admits staff morale problem.

In a major ministry realignment, Promise Keepers (PK) will trim its full-time staff by 28 percent, from 250 to 180, as of October 31.

Last fall, the men's movement, which is now eight years old, announced plans for a radical transition from fee-based to donation-based operations along with a shift in emphasis from emotionally charged stadium events to working in closer partnership with denominations, local churches, and grassroots networks.

"It's a case of tapering and posturing ourselves so that we can be poised to move quickly and do what we were called to do," PK founder Bill McCartney told CT. "As we see more clearly our vision, we don't think we need as many staff to pull it off."

That vision includes helping spark similar movements abroad, staging a simultaneous gathering at state capitol buildings on January 1, 2000, and continuing to promote racial reconciliation.

McCartney, who earlier served as chief executive officer of the Denver-based ministry, is now overseeing three divisions as president and founder. Randy Phillips has moved from president to the new position of vice president for global ministries, and Tom Fortson from chief operating officer to executive vice president of administration and operations. Raleigh Washington is now vice president of reconciliation.

ROLLER COASTER EMPLOYMENT:

Following PK's climactic Stand in the Gap rally in Washington, D.C., one year ago (CT, Nov. 17, 1997, p. 62), McCartney promised his staff they would stay together through the 1998 conference season. In February, McCartney announced that all 345 workers would be laid off on March 31 unless donations made up for a shortfall caused by eliminating the conference fees (CT, April 6, 1998, p. 18). The layoff came, but most of the workers returned two weeks later as $4 million in contributions gushed into the ministry (CT, May 18, 1998, p. 29). Through attrition the staff decreased to its current total of about 250.

Fortson says that last fall PK employees were told to expect downsizing, though the exact number of jobs had not been determined.

"We have identified core positions that we need for what we call 'Team 2000,'" Fortson says. "We will give employees here at Promise Keepers the opportunity to interview for those positions."

Some PK observers think the organization may have fulfilled its purpose as a catalyst for bringing men back into their families and their churches and should avoid the temptation of self-perpetuation.

Ken Abraham, author of Who Are the Promise Keepers? (Doubleday, 1997), says

he looked for such a temptation in researching his book but could not find it. "I found a hands-off attitude [within PK], saying: 'Hey, whatever the Lord wants us to do here, that's what we want to do.' I still hear that from many who signed on with Promise Keepers: 'This is where I'm going to serve for the next five, ten years.' Now suddenly they're out of work."

McCartney concedes that the changes will not be easy. "Morale is kind of up one day and down the next," he says. "But I think God's going to do this in a way in which people will feel like they've heard from God and are doing what they're supposed to be doing."

RALLY ATTENDANCE DIPS: Attendance is down at stadium events this year despite—or perhaps because of—elimination of fees, an attempt to encourage men to invite their non-Christian friends. Through 14 of the 19 scheduled conferences, half of the events have paid for themselves, but PK says it will meet its $48 million budget through additional income from resource sales, corporate sponsorships, and individual donations. Last year's budget, supporting 452 workers, amounted to $117 million. "Our lifeblood is the month-to-month gifts," says PK spokesperson Steve Chavis.

Abraham thinks that making the events free has not had its desired effect. "There is a perceived value when guys were paying $60 to go to an event; that's not there when you take away that fee," he says. "And for those who say, 'Well, you were excluding certain parts of society,' I was amazed at how many free admissions PK used to provide."

This year, PK has attracted a different slice of the demographic pie. First-time attendees are more ethnically diverse, have lower incomes, and are slightly younger, Chavis says. Through the mid-August conference in Houston, 5,707 men have made decisions to become Christians.

PK will continue holding conferences, but they will be smaller and based on a Billy Graham crusade model that requires an invitation from a local network of churches that do most of the groundwork.

"In the past, convention and visitors bureaus may have been the leaders in soliciting a PK conference and church unity might have been a component of that presentation," Chavis says. "We'd like to flip that around and see churches leading the charge."

Some of those invitations may come from overseas. PK has launched national organizations in Australia, Canada, Germany, New Zealand, South Africa, and the United Kingdom (CT, June 16, 1997, p. 58).

In June, weekend conferences in Europe drew mostly favorable national media attention. In Denmark, 500 men attended what organizers believed to be the largest gathering of Christian men in the country's history. Some 1,800 men met in Bern, Switzerland. Many came from other countries, including the Czech Republic. About 250 men gathered in Dijon, France.

Smaller scale activities, including training, have begun in Austria, Brazil, Costa Rica, Ghana, Kenya, Mexico, Peru, Sweden, and Zimbabwe.

FUTURE EVENTS: The organization has also formed strategic alliances with groups such as Campus Crusade for Christ and Christianity Today, Inc., providing a ready-made network of contacts and support.

But PK still has a penchant for high-profile events such as Stand in the Gap, possibly the largest religious gathering in U.S. history. At stadium events this year, participants are being recruited for a turn-of-the-millennium gathering of families at state capitols across the country. Some 90 percent of conference attendees say they will show up January 1, 2000, and most promise to invite 10 other families.

Racial reconciliation remains high on the agenda. Mary Stewart Van Leeuwen, resident scholar at the Center for Christian Women in Leadership at Eastern College in Saint Davids, Pennsylvania, says, "I give them credit for doing better than just about any other evangelical organization in keeping [reconciliation] front and center and not changing their message when they go to the South—simply saying: 'God wants this, get used to it.'"

But she wishes the message on gender reconciliation would be equally as clear. "They would never dream of trying to pull off racial reconciliation by having only white males speak for them," she says. "But they think they can advance a new model of gender reconciliation without any input from women. I see it as being inconsistent."

Fortson says that no women participate in top-level strategizing, but PK has female input from many sources, including his administrative assistant.

Van Leeuwen thinks Promise Keepers is fulfilling a continuing need. "The kind of questions that helped to bring about organizations like this still haven't been resolved," she says. "Men are still saying, 'What does it mean to be masculine in a postfeminist, postindustrial world?'"

By Art Moore.

Who better than Jesus to share the Gospel?

Find out how God has used the JESUS film to save 46 million worldwide, and is now using it to save America, one neighbor at a time.

There is no tool more powerful in any ministry than the Word of God.

There is no medium more powerful in our world today than film.

The JESUS video joins the power of both. It's the straight Gospel of Luke on film.

Some pictures are worth a thousand words. This one's worth 46 million personal commitments.

Over 46 million individuals worldwide have declared their commitments to Jesus Christ as a direct result of watching the JESUS movie. Right now, we're focused on reaching America's neighborhoods.

There are over 100 million homes in America to reach

Our goal is to get JESUS in every home. That means there are over 100 million reasons for you to say "Yes!" to help the rest of America see the most true-to-the-Word film about Jesus ever made.

Your FREE "JESUS Video Vision Kit" makes it easy for you to convince others to partner with you in continuing the awesome work God has begun with the JESUS Video Project in your local community.

Why is this film so powerful, and so important?

It's pure, it's precise, it's compelling, and it is a very well crafted film.

The JESUS film is the result of thousands of people working together towards one vision: Show the Word. A team of 500 Christian scholars and leaders worked together for five years to insure the film to be archaeologically, historically, and theologically accurate.

Millions of Americans have seen the JESUS video. Hundreds of thousands have professed their decisions for Christ as a result. Find out how you can help reach the rest in your neighborhood.

Witness the pure Gospel of Luke at work in the JESUS video

- Call or write now for your free JESUS Video Vision Kit.
- The JESUS Video Vision Kit includes a 12-minute video explanation of the simple and easy-to-use process that has proven to be incredibly effective in getting, showing and helping bring individuals to Christ with the JESUS video in your local community. It's yours for the asking. Will you ask?
- Make the call to the JESUS Video Project (a ministry of Campus Crusade for Christ). Then watch God use JESUS to make the Call to eternal life.

Pastors, Church Leaders: call now, toll-free, to 1-888-JESUS31 (537-8731) ext. #873

Or write to: the JESUS Video Project, Dept #873
(a ministry of) Campus Crusade for Christ,
24600 Arrowhead Springs Rd., San Bernardino, CA 92414

© 1998 Campus Crusade for Christ. All rights reserved.

Emotional issue: Queenslanders take to the streets to protest One Nation.

Party Calls for Immigration Cuts

Church and religious leaders are divided over the rapid rise of a right-wing political party that is inflaming tensions over racial issues.

Australians go to the polls October 3 in a sharply contested federal election in which the controversial One Nation party may gain enough seats to wield influence in Parliament.

One Nation's founder, Pauline Hanson, an outspoken former fish-and-chip shop owner, advocates abolition of the government's policies favoring multiculturalism. Hanson also wants severe cutbacks in immigration.

One Nation was widely assumed to be just another minority group with extremist views and little influence, until June elections in Queensland. The results shocked Australia: One Nation gained 23 percent of the vote and may now gain 10 to 15 percent nationally.

Bill Feldman, the leader of One Nation in Queensland, openly professes to be a born-again Christian.

Feldman's regional success is due partly to the Christian vote. Anglican minister Alan Colyer says, "None of the other candidates had any Christian conscience or morality about them, so I voted for somebody who I knew was prayerful and biblical." Feldman says his party wants equality for all, regardless of color, but squadrons of police are assigned to protect One Nation's Hanson from antiracism demonstrators.

Asian tourism to Australia has fallen 23 percent since May 1997, and tourism industry leaders blame Hanson's comments that Australia is "in danger of being swamped by Asians."

A One Nation branch president, Brendan Bogle, recently resigned, claiming One Nation has been infiltrated by the Confederate Action Party, which he says advocates racial segregation.

Some Australians fear that One Nation aims to revive the White Australia Policy, which from 1901 to the 1960s prohibited non-Caucasian immigration. But Feldman says the immigration policy is not about race but about economics. Once high unemployment figures drop, Feldman says, "We as a country with so much to offer can open up our borders again and be generous."

In late August, church, welfare, business, and union leaders issued a joint statement saying that One Nation's policies "threaten both our internal cohesion and our international reputation."

By Belinda Pollard in Brisbane.

UZBEKISTAN

Religion Law Jeopardizes Evangelism

Despite provisions for religious freedom in the Uzbekistan constitution, a harsh new law bans all religious activities not certified by the government and threatens the closure of small churches.

Under the new legislation, it is illegal for anyone in Uzbekistan—except government-certified clergy—to talk about religion. Private religious instruction, including Sunday school, home Bible studies, and summer camp, is also formally banned. Any church with fewer than 100 members must close its doors and stop all activities.

The Ministry of Justice required churches and religious organizations to register formally by August 15. Church leaders who failed to comply could be subject to criminal charges, including heavy fines, jail sentences, and eventual confiscation of church property.

Uzbekistan's 15,000 Protestants in a nation of 20 million people are trying their best to meet the state's stringent legal requirements. But they are also preparing to campaign vigorously against the inevitable closure of most, if not all, of their churches.

"The government has told us repeatedly to stop evangelism to the local, indigenous Muslim people," one church leader points out. "Somehow, Muslim extremist leaders have convinced our government that Uzbek converts to Christianity are a problem, and that this must be stopped." (The country is about 65 percent Muslim.) For this reason, most of the small Uzbek convert fellowships meeting quietly in the country have not even attempted to register.

"This law is very discriminatory," one pastor concludes. "I think we'll have a hard time."

By Barbara G. Baker, Compass Direct.

In Brief

◆ The Cambodian government has granted the first license to a Christian radio station in the country, which is 95 percent Buddhist. Far East Broadcasting Company will begin local programs at Christmas.

◆ More than 8,000 people in Burundi converted to Christianity during a five-day crusade in the capital city of Bujumbura, conducted by San Antonio evangelist Sammy Tippit. In all, 95,000 people attended the meetings, which concluded August 2. It marked the first crusade in the city in a decade.

◆ Lars Dunberg has resigned as international president of International Bible Society (IBS). Dunberg had earlier been international president of Living Bibles International, which merged with IBS in 1992.

◆ Sidney DeWaal, president of Jerusalem University College, has been elected chancellor of the International Council for Higher Education, a new Zurich-based organization geared to "pursuing excellence in academic programs and promoting sustainable models of higher education, particularly in countries where educational opportunities are restricted or are in need of enhancement." Seventeen delegates from theological institutions around the world held an inaugural meeting in Switzerland.

CT

Signs of Canaanite Jerusalem Found

Archaeologists are revising their understanding of the earliest days of the city of Jerusalem following two seasons of excavations in an area surrounding the spring of Gihon.

The spring at the foot of the hill crowned by the Temple Mount is one of the few water sources in the Judean Hills. Archaeologist Roni Reich has found evidence, mostly from Canaanite pottery, that as early as 1800 B.C. Canaanite residents dug a tunnel inside the hill to give access to the spring.

The new information adds interesting detail but ultimately fails to clarify the biblical account of David's conquest of Jerusalem approximately 800 years later. "It just means the water systems of ancient Jerusalem are much earlier than people thought and were not first created by the ancient Israelites but simply reused from Canaanite times," says archaeologist William Dever of the University of Arizona.

According to 2 Samuel 5:8, David challenged his soldiers to enter Jebusite Jerusalem through the tsinnor, a word that occurs only once in the Bible. In modern Hebrew, it is translated as a plumbing conduit.

Ancient discoveries: Silwan village is located in the city of David area.

The lack of clear archaeological evidence to the time of David and Saul has led some archaeologists to question biblical accounts.

Earlier in the summer, Tel Aviv University archaeologists directors of a new excavation at Megiddo where they contend the construction traditionally attributed to Solomon was actually done later by King Ahab. Other archaeologists disagree, saying there is a lack of excavation opportunities in politically sensitive areas of Jerusalem.

By Gordon Govier.

EGYPT

New Coptic Church Forcibly Closed

Three weeks after the new Church of Saint Bishoi opened its doors to the Coptic Orthodox faithful in Cairo's poor district of Tora, a large security contingent forcibly closed it.

Since the surprise July 15 closure, the church's doors and windows have been sealed with wax, and a police car remains stationed in front, preventing anyone from entering. The police raid in Cairo's southern district of Tora near Maadi was led by officers from several security forces.

The reason for closing the church, a security forces spokesperson said, was that it had been built without an official permit. Egyptian law requires all congregations to obtain official permits to build new churches or repair existing ones, a process that has often taken as long as 10 years. Built on a 700-square-meter plot donated by local Christians, the church is in a rapidly expanding quarter of the city east of the Helwan-Cairo metro line.

Local Christians said they asked their bishop for a church in the Tora district because the nearest church was five kilometers away; transportation was difficult and expensive.

The local Coptic Orthodox prelate, Bishop Daniel, never applied for a church permit when the construction began four years ago. Since a permit was obtained in 1994 to build a kindergarten on the site, no problems occurred with the security police or the local population. According to Ramzy Zaklama, a prominent Coptic leader in Egypt and member of the Supreme Board of the Wafdi party, Bishop Daniel could never have built the church if he had asked for a permit.

But Nabil Osman, head of the Egyptian State Information Service, claimed that since Hosni Mubarak became president in 1981, "not one single request for building a church has been refused."

Yet for Zaklama, the whole government procedure takes "far too much time," making it possible for extremist Muslim groups to cause difficulties and even block building procedures.

Compass Direct News Service.

C. S. LEWIS

Birthday Bash Draws Crowd

The one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of C. S. Lewis drew more than 800 participants to Oxbridge '98, the largest gathering ever of the C. S. Lewis Summer Institute in England.

With the theme "Loose in the Fire," academics and professionals representing evangelical, Catholic, and Orthodox traditions gathered July 19 to August 1 on the campuses of Oxford and Cambridge Universities to discuss the impact of Lewis on such diverse topics as health care, the performing arts, public policy, and the ethics of human cloning. Presenters included Tony Campolo, Charles Colson, Madeleine L'Engle, George Marsden, Dallas Willard, and Philip Yancey. While at Oxford, the conference convened at the Sheldonian, the Christopher Wren-designed lecture hall where Lewis, then an atheist undergraduate, gave his first public address.

"It was in every sense an historic convocation," says C. S. Lewis Foundation president Stan Mattson.

Lewis's popularity persists. In honor of his birth, the Oxford Royal mail issued a postage stamp (above) based on Lewis's Chronicles of Narnia stories. Thirty-five years after his death, Lewis's books continue to sell more than 1.5 million copies each year.

By Christine J. Gardner.

Enduring legacy: Lamb's Players of San Diego perform a Lewis work at Oxbridge '98.

Share your faith with confidence!

Witness with CROSSINGS

THE BOOK CLUB FOR TODAY'S CHRISTIAN FAMILY

www.Crossings.com

©PhotoDisc

WEIGHT WATCHERS® is a registered trademark of Weight Watchers International, Inc.

1958 $34.99 $26.95

0893 $19.99 $13.95

2626 $24.99 $16.95

2386 $18.99 $13.95

2972 Spec. Ed. $15.95

4077 $19.99 $13.95

0083 $27.96 $16.95

0927 $12.99 $9.95

0638 $19.99 $14.95

0349 Spec. Ed. $11.95

0588 $19.95 $13.95

5330 $12.99 $9.95

818 Spec. Ed. $10.95

4622 Spec. Ed. $13.95

6999 $19.99 $14.95

0380 $21.95 $13.20

2196 $19.99 $12.95

5389 $19.95 $13.95

6353 $29.99 $21.95

6965 $12.99 $9.95

6510 $18.99 $12.95

0570 $20.00 $11.95

6106 $21.00 $14.95

1156 $19.99 $14.95

1511 $24.00 $14.95

5470 Spec. Ed. $11.95

Choose Books

for 99¢

And get a FREE Navy Tote or an Extra Book with membership!

0307 $14.99 $10.25

4408 $27.99 $17.95

2865 $29.99 $22.95

7054 $15.99 $12.95

3301 $19.99 $13.95

2592 $19.99 $12.95

5181 $14.99 $9.95

3277 $21.99 $15.95

1974 $25.00 $12.50

5405 Spec. Ed. $11.95

1719 $12.99 $9.95

1263 $14.99 $10.95

6171 $28.50 $17.95

1602 Spec. Ed. $12.95

3822 $8.99 $6.98

6643 Spec. Ed. $10.95

6652 $27.99 $19.95

2618 $17.99 $12.95

1123 $16.99 $12.75

4861 Spec. Ed. $13.95

2139 $25.00 $18.75

3525 $19.99 $13.50

7070 $16.95 $10.95

7039 $14.95 $10.95

5827 $23.99 $14.40

5355 $19.99 $12.95

6528 Spec. Ed. $10.95

7047 $14.95 $10.95

7013 $20.00 $10.95

6445 $18.99 $12.95

3483 Spec. Ed. $11.95

3996 Spec. Ed. $10.95

3954 $19.99 $13.95

6254 Spec. Ed. $13.95

6239 $25.95 $15.50

3848 $18.99 $14.25

Join CROSSINGS today! • Take 4 books for 99¢, plus shipping and handling, billed later, upon membership approval. Buy just 4 more books within 2 years, after which you may resign. • SAVE money, SAVE time! Order your first book now for just $4.99 (plus shipping and handling). And buy only 3 books in the next 2 years. • We give you our word—If you're not happy, cancel membership. Return the intro books within 10 days at our expense. You'll owe nothing. • The FREE GIFT is yours to keep! • We're committed to value—Members' editions, sometimes altered to fit special presses, SAVE you up to 40% off publishers' edition prices. • FREE Club magazines up to 18 times a year. Current members may order books on our Web site: www.Crossings.com. • Choose only the books you want. The Main Selections come automatically if we don't hear from you. So if you want another book, or none at all, send back the Member Reply Form by the specified date. You always have 10 days to reply. But, if the magazine came late and you get unwanted books, return them at our expense. A shipping and handling charge (and sales tax, where applicable) is added to each order. If the card is missing, write: CROSSINGS, Member Service Center, 6550 East 30th Street, P.O. Box 6375, Indianapolis, IN 46206-6375. Prices were current when we went to press. Publishers' edition prices—regular type. Members' edition prices—bold type.

Religious Persecution Bill Encounters Stiff Resistance

The International Religious Freedom Act, introduced by Sen. Don Nickles (R-Okla.), lingered near extinction as lawmakers returned last month after their summer recess.

Supporters claim that new political strategies would revive the bill to passage, while opponents declare it moribund. "The reports avidly peddled by the administration that the bill is dead are overstated," says Hudson Institute's Michael Horowitz, a key figure in the campaign against religious persecution.

The Nickles bill was introduced in March (CT, May 18, 1998, p. 20) after the U.S. House had already considered passage of the Freedom from Religious Persecution Act, commonly known as the Wolf-Specter bill after its cosponsors Rep. Frank Wolf (R.-Va.) and Sen. Arlen Specter (R.-Penn.). There had been talk of a possible merger of the two pieces of legislation (CT, Sept. 7, 1998, p. 27).

According to Senate staffers working for the Senate bill, Nickles believed that the Wolf-Specter bill's provisions for automatic sanctions against the worst persecuting countries would lead to fruitless confrontations, negative fallout on indigenous Christians and missionaries, and an America isolated from its allies. He also figured the Senate would never pass the Wolf-Specter bill.

Supporters of Wolf-Specter asserted that Nickles's alternative allowed the White House the option of doing very little in the face of religious persecution. Under the Nickles bill, the President could do as little as sending a private protest to the persecuting government.

Mistrust of the White House fueled intense resistance to watering down the sanction provisions against religious persecutors.

POORLY WRITTEN? The debate over the religious persecution bills reflects ongoing tensions between economic conservatives who favor greater free trade and social conservatives who press for better protection for global religious freedoms. Some conservative Christian leaders lament that elected officials are still caught up in a Cold War orientation, preoccupied with the military, atomic weapons, and terrorism, not religious freedom. Consequently, bills are not well crafted, nor persuasively presented. Drafters of the Nickles bill, who criticize the Wolf-Specter bill as poorly written, admit that there has not been a vigorous debate on the floor of Congress on religious persecution.

Some evangelical leaders have also felt abandoned by otherwise supportive business leaders who put profits ahead of tional confrontation, Grams's chief of staff expressed her concerns over what the senator perceived as Bauer's and Colson's hardball tactics. And the lines dividing the parties have since hardened.

TRUCE DECLARED: Supporters of the Wolf-Specter bill and supporters of the Nickles bill decided that they should join forces in the uncertain atmosphere. Horowitz, who works closely with Wolf, declared a truce. "It is a shame that matters hadn't been resolved earlier, but they are on the road to resolution. The strategic objective has always been to make sure that religious persecution can't be swept aside." In a July meeting with Colson, GOP Senate leader Trent Lott committed to bring the issue to a vote. But supporters also started to lay the groundwork for alternative approaches, like tacking a religious persecution bill onto a House appropriations bill.

The White House has strongly opposed any type of bill against religious persecution. At first, presidential opposition centered on the automatic sanctions of the Wolf-Specter bill. Later, according to a source close to the congressional Republican leadership, the administration shifted its most intense opposition to the Nickles bill requirement that there be an annual report on countries that discriminate against or persecute religious people. In discussions with Congress, administration officials have decried "naming names" on "a bad boy list."

Through early September, supporters of the two bills still disagreed on how to counter the administration. Steve Moffitt, assistant to Nickles, worries that "a lot of groups didn't throw their weight to the bill until August." Wolf-Specter supporters such as Focus on the Family complained that they had been kept in the dark by Nickles.

According to Senate staffers, supporters of the Nickles bill want to force the fight public so that opponents would be seen also as opponents of helping the persecuted. Otherwise, the bill may never be voted on by the full Senate before Congress's early October adjournment but be dragged out of view and killed. The bottom line for evangelicals, says Richard Cizik of the National Association of Evangelicals, is "We want something passed, not just a vote."

By Tony Carnes.

Silent protest: Pakistani Christian children in May protest the Muslim-majority country's severe blasphemy law, which has been used against church leaders.

morality. USA Engage, a business coalition of big exporters, has footed the expenses for lobbying against the religious persecution acts, including financing trips of friendly overseas religious leaders. The National Foreign Trade Council paid for a National Council of Churches delegation of Christian leaders from Pakistan, Lebanon, and Indonesia to come testify against the Wolf-Specter bill.

In July, free-trade Republican Senators Rod Grams of Minnesota and Chuck Hagel of Nebraska blocked a vote on the Nickles bill. Supporters of the Nickles bill were angered by Grams's opposition opinion piece in a Saint Paul newspaper and by what they perceived as stall tactics.

Although Grams has been supportive of evangelical concerns in other matters, Charles Colson of Prison Fellowship openly criticized him on a Focus on the Family broadcast, and Gary Bauer of the Family Research Council sent out critical mailings.

This summer, supporters of the religious persecution act met with Grams and his staff to try to patch matters up. In an emo-

Religious Liberty Bill Stalls

Although the Religious Liberty Protection Act (RLPA) was created to withstand a constitutional challenge such as the one that knocked down the Religious Freedom Restoration Act (RFRA) last year, a widening rift between social conservatives may ensure the bill never makes it onto the law books.

At issue is RLPA's use of the government's commerce and spending powers to protect religious freedom (CT, Aug. 10, 1998, p. 15).

"[It is] both constitutionally dangerous and religiously offensive to me to treat the worship of God as a commercial transaction," says Mike Farris, president of the Home School Legal Defense Association (HSLDA), a strong critic of RLPA. Farris calls religious conservatives' support of the bill "hypocrisy," because he believes the bill promotes an expanded government. "To me, it's an end-justifies-the-means philosophy at its worst," he says.

Under pressure from HSLDA and its supporters, Rep. Charles Canady (R-Fla.), House leader of the stalled bill, withdrew the inclusion of interstate commerce provisions in August in an attempt to broaden congressional support. He says he was disappointed to see the provision removed, because it expanded the bill's scope. The Senate version maintains the original wording.

The House version still relies on congressional spending powers, which are used in other legislation to protect religious freedom. The Equal Access Act of 1984 protects student religious groups because public schools receive federal funds.

Steve McFarland, director of the Center for Law and Religious Freedom, says the bill has been "crippled" by Farris's efforts: "The far Right has done a big favor for the far Left. It's a real irony." The homosexual lobby, which is concerned about religious exemptions to antidiscrimination laws, will be the largest beneficiary, McFarland says.

More than 80 organizations continue to support RLPA, including the American Civil Liberties Union, National Association of Evangelicals, the Christian Legal Society, Focus on the Family, and the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

By Christine J. Gardner.

THE FOURTH

ANNUAL

KUYPER

LECTURE

The Signs of the Times: Women and the Future of the Family in a Postmodern World

ELIZABETH FOX-GENOVESE Scholar and Historian, Emory University

RESPONSES BY:

STANLEY J. GRENZ, Regent College
MARGARET DREW KEYES, L'Abri Fellowship

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 29, 7:30PM
EASTERN COLLEGE, St. Davids, PA
Open to the public without charge. For more information, call (410) 571-6300.

Co-sponsored by The Center for Public Justice and Eastern College.

Knowing how much God loves you:

Feeling how much God loves you:

LOVE
BEYOND
REASON

Jesus loves you—this you know. But what you might not feel is the full force of God's head-over-heels love for you. And frankly, it will floor you. In Love Beyond Reason, author John Ortberg's powerful, moving illustrations open the floodgates to the vastness of the Father's incredible love. Isn't it time God's awesome love moved from your head into your heart, transforming not only you, but those around you? Fill your cup to overflowing by calling 1-800-727-3480 or just visit your local Christian bookstore today.

Zondervan Publishing House

www.zondervan.com

Christian Science Aims to Shine Tarnished Image

After two decades of withering battles over money, medicine, and media, the First Church of Christ, Scientist, the "mother church" of the Christian Science movement, is angling for new ways to promote its theology and controversial healing practices.

During the past 20 years, the group has been embroiled in several high-profile cases in which members were prosecuted for withholding medical treatment from children who later died (CT, Oct. 4, 1993, p. 53). These cases were generally reversed on appeal, and the group has waged a successful fight to strengthen legislative protections for Christian Science parents. A foray into mass media—buying a television station in Boston, financing a cable TV news network, and launching a mass-market monthly magazine—resulted in hundreds of millions of dollars in losses and a need for the church to borrow from its pension-fund reserves (CT, April 26, 1993, p. 54). In July, the group announced those debts had been repaid. The church also reported $302 million in cash on hand, up $51 million from the year before.

Christian Science is gaining fresh exposure thanks to the aggressive marketing of Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures, the 132-year-old seminal work by the movement's founder, Mary Baker Eddy. The textbook has sold more than 100,000 copies annually over the past five years, with a 10 percent gain in sales reported for 1997. According to Eddy's teaching, God is "all-in-all." Science and Health states: "The only reality of sin, sickness, or death is the awful fact that unrealities seem real to human, erring belief, until God strips off their disguise. They are not true because they are not of God."

INTEREST IN HEALING: In August, 1,800 college students gathered in Boston for a conference on spiritual healing. Tony Lobl, a spokesperson for the church, says the conference attracted many nonmembers who were introduced to the distinct beliefs of Christian Science and its "scientific system of divine healing" in which disease is considered merely a "mental concept."

In addition, Virginia Harris, a Christian Science practitioner who chairs the group's board of directors, says interest from clergy and medical doctors in Eddy's book has accelerated as medical researchers have explored the role of prayer and religious devotion in connection with recovery from illness (CT, Jan. 6, 1997, p. 20).

"Nary a day goes by that I don't hear from a minister or a doctor that says they're using this book," she told CT.

The church's "reading rooms" and lec-

(www.christianscience.org), the Christian Science Endtime Center (www.endtime.org) in Denver, and the Aequus Institute in Claremont, California, have published tracts decrying the group's methods and beliefs.

Some dissidents assert that the church has ignored Eddy's church manual directing the board of directors to disband following her death (in 1910) and of minimizing Eddy's "prophetic" role in bringing forth Christian Science. They also blast the group for closing churches and allowing a significant decline in the number of Christian Science practitioners.

Paul Carden, a third-generation descendant of Christian Scientists and now executive director of the Centers for Apologetics Research (CAR) in San Juan Capistrano, California, thinks dissidents may inhibit some of the "Mother Church's" growth: "Because of the Internet, [the dissidents] pose a significant if not overwhelming threat. We know how hard the [Boston] church has fought to keep its followers from anything unauthorized, but the Internet age has rendered them all but powerless to prevent seekers from encountering every variety of Christian Science."

A potential renaissance of the movement gives Carden pause. "Time will tell how extensively and to what degree it will succeed in revitalizing the movement," Carden says. "It will to whatever degree multiply the confusion in our culture regarding who Jesus is and what he came to do for us."

Carden says that along with the upswing in the church's promotion of its beliefs, it is also taking a less rigid viewpoint on doctrine. A recent church statement indicated that Christian Science members are not to be ostracized for seeking medical attention.

But Carden adds, "Because the Mother Church presents such a closed system and the American religious consumer is so accustomed to choice, this may be one of the biggest factors working against the revitalization of the church proper."

By Mark A. Kellner.

tures have been traditional ways of reaching out to individuals. But the Christian Science church continues to use mass media as a way to leverage its public visibility from its 90-year-old newspaper, the Christian Science Monitor, to its two-year-old World Wide Web site (www.tfccs.org), which offers a complete church directory.

The church's weekly radio and cable television programs focus on exposing listeners to Eddy's writings paired with Scripture. An estimated 1 million people tune in weekly. And in a fresh bid for new members, the church sponsors discussions about Science and Health in bookstores across the country, including Barnes & Noble and Borders.

DISSIDENT VOICES: In turn, the movement's new visibility has stimulated critics of Christian Science from within the movement. Healing Unlimited in Seattle

LEE UNIVERSITY

CLEVELAND, TENNESSEE

announces the dedication of the

HELEN DEVOS

COLLEGE OF EDUCATION

September 11, 1998

Training
Christian Teachers for the 21st Century

Bomb aftermath: One of the thousands of people injured in the Kenya explosion is removed.

After Terrorist Bombings, Christians Aid Victims

Muslim-Christian tensions remain high.

Enoch Oroo's life hung by a thread as he arrived at the emergency ward in Kenyatta National Hospital on August 7, shortly after terrorists bombed the U.S. embassy in Nairobi, Kenya.

Oroo, 22, had survived but was gravely injured. The bombing claimed 257 lives, among them a dozen American nationals working at the embassy. More than 5,000, mostly civilians, were wounded. A simultaneous terrorist bomb in Dar Es Salaam, Tanzania, killed 10.

"As the team of doctors and nurses worked trying to save my life," he recalls from his hospital bed, "I heard the doctor tell the nurse, 'This one is not going to survive.' The nurse later repeated that to another, [but] I responded, 'Just do your best. God is great.'"

On the day of the bombing, Oroo was riding on a bus near the U.S. embassy and witnessed an unforgettable scene of screams, blood, and death.

"Some people were calling their mothers or fathers, but I cried to God," says Oroo. The passenger seated next to him on the bus died instantly. The bus caught fire, and several riders perished in the flames. Oroo sustained multiple injuries.

Oroo admits that for the past three years he had turned away from his childhood Christian faith, even though he says he never forsook God completely. "My life was not stronger than those who died. It was a miracle I survived. I immediately knew God had spared me."

Oroo's faith in God has been revitalized and, much to his surprise, as he recovers he finds himself sharing the gospel with fellow hospital patients and staff.

SURVIVAL STORIES: Kenyatta's Ward 7A is one of dozens of hospital wards throughout Kenya with people recovering from the blast. Many show a remarkable determination to move on with their lives without bitterness.

During an interview with CT from her Kenyatta Hospital bed, Grace Kiuna, a secretary whose collapsed office building was next to the embassy, remembers hearing gunshots and the sound of a grenade.

"At first, I was thinking it was all bullets, then I ducked under the table not knowing I had been badly injured," she says. "An office colleague who was not injured helped me to run down staircases for ten floors as I constantly prayed: Please, God, don't take me away, you have given me children and I have a lot to do."

Kiuna, who had been an orphan herself, cares for foster children belonging to her deceased sister. The bomb blast severely scarred Kiuna's face and upper body.

Many survivors, including Oroo and Ki-

una, suffered eye and facial injuries from the bombing. The main blast that brought down one building next to the embassy had been preceded by gunfire, which drew people to windows. Doctors say 40 of the bombing victims are blind in both eyes and another 50 have lost all vision in one eye.

Douglas Sigalo no longer has the use of one eye and has lost significant vision in the other. "The doctor tells me the retina is badly damaged," says Sigalo, who remains optimistic. "The doctors are doing their best." The 27-year-old father may never see again, but that has not altered his view that God spared his life for a purpose. "I feel ready to serve God in a big way when I get out of here," says Sigalo, a marketing manager with Saint Paul's Publishers. He also writes for African magazines and sings in his church choir. "Even if I don't see again, I desire to learn to play the guitar and the kayamba and sing for the Lord. Of course, I will continue to write somehow. My wife can scribble and edit for me."

LONG-TERM IMPACT: Christians make up 80 percent of the 28.3 million people of Kenya, making it one of the most thoroughly Christian nations in Africa. There are more than 40,000 congregations, and evangelicals represent at least one-third of the populace.

In the aftermath of the bombing, Christian ministries quickly moved alongside government and relief agencies in helping victims and their families cope. The Salvation Army, which runs four schools for the blind in Kenya and has programs for the physically handicapped, is assessing the vision needs of the injured.

In addition to injuries, many patients and thousands of other Kenyans, especially those who witnessed the event, are still emotionally traumatized. For the first weeks after the bombing, church leaders found themselves working long hours counseling families, burying the dead, and visiting victims in recovery.

Kenyan leaders say that the attack dealt a stunning blow to the nation's sense of well-being and has been described in the media as "the day the Devil visited Kenya." Hundreds are suffering from severe to moderate traumatic stress disorders, according to Kenyatta Hospital nurse counselor Rhoda Mburu. "Many bomb victims who flocked to the hospital's free trauma counseling services center are still experiencing nightmares."

Christian therapist professor David Ndeti, head of the psychiatric department at Kenyatta, believes the long-term traumatic consequences could rival those of the 1994 Rwandan genocide (CT, Feb. 6, 1995, p. 52).

Ndeti says, "Of those survivors or eye-witnesses who actually brushed shoulders with death or were physically present in that potentially deadly situation of the bomb blast, whether they received injuries or not, 50 to 80 percent will likely develop posttraumatic stress disorders."

Mburu says some victims wake up at night screaming "Fire!" Some cannot turn off lights at night to sleep. Others are too fearful to re-enter Nairobi. Some face intense feelings of "survivor guilt," which may occur when a person witnesses someone else killed.

At the All Saints Cathedral, Oasis Counseling Services is training volunteer counselors and conducting daily counseling sessions for bomb victims.

Apart from comforting the bereaved and preaching hope to the survivors, church leaders have initiated fundraising efforts to help with burial expenses.

Pastor Boniface Adoyo says his Nairobi Pentecostal Church collected money to be pooled in the National Bomb Victims Fund. Adoyo's church has an ongoing visitation ministry. The benevolence minister, Martin Bandu, reports that the hearts of the victims are softer toward the gospel. Several became Christians after the blast.

RELIGIOUS TENSIONS: Bishop Arthur Kitonga of the Redeemed Gospel Church in Nairobi says follow-up services from the Christian community will be vital because of the many tensions within Kenyan society.

"People are so frightened that scores working in the city and new migrants have begun to move away to their rural homes," Kitonga says. "They fear another bomb might come."

Apart from the political and economic ills that are shaking the country (CT, Oct. 6, 1997, p. 82), Kitonga says religious tensions are "boiling up and posing great danger to the church."

In February, 50 were killed in the coastal city of Mombasa during riots connected in part to Muslim-Christian tensions. And one week before the bombing, Muslim youth burned churches in Kenya's northeast province.

"We are not waiting for comfortable times in Kenya," Kitonga says. "Whatever will plague our country further will likely be religious."

Abdul Malik, director of Sheep Ministries, an evangelistic outreach, notes that Muslims have been entering Kenyan government and politics and pushing for the adoption of Islamic law.

"Even though the bomb incident may not directly be linked to current religious tensions, it is not coincidental that the blast occurred in the wake of mounting religious hostility by Muslims," says pastor Adoyo. "This hostility is a phenomenon that must not be ignored."

Kenyan President Daniel Arap Moi has issued a public call for religious tolerance between Muslims and Christians.

The head of the Supreme Muslim Council in Kenya has pointed out that Islam does not condone acts of terrorism and murder. Following Moi's appeal, on August 25, the leaders of the Catholic church and Muslims in Kenya sat together to chart a path for peaceful dialogue. Bishop Kitonga, however, cautions Christians not to count on short-term solutions. Kitonga says believers should be grounded in the Word of God. "Whatever comes, be ready and 'Let not your hearts be troubled,'" he told his congregation after the explosion.

By Connie Kisuke in Nairobi.

Focus on the Family® presents

The Kids' Choice.

Over 2.8 Million Sold!

The new kids on the block, Nick and his "animated" sidekick McGee, discover through this wild adventure, that telling lies is not a good way to make friends.

Nick's appearance on a wacky TV game show goes to his head, but he and McGee soon learn a major lesson in humility.

Nick and McGee's dramatic discovery helps them make an unlikely friend while finding the real meaning of Christmas.

Your kids will love each 30-minute adventure filled with live-action and animation. Bring home biblical values with this best-selling family video series.

Now Only $9.99

McGee and Me!, McGee character, and McGee and Me! logo are registered trademarks of Tyndale House Publishers, Inc.

Coffee That Cares

A Costa Rican church underwrites an urban outreach effort with premium coffee sales.

Sandy-haired Cuco, 2, lives on the streets of Alejuelita, a lurid, decaying area west of Costa Rica's capital, San José, where crack addicts and street gangs roam and rob. Cuco's mother peddles drugs and sex in the neighborhood, while Cuco and his five siblings are left on their own to survive.

Until six months ago, Cuco's one daily meal came from a friendly neighbor. Then a 4-year-old friend brought him to Hogar Zoe (House of Life), a Christian drug rehabilitation center that, as best it can on scarce resources, also ministers to needy children.

REACHING KIDS: Two years ago, Chris Dearnley, pastor of the Vineyard Church of Escazú, near San José, asked Zoe's director, Carlos Córdoba, how Dearnley's church could support the program. Córdoba responded simply, "Help us reach the children."

Hogar Zoe serves meals to neighborhood youth every other day, so the Vineyard of Escazú took charge of the kitchen every other Saturday and added an evangelism outreach. But soon Dearnley came to understand what Córdoba already recognized: It would take more than beans and rice to keep these children from perishing on the streets of San José. Dearnley wrestled with the problem of how to assure a steady stream of funds for Zoe so it could expand programs to have greater impact on young lives.

Dearnley, whose background includes a Harvard MBA, started thinking about coffee. He recalls visiting university friends in California in July 1997: "We were sitting around discussing our financial need and situation, and I said, 'Hey, I brought you some coffee from Costa Rica.'" At that moment, he envisioned a coffee export operation, with the profits financing social outreach. "We looked at each other and said, 'Hey, why don't we do this?'"

Now Pura Vida Coffee Company (www.puravidacoffee.com; 1-888-577-4JOY) supports Pura Vida Ministries, established to finance not only Hogar Zoe, but other ministries in Central America as well. The name comes from a Costa Rican colloquialism, figuratively meaning "great, terrific," but literally meaning "pure life."

"We believe this coffee is about pure life: Offering the life of Christ to people who are struggling," Dearnley says.

Thumbs up: Cuco (left), a needy child in San José, interacts with Dearnley.

John Sage, Dearnley's Harvard housemate who attended that California meeting, is also a founding member of Pura Vida Coffee Company. Sage was creator of Starbucks' Red Ribbon Sampler coffee/music gift package that generates funds for AIDS research. Sage, whose brother died of the disease five years ago, says the Starbucks project should raise at least $40,000 this fall for AIDS organizations around the country.

Pura Vida Coffee began operations in January with no advertising budget. Instead, it is relying on word of mouth to spread news of the product. Dearnley says Pura Vida's coffee supplier is supportive of its mission and has allowed the company to start with low volume and use its Miami call center. Dearnley's vision is that Christians and churches would buy Pura Vida for their in-house use or as gifts.

While interest and sales have been strong, so far the money generated by sales has been reinvested in more coffee, Dearnley says. But Sage believes that for Pura Vida Coffee, which features the world-renowned premium variety Tarrazú, profits could approach $40,000 its first year.

Todd Hunter, national director of the Anaheim, California-based Association of Vineyard Churches—USA, lauds Dearnley's approach to ministry as "spiritual entrepreneurship." "I would encourage it if it became a trend," Hunter says.

DRUG REHAB: On Saturday morning at Hogar Zoe, Vineyard of Escazú members scatter through the neighborhood to gather children for the day's program. Meanwhile, two young men enrolled in Zoe's 15-month drug rehabilitation bustle around a dark kitchen, chopping vegetables and boiling cauldrons of water for rice in preparation for the interns' lunch. Allan, 24, clad in a baggy black T-shirt and jeans, leans against a refrigerator for a few minutes to talk about himself.

Allan joined a street gang, and at 11 committed his first robbery. His mother, a drug dealer, would pay him four grams of cocaine for babysitting his two brothers. Crack was Allan's drug of choice. But when he ran out, he often drank rubbing alcohol, which could have killed him.

Eleven months ago, following a drug deal that turned violent, an old friend from the streets who had become a Christian and graduated from Hogar Zoe brought Allan to the center. Director Córdoba, a one-time addict who founded Zoe, interviews candidates and rejects the applications of those he believes are simply seeking food and shelter rather than a drug-free life. Of the 60 percent accepted, almost all graduate. The program includes intense prayer and Bible study, group worship, counseling, and learning a trade, such as carpentry, welding, or greenhouse gardening. Some 40 interns receive housing, medical attention, and three meals a day; 60 others live off-campus but also participate. Its success has prompted Costa Rican courts to send convicted addicts to Hogar Zoe as an alternative to prison.

"Every day is a fight, but I feel at peace," Allan says. "God comes first. Nothing else interests me. I want to stay here and help others."

Allan is a portrait of what the toddler Cuco could become without intervention.

Six months ago, Cuco was violent and aggressive toward others, often hitting and kicking, wholly unafraid of reprisals. "He was the angriest child I've ever seen," says Hans Wust, Vineyard's worship leader, who helps with the children's program. "[Cuco's] eyes are not a 2-year-old's eyes."

Near the food-serving area, the little boy glares at Dearnley, who begins to play a hand game with him. But within minutes, Cuco's countenance softens, then he touches Dearnley's hand and smiles. Without this program, Wust says, "I can't imagine what he could turn into."

HOSTILE ENVIRONMENT: Sometimes as many as 200 children ages 3 to 13 gather on Saturdays for lunch and fun-but-meaningful Bible-focused activities. Almost all of these children suffer from parental neglect or abuse or exposure to the hostile streets of Alejuelita. "Through our Saturday program, Cuco has learned about the love of Jesus and that some adults care enough to spend time with him," Dearnley says.

Until coffee sales begin perking up, a weedy lot adjacent to the back fence is a poignant reminder that many others could be reached. Dearnley and Córdoba imagine building a community center and gymnasium to expand the neighborhood ministry and serve more meals, as well as to extend an existing clothing-distribution program and launch "medical Saturdays" for the children. They want to establish an intern mentorship network and equip them with prime job skills; to that end Dearnley and Córdoba hope for a computer bank and an English teacher.

Open arms: A Costa Rican child participates in an urban outreach recreational program.

Hogar Zoe receives some money from Costa Rica's Evangelical Alliance and individual churches, such as the Vineyard of Escazú. Until Pura Vida turns more of a profit, Hogar Zoe is mostly self-supporting through interns' carpentry, painting, and plumbing, Córdoba says.

"I believe they can be rescued," Córdoba says of the youngest children. "But if we had more resources, we'd be able to reach more of them."

Dearnley says that one Saturday before Easter, the children sealed in his heart the purpose of Pura Vida. "I asked the kids, 'Who is the central figure of Easter?'"

"Judas!" they shouted in unison, much to Dearnley's astonishment. But Dearnley says, "He's the one who got the money, deceived, and stole. Their lives are about Judas, and we want to make their lives about Jesus."

By Deann Alford in San José, Costa Rica.

RELEASE THE POWER OF THE HOLY SPIRIT IN YOUR LIFE

Of the three persons of the Trinity, many Christians find the Holy Spirit the most difficult to understand. Leaving abstract concepts behind, this powerful book shapes a fresh, clear image of the Holy Spirit in concrete terms. Finally... the book on the Holy Spirit you've been waiting for! Biblical.

Balanced. And so very, very practical. Beginning with John 14, God in You shows how the power and presence of the Holy Spirit change everything about our world by putting God not only with us, but in us.

Available at Christian bookstores everywhere

M U L T N O M A H®

Keeping Your Trust...One Book at a Time™

Champions for Christ Pulled into NFL Convert Controversy

After 13 years of relatively low-profile outreach to professional athletes, the Austin, Texas-based Champions for Christ (CFC) ministry received big publicity in a blitz that included Sports Illustrated, ESPN, and several newspapers and magazines.

Under other circumstances, the ministry would have welcomed the attention, but CFC has been accused of demanding a tithe from its members and improper involvement in contract talks between players, agents, and teams. "Ludicrous and untrue," says Dave Jamerson, CFC national representative, adding that the allegations reflect "a lack of understanding of Christian culture."

COMPLAINTS FILED? The brouhaha started with summer contract negotiations involving Chicago Bears rookie Curtis Enis, who, after being converted to Christianity in a CFC outreach, fired his agent, former Raiders' safety Vann McElroy, and hired a Christian financial planner who is a friend of CFC leaders.

By some accounts, McElroy's firm lodged complaints with the National Football League (NFL) about CFC's influence and tactics. By other accounts, the Chicago Bears and Jacksonville Jaguars asked the league to investigate the ministry out of concern that CFC was asking players to give huge amounts of money to the organization.

The management of both teams declined interview requests, but NFL vice president of public relations Greg Aiello says CFC is "not an issue with this office—we don't deal with them." Aiello says the NFL has more concern about finances than faith issues. "There is a history of athletes being taken advantage of financially," he says.

Both the charges that CFC officially represents players and that it requires tithing from members have rankled the leadership of the nonprofit ministry, which emphasizes it does not negotiate contracts and makes no financial requirement for membership.

"Our sole mission is to promote the gospel of Jesus Christ to athletes and to build disciples for Christ," says Jamerson. "The majority of the athletes we do minister to never give a dime to us."

CFC's 1996 tax filings show that the ministry received $805,249 in donations. Jamerson says the 1997 figures are still who gives to CFC, we give them a year-end report," he says.

CFC has 20 chapters with 300 college athletes from 27 campuses. CFC began as a campus ministry, Jamerson says, and one of the first fruits of its efforts was the National Basketball Association's A. C. Green, a former Los Angeles Laker and current Dallas Mavericks forward, now a CFC vice president.

Jamerson asks, "Why not reach athletes out there not only to be champions on the field, but champions in life?"

So why has CFC attracted this scrutiny? Washington Redskins cornerback Darrell Green, a non-voting CFC board member and a part of the ministry for more than ten years, says it is a spiritual battle. He says "the enemy" does not "like the advance of the kingdom in an area where the Devil has ruled for years—professional athletics. I've done an in-depth investigation of Champions and these people are right [standing]," Green says. "This [controversy] is all about money—greed and money."

Greg Feste, founder of the Malachi Group in Sugar Land, Texas, is the new agent for Enis. The Malachi Group consists of three separate operations providing financial planning and investments, career management, and a venture capital corporation. Feste's publication, Wealth: By the Book, explores biblical views on money. He says sports media have misunderstood that his various operations promote biblical financial stewardship and principles. "They're thinking I'm this religious Bible thumper who's using that to promote his own agenda," Feste says.

Feste says he is not affiliated with CFC, although he and CFC founder Greg Ball are good friends. Feste says referrals have brought him the two pro athletes he represents in contract negotiations, the four he has for marketing and endorsement deals, and the 45 he has helped with full-service financial planning. "Clients breed clients," he says. "What is wrong with being referred by godly men and women?"

PAST PROBLEMS: Enis and Feste both had problems in their pasts before becoming Christians. Last year, Penn State declared Enis, now 22, ineligible to play in the Citrus Bowl because he illegally being audited. "But it's probably around a million dollars," he reports. Though it is not a member of the Evangelical Council for Financial Accountability, Jamerson says CFC is in the process of joining the watchdog organization and does follow its guidelines, submitting to an independent board and an annual audit. "Everybody accepted a $1,000 suit from an agent and lied about it.

In training: Chicago Bears rookie first-round draft pick running back Curtis Enis is new to the NFL—and Christianity.

Most recently, Enis faced charges of a sexual assault alleged to have occurred on May 29 in Irving, Texas, but the charges have been dropped. But Jamerson says Enis is holding steady. "He's doing great," Jamerson says. "It's unfortunate that in the midst of all the positive things God is doing, that's being overshadowed by these allegations." On Independence Day, Enis married his girlfriend, who was then three months pregnant with his child.

Darrell Green says, "There's a tremendous need for groups like Champions, because sometimes athletes think more of themselves than they ought to."

As for Feste, he freely acknowledges his 1989 suicide attempt, a Chapter 7 bankruptcy, and a one-day suspension in 1992 by the National Association of Security Dealers. But all of that happened, he says, before he became a Christian, the result of being evangelized by CFC's Ball.

EVANGELISTIC ZEAL: CFC's involvement with members of the Jacksonville Jaguars has attracted scrutiny, too, but more for evangelistic zeal.

Jamerson says Jaguars quarterback Mark Brunell, a CFC member, attended a couples' Bible study in Jacksonville in 1996, which led to eight team members converting to Christianity and being baptized. At the time, Ball disciplined Brunell and often spoke to the group of new Christian gridiron converts, which had originated from a small group started by the Fellowship of Christian Athletes.

That year, Jamerson says, 11 Jaguars came to CFC's annual conference for professional athletes (this year's conference attracted 60 pros from various teams and their wives). Ball eventually began leading weekly meetings in Jacksonville.

"Last fall, there were 60-some people coming to the meetings, and literally a church was being planted there," Jamerson says of the meetings being held at the Jacksonville Marriott. "It's still growing now."

Don Walker, Jaguars team chaplain and a member of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes, says he sees no problem with CFC. "The product of the Champions ministry is that a lot of guys have come to Christ, [but] some are walking and some aren't," Walker says. "Most people are rather offended that the media have even brought it up. They feel it's really none of their business if these guys want to be good, clean guys."

By Carolyn McCulley.

INSTITUTE FOR BLACK FAMILY RENEWAL

- Tapes • Books • Seminars
- Literature • Family Counseling

CALL: 888-428-3761

FAX: 214-428-3765

OR WRITE

P.O. Box 150217
Dallas, Texas 75315

The Composer wept when he wrote it...

The King stood when he heard it...

Experience again THE MESSIAH

OVER 2 HOURS OF MUSIC
COMPLETE TRADITIONAL RECORDING

IN CHRISTIAN BOOKSTORES NOW

www.SparrowRecords.com

The Prodigal President

Why Bill Clinton's "apology" misfired.

In February 1994, CT's Philip Yancey and David Neff joined President Bill Clinton and a host of dignitaries in listening to a bracing moral lecture from the late Mother Teresa. Her passion for truth trumped any concern she might have had for the feelings of the powerful gathered in the Washington Hilton ballroom. Later that same day, Neff and Yancey interviewed the President in the Oval Office and the presidential limousine. In writing up that interview (CT, Apr. 25, 1994, p. 24), Yancey contrasted Mother Teresa's bold loyalty to truth with the President's perennial penchant for taking his cues from the crowd.

That interview in the limo was a metaphorical moment: as Neff and Yancey questioned him about his views on abortion, a distracted President scanned the sidewalks, waving to people. He seemed to need constant affirmation, and the likelihood was low that he would deal with Mother Teresa's bracing slap with the hand of righteousness.

In 1994 we saw a politician eager to give the people what they want. On August 17 of this year we saw the same thing: the President's polls showed that the people would forgive him for having sex with an intern, but that they favored impeachment for perjury. So the President gave the people what he thought they wanted—so he could get what he wanted. In a televised nonapology, the President owned up to the “inappropriate relationship” with Monica Lewinsky, but hid behind weasel words on the issue of perjury.

When the President offered the nation his grudging statement of regret and then proceeded to blame others for his troubles, he shed his last shred of moral authority. That moral authority had been based in part on his famous compassion. But that Clintonian compassion was hollow: having led his friends, staff, and family into lying for him, it was clear he had no feelings for anyone but Bill. It became clear he'd been operating several commandments shy of a decalogue.

Lost and found out

The week the President “apologized” was also the week our editorial staff was putting the final touches on a series of essays on the parable of the Prodigal Son, which will appear in our next issue. It was profoundly disturbing to meditate on that wonderful parable of radical grace while hearing the President's attempt to excuse his stonewalling and his misleading of his wife, daughter, friends, and nation.

The President was no prodigal, limping home, hoping for some minimal acceptance as a servant. He was still in the far country, hoping somehow to make it on his own.

The parable of the Prodigal Son, like the parables of the lost sheep and the lost coin also found in Luke 15, is about Jesus' joy in searching out sinners. The shepherd finds the lost sheep, the housewife finds the lost coin, the Father declares his son once lost but now found. But there is a huge difference between being found and being cornered. That difference, though, is in large part what the lost will make of their being discovered. Will they, as Kenneth Bailey writes in our next issue, “accept to be found”? Or will they find in their moment of discovery that they are cornered?

On August 17, Bill Clinton acted like he was cornered. There was no mea culpa in his mea culpa. He no sooner acknowledged an “inappropriate” sexual relationship with a female intern less than half his age, than he started blaming those who were doing their duty in pursuing the truth and upholding the law. Even his subsequent attempts at apology—to his cabinet, to party loyalists, to Democratic members of Congress—looked more like sandbagging operations to shore up crumbling support than like the fruit of personal reflection. Not until his September 11 address to the White House Prayer Breakfast did the prodigal President appear to turn toward home and at least get the language of repentance right. Only God knows whether this truly signaled a major turning point in Clinton's spiritual life. We pray that it does.

The American people are not like the elder brother, refusing to forgive or to celebrate. Indeed, we are often eager to forgive. One of the fundamental religious narratives of Western civilization is repentance and restoration. This storyline undergirded the willingness of Jimmy Swaggart's followers to accept his weeping confession and restore him to their affections. Swaggart's sin, said Garry Wills in his book Under God, did not disillusion his followers but confirmed their belief that all are sinners, and his confession was the necessary next act in the drama of restoration. What amazes us is that though Clinton comes from a conservative Christian background, it took him so long to articulate the fundamentals of remorse and repentance required to restore relations.

If, as some have suggested, Clinton's life bears the marks of addiction, his reluctance to repent is understandable, since addictive personalities are skilled at denial and often refuse to acknowledge their problem even when cornered and confronted.

Trust busters

The President's failure to tell the truth—even when cornered—rips at the fabric of the nation. This is not a private affair. For above all, social intercourse is built on a presumption of trust: trust that the milk your grocer sells you is wholesome and pure; trust that the money you put in your bank can be taken out of the bank; trust that your babysitter, firefighters, clergy, and ambulance drivers will all do their best. And while politicians are notorious for breaking campaign promises, while in office they have a fundamental obligation to uphold our trust in them and to live by the law.

It is legitimate to debate whether Paula Jones's sexual harassment suit should have been allowed to go forward against a sitting President; it is reasonable to discuss whether Ken Starr's Whitewater inquiry should have been delayed and whether all the avenues he pursued were part of his mandate. But whether or not the President's legal problems should have been put on hold, unsavory dealings and immoral acts by the President and those close to him have rendered this administration morally unable to lead. Surely those close to him, who believed his denials and risked their own credibility for him, will have to work hard to trust him again. The rest of us may have lost less individually, but the public perception that the Establishment cannot be trusted, increasing ever since Watergate, has been solidly reinforced.

Bill Clinton missed a truly historic moment. August 17 could have been a great opportunity for national healing. A straightforward admission, with evident contrition, would have brought openness and resolution. But while he had the nation's attention, he let his anger at Ken Starr get in the way, and he fumbled. The President was no Prodigal Son, limping home toward reconciliation. But he is limping, and he will have serious difficulty commanding the respect and attention of the American people.

No doubt Bill Clinton has counted on something other than apologies to carry him through the next two years. A booming economy has long propped up his popularity, and we are sure he did not foresee the precipitous stock market "correction" of late August. A big-stick foreign policy has also been a classic ploy to boost presidential ratings. But his attack on reputed terrorist sites in Sudan and Afghanistan left many with questions about timing and appropriateness. Did he minimize the extent of his apology in the knowledge that in a few days he would be diverting attention to Osama bin Laden?

Conservatives who have been combating religious persecution abroad were particularly vexed by the attack on a Sudanese pharmaceutical factory. For several years, the administration has minimized the abundant evidence of officially encouraged enslavement and crucifixion of Christians in that country's southern region. Fearing the disruption of trade relations, the administration had been unwilling to make the Sudan into the international pariah it should be. But now, on the slimmest hint that precursors of chemical weapons were being produced there, they fired missiles that turned the Sudan into a martyr.

Can we put it behind us?

Amidst widespread dissatisfaction with the President's August 17 speech and the calls for his resignation, some of the nation's most prominent religious leaders issued a pastoral letter entitled "An Appeal for Healing." Signed by the National Council of Churches' Joan Brown Campbell and others, the August 27 document pointed to our common sinfulness and the President's cursory "It was wrong" statement, and called us back to the business of government. "It is time once again to be led by our President. We need our country back," it said. While the need for national healing cannot be gainsaid, this document tried to rush a necessarily slow process. Just as no one recovers from a divorce or a death in the family in six months, so no country bounces back from presidential betrayal in ten days.

How much wiser was the Christian Century's Jim Wall, who spotted unfinished business. The simple "It was wrong" was not enough for Wall, who wrote that "a confession does not argue; it admits wrongdoing in a spirit of honest contrition." Wall also displayed a pastoral concern for Monica Lewinsky and her family, to whom, he said "the president owes . . . a public apology and request for forgiveness."

Just before this issue went to press, the President gave a carefully calibrated but emotionally affecting speech to a group of clergy. He spoke of not having been sufficiently contrite. He talked of a broken spirit, genuine repentance, and determination to change. He said that he sinned. But he also promised a vigorous legal defense; we have no doubt he will deliver on that promise. He missed several opportunities to stop the sandbagging and start afresh. Now, it seems, we're in for a long, hot winter. CT

Unsavory dealings and immoral acts by the President and those close to him have rendered this administration morally unable to lead.

TIMOTHY P. WEBER

How Evangelicals Became Israel's Best Friend

In its fiftieth anniversary year, the State of Israel has no better friends than American evangelicals. So it seemed to Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu when he addressed the Voices United for Israel Conference in Washington, D.C., in April 1998. Most of the 3,000 in attendance were evangelicals, including Ralph Reed of the Christian Coalition, Kay Arthur of Precept Ministries, Jane Hanson of Women's Aglow, and Brandt Gustavson of the National Religious Broadcasters. (Jerry Falwell and Pat Robertson supported the conference but did not attend.)

On the day before he met with President Bill Clinton, who urged him to trade West Bank land for peace with the Palestinians, Netanyahu told the conference: "We have no greater friends and allies than the people sitting in this room."

To many observers, the close relationship between Israel and many American evangelicals seems baffling. Many American evangelicals pledge their love for the State of Israel, support its claims against those of the Palestinians, and resist anything that might undercut Israel's security. But they also target Jews for evangelism and sometimes blame them for the mess the world is in. Israel eagerly accepts evangelicalism's public support and aggressively courts its leaders. But many Jews bitterly condemn Christian proselytism and do what they can to restrict the activities of missionaries in Israel. Nevertheless, both sides seem to be getting more than enough out of their relationship.

The close tie between evangelicals and Israel is important: It has shaped popular opinion in America and, to some extent, U.S. foreign policy. To understand how it developed, one must know something about how many evangelicals interpret Bible prophecy and what difference their beliefs have made in the world of politics.

Why do evangelicals care so much about Israel? How did this special relationship develop? What has it produced? On the most basic level, evangelicals love Israel because of the Bible. Many evangelicals have vivid memories of sitting in Sunday school rooms, staring at maps of Bible Lands and listening to Bible stories week after week. Through such experiences, evangelicals came to view the Bible's story as their own and the land of the Bible as a kind of home away from home. Israel is where the Lord Jesus was born, ministered, was crucified, and rose again. Every year thousands of evangelicals take what amounts to a religious pilgrimage to Israel to "walk where Jesus walked" and see for themselves places they have read about their whole lives.

Evangelicals' view of the Bible gives them a proprietary interest in Israel. It is the Holy Land, the site of God's mighty deeds. In a way, they think the Promised Land belongs to them as much as it does to Israelis.

Writing the end-times script

But there is much more to the evangelical-Israel connection: Most of those who gathered in Washington to show their support for Israel believe that the Holy Land will be ground zero for events surrounding the second coming of Jesus Christ. Such evangelicals read the Bible as though it were a huge jigsaw puzzle of prophecies, with Israel in the center. They believe that human history is following a predetermined divine script, and they and Israel are simply playing their assigned roles.

These beliefs come out of a complex system of biblical interpretation known as dispensationalism, which is a version of premillennialism (the belief that Christ will return before setting up his millennial kingdom). As the name implies, dispensationalism divides up the Bible and human history into various eras or dispensations, based on how God deals with humanity. Basic to the system was the way it detected two distinct divine plans, one for an "earthly" people (Israel) and the other for a "heavenly" people (the church). According to John Nelson Darby, the Englishman who shaped dispensationalism in the mid-1800s, biblical prophecies for one group do not apply to the other, and God deals with only one group at a time. Thus "rightly dividing the word of truth" (2 Tim. 2:15) means keeping the two peoples and programs completely separate.

God's dealings with Israel are the key to the dispensational

State support: During a 1996 rally where 600 people converged to support Jewish settlers living in Hebron, a Christian pilgrim acts the part of King David.

system. Through a series of covenants with Abraham, Moses, and David, God made Israel his chosen people and promised to establish Messiah on David's throne forever. In Daniel 7-9, nineteenth-century dispensationalists believed, God spelled out the divine plan: because of its sin, Israel will be subjugated by four successive Gentile powers until, finally, the "times of the Gentiles" are complete. On divine cue, one of the Gentile rulers will issue a decree to rebuild Jerusalem's fallen walls. Sixty-nine weeks later, Messiah will come to the Holy City but be rejected ("cut off") by his own people. During the Seventieth Week, an evil ruler will try to destroy the Jews, but at week's end Messiah will return to defeat him and re-establish David's throne.

These dispensationalists believed that much of Daniel's prophecy of the Seventy Weeks was literally fulfilled in the history of Israel and the first coming of Jesus Christ. But there was a major problem: why did Messiah not return to finish his work at the end of the Seventieth Week as predicted? To answer this question, those dispensationalists developed a "postponement theory." When Jews rejected Jesus, as the prophecy said they would, God unexpectedly postponed Jesus' return, started putting together a new people, the church, and unplugged the prophetic clock. Thus, for its entire history, the church has existed in a prophetic time warp, what dispensationalists call the "great parenthesis."

A second question then needed answering: When and how will God resume the prophetic countdown? Dispensationalists answer, "At the pretribulation rapture of the church." Since God had decided to work with only one group at a time, God must remove the church from the earth before focusing attention again on the Jews. After Jesus comes for his saints in the "Rapture" (1 Thess. 4:13-17), the prophetic clock starts ticking again. Once the church is gone, Daniel's Seventieth Week (the "great tribulation" of Matt. 24, 2 Thess. 2, and Rev.) can begin, after which Jesus will return with his already raptured saints to defeat Antichrist, the great persecutor, and establish his millennial reign.

During the 1870s, Darby made a number of trips to the United States, where his dispensationalism got mixed reviews. Most evangelicals at the time were either postmillennialists (Christ will return after the world is Christianized) or amillennialists (the millennium should be taken figuratively). In an age of optimism, dispensationalism seemed too pessimistic for most evangelicals, some of whom labeled it a "heresy."

Despite its minority status among evangelicals initially, dispensationalism gained a respectable following through prophetic conferences, Bible institutes, a plethora of magazines and popular books, and a committed clientele for whom it was the key to unlock biblical truth. Every major American revivalist since D. L. Moody has been a premillennialist of some kind; and Pentecostalism has more or less followed the dispensationalist line since its inception in the early twentieth century. The Scofield Reference Bible, whose notes explained biblical texts from a dispensational perspective, was published in 1909 and became an authoritative and effective recruiter for the movement.

By the twenties, many fundamentalists considered dispensationalism a nonnegotiable part of Christian orthodoxy. Since then, the system has been nurtured through an elaborate network of schools, publishing houses, mission agencies, radio and television programming, and the like. Channel surfers on cable TV know that dispensationalists are master communicators.

Dispensationalism's sensational influence

Clearly, one does not have to be a dispensationalist to be influenced by one. In his recent study of prophecy belief in modern American culture, historian Paul Boyer found that in addition to the relatively small number of committed "experts" who study Bible prophecy and seem to have everything figured out, there are millions of others who are not so well informed but still believe the Bible contains valuable clues about the future. Such people are susceptible to popularizers who "confidently weave Bible passages into highly imaginative end-time scenarios, or who promulgate particular schemes of prophetic interpretation."

Even secular people who normally ignore the Bible may, during times of crisis, pay attention to someone who uses the Bible to explain what is going on when the world seems to be falling apart. Boyer concludes that dispensational views about Israel and the course of history have influenced popular opinion far beyond the boundaries of the dispensational movement.

What dispensational beliefs have influenced a significant number of evangelicals and the broader American culture? For a hundred and fifty years, dispensationalists have been predicting something like the following:

- After the "times of the Gentiles" are finished and the Jews are regathered in the Holy Land, human civilization will begin to unravel. Morals will decline, families will break apart, crime and anarchy will increase. Wars, political and economic unrest, natural disasters, unstoppable epidemics, shifts in weather patterns, and other calamities will increase suffering and despair. Organized Christianity will experience apostasy; religious leaders will abandon historic beliefs and behavioral standards and openly embrace heresy and immorality. Despite massive efforts to stop civilization's demise, nothing can stop its downward slide.

- After the rapture of the church, a charismatic leader will gain a following by promising peace and security. This Antichrist heads up a ten-nation confederacy in western Europe. Unaware of Antichrist's true identity, Israel will sign a treaty with him to guarantee its security, then rebuild its temple in Jerusalem. After three and a half years, Antichrist will break the treaty, declare himself to be God, and persecute all who refuse to worship him and receive his mark on their foreheads. Antichrist will be helped by a False Prophet, a seductive religious leader, who will use miraculous powers and repressive measures to force compliance. For three and a half years, a remnant of God's people who were converted after the Rapture (Rev. 7:4) will suffer horrible persecution in the Great Tribulation.

- Despite Antichrist's power, other nations will rise in opposition. Some time after Antichrist betrays Israel, a northern confederation of nations under Russian control will join with a southern confederacy to launch a devastating double attack against Israel. This move will prompt the intervention of Antichrist's armies from the west and a 200-million-man army under the "kings of the east." As armies from east and west converge on Israel, the Russian confederates will try to destroy Israel; but God will intervene to destroy them. With the northern confederacy annihilated, the forces of Antichrist and the "kings of the east" will do battle at Armageddon, a valley northwest of Jerusalem. While the battle rages, Jesus will return, wipe out the surviving armies, subdue Antichrist, and set up his millennial kingdom. Finally, the surviving Jews will accept Jesus as their Messiah. For a thousand years, King Jesus will rule the world from Jerusalem, while Jewish priests perform sacrifices in the restored temple. In the end, God will fulfill all the promises to Israel. The redemptive plan will be complete.

In the last 50 years, Israel has needed all the friends it can get and evangelicals have been loyal and productive supporters.

Obviously, the key to this entire prophetic plan is the re-founding of Israel as a nation state in Palestine. Without Israel, the whole plan falls apart.

Reading the signs of the times

In the nineteenth century, most British and American evangelicals did not believe in the restoration of the Jews. They believed that God is essentially finished with the Jews as a people. According to this "replacement theology," because Jews had rejected Jesus, God had rejected them and had transferred divine favor to the church. The church has become the New Israel and has received all the Old Israel's promises and prophecies.

Dispensationalists (and a few nondispensationalists besides) insisted that God is not yet finished with the Jews, and while there was little movement in that direction, they looked for evidence that Jews were heading back to Palestine. A few Jewish agricultural colonies were established in Palestine in the 1880s and '90s, but the number of colonists was small. The Zionist movement was organized in the 1890s, yet at first few Jews paid it much mind. Dispensationalists at that time seemed more eager for Jews to move back to Palestine than did Jews themselves.

Most dispensationalists were content to let God handle the details. It was their job to teach the truth and monitor the signs of the times. But not all dispensationalists were bystanders. A small minority wanted to help move things along.

No American dispensationalist beat the drum for a Jewish state more than William E. Blackstone (1841-1935). Born in New York and reared in an evangelical Methodist home, after the Civil War Blackstone settled in Oak Park, Illinois, and established himself as a successful businessman and lay evangelist to the Chicago business community. He became a dispensationalist and a close friend of D. L. Moody. In 1878 he published Jesus Is Coming, which went through three editions, was translated into 42 languages, and was dispensationalism's first bestseller in America.

In the late 1880s, Blackstone visited new Jewish settlements in the Holy Land and returned to Chicago committed to helping the restoration of the Jews. In 1890 he organized the first conference of Christians and Jews in Chicago and used the occasion to push for a new Jewish state. Most participants, including the Jews, were not interested.

Undeterred, in 1891 Blackstone drew up a petition (or "memorial") advocating the establishment of a Jewish state in Palestine. In short order, he collected 413 signatures from leading Americans, including the chief justice of the Supreme Court, the speaker of the House, the mayors of Chicago, New York, and Boston, and business leaders such as Cyrus McCormick, John D. Rockefeller, and J. Pierpont Morgan. Blackstone forwarded the memorial to President Benjamin Harrison, who ignored it, and later he sent others to Teddy Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson.

In spite of his ongoing efforts to convert Jews to Christ, he became good friends with Zionist leaders and regularly sent them the results of his prophetic study. In 1918, at a Zionist conference in Philadelphia, organizers hailed Blackstone as a "Father of Zionism"; and in 1956, on the seventy-fifth anniversary of his memorial to President Harrison, the citizens of Israel dedicated a forest in his honor.

A few of Blackstone's Chicago friends took another approach. In 1881, Horatio and Anna Spafford and 16 others established the American Colony in the Muslim quarter of the Old City of Jerusalem to watch at close hand the restoration of the Jews and the second coming of Jesus. The Spaffordites held all property in common and, at least for a while, made celibacy the house rule.

ANTICHRIST

AND THE

"TIMES OF THE GENTILES"

The Spaffordites went there primarily for prophetic reasons. As one settler put it, "We wanted to see the prophecies fulfilled." One of the children of the community recounted years later how for a while the group "went every day to the Mount of Olives with tea and cakes, hoping to be the first to offer the Messiah refreshment." When hundreds of penniless Jews from Yemen arrived in Jerusalem in 1882, the colony considered them part of the Ten Lost Tribes and a clear sign of prophetic fulfillment, so they provided them with food, shelter, and other support. The colony became a popular stopover for visitors to the Holy Land. Blackstone came; so did Moody. The colony prospered economically when over 100 Swedes from Chicago and the old country joined up in 1896.

For over 50 years the colony survived as a religious community, but subsequent generations lost their prophetic zeal and turned the colony into a business concern. By the 1930s, their perspective on life in Palestine had changed. The colony identified more with the needs of the indigenous Arabs and considered Zionism a threat to their legitimate rights.

Blackstone and the American Colony in Jerusalem were exceptions, not the rule. Most dispensationalists were content to study the Bible and scan the horizon for prophetic fulfillments. During the twentieth century, signs of the times multiplied. World War I gave a major boost to their hopes for the future. Dispensationalists used their Bibles to predict with uncanny accuracy the results of the war, including the redrawing of the map of Europe, which was necessary to get ready for their end-times scenario. But nothing brought them more pleasure than the disposition of Palestine.

When World War I broke out in 1914, Palestine was firmly in the grasp of the Ottoman Empire. By 1916, there was widespread speculation, even in the secular press, about the restoration of a Jewish homeland if the Turks could be vanquished. By late 1917, events were rapidly moving along those lines. As British forces fought their way into Palestine from the south, Lord Arthur Balfour, the British foreign secretary, wrote to Lord James Rothschild, a leader in international Zionism: "His Majesty's Government view with favour the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and will use their best efforts to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine, or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country."

Five weeks after the Balfour Declaration, the Turks surrendered Jerusalem to British forces, virtually without a fight. This sent shock waves through dispensationalist ranks. Here was the most concrete proof ever that the "times of the Gentiles" were coming to an end. It made little difference to dispensationalists that Jerusalem had passed from one Gentile power to another. The important thing was that the British had declared their intention to establish a Jewish state. If the "times of the Gentiles" were coming to an end, could the restoration of Israel be far behind?

Dispensationalists could barely contain themselves. Arno C. Gaebelein, editor of Our Hope, called the coming restoration of Israel "the sign of all signs." In 1918, dispensationalists organized two well-attended prophetic conferences in New York and Philadelphia, where the real possibility of establishing a Jewish state got much attention.

The Protocols conspiracy

Despite such rising expectations, it would take 30 more years and another world war to establish a Jewish state. But the events of 1917-18 gave dispensationalists ample assurance that they were reading the Bible correctly; and further evidence was pouring in: Ecclesiastical wars between fundamentalists and modernists confirmed the rise of religious apostasy. The public schools were overrun by evolutionists and secularists. Personal and public morals took a nosedive, with increasing divorce rates, the obscenities of the "new woman," and the open flouting of Prohibition laws. Dispensationalists watched the rise of fascism in Europe, the spread of communism, and growing anti-Semitism. Civilization was obviously spinning out of control, and for the prophecy pundits, everything fit and was right on schedule.

During the twenties and thirties, a number of leading dispensational teachers promoted right-wing conspiracy theories and even fell prey to Nazi propaganda. Shortly after World War I, The Protocols of the Elders of Zion started making the rounds in Europe and America, purporting to be the secret minutes of a group of Jewish conspirators plotting to take over the world by destroying Christian civilization. When Henry Ford serialized them in his newspaper, the Dearborn Independent, in the early 1920s, many people believed what they read. From then on, American anti-Semites made The Protocols "exhibit A" in their propaganda campaign.

Not all dispensationalists were fooled by The Protocols, but a number of leading Bible teachers were. In 1921, James M. Gray, president of Moody Bible Institute, called The Protocols "a clinching argument for premillennialism and another sign of the possible nearness of the end of the age." Arno Gaebelein also believed that the plan outlined in The Protocols was consistent with Bible prophecy. Well known as an evangelist to Jews, Gaebelein obviously loved some Jews more than others.

He liked Orthodox Jews because they still expected the coming of Messiah, read Bible prophecies with expectancy, and honored their traditions. But he had no use for Reform or secular Jews, whom he considered apostates capable of anything. Though he could not be sure, Gaebelein thought that The Protocols were "from the pen of apostate Jews" who were responsible for Russian Bolshevism, the illegal liquor traffic in the U.S., and the general decline in morals. "There is nothing so vile on earth as an apostate Jew who denies God and His Word."

Most dispensationalists paid little attention to The Protocols until Gerald Winrod gave them a new lease on life. In 1933, Winrod, founder of the Defenders of the Christian Faith in Wichita, Kansas, published an elaborate exposé to show that Jews were in charge of the world's banking system and responsible for World War I, the Great Depression, President Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal, and just about everything else.

In 1934, William Bell Riley, who presided over a fundamentalist empire in the upper Midwest, published The Protocols and Communism to show that the same conspiracy that turned Russia communist was at work in Roosevelt's New Deal. "Today in our land many of the biggest trusts, banks, and manufacturing interests are controlled by Jews. . . . Most of our department stores they own. . . . The motion pictures, the most vicious of all immoral, educational and communistic influences, is their creation." Riley preached such views regularly from his pulpit at the First Baptist Church of Minneapolis, which some Jewish leaders considered a major center of anti-Semitism.

Gray, Winrod, Gaebelein, and Riley strenuously denied that they were anti-Semites. They were simply explaining events in light of biblical prophecy. But most dispensationalists quickly figured out that using such arguments put them in very bad company. By the thirties, The Protocols were identified with the peddlers of virulent anti-Semitism, which dispensationalists said was a horrible sin against God.

Eventually The Protocols split the dispensational movement. Jewish-Christian believers objected to their use, arguing that it was not enough to distinguish between good Jews and bad: when people believed conspiracy theories, all Jews suffered, even Christian ones. Others concluded that some of their colleagues had been duped by Nazi propaganda. Harry Ironside, pastor of Moody Church in Chicago, was grieved "to find that the Protocols are being used not only by godless Gentiles, but even by some fundamentalist Christians to stir up suspicion and hatred against the Jewish people as a whole."

In 1938, Keith Brooks, a former Winrod associate, founded the American Prophetic League in California to put as much distance as possible between dispensationalism and Nazi anti-Semitism. The next year Brooks published a "Manifesto to the Jews," signed by 60 leading dispensationalists, which condemned the spread of pro-Nazi propaganda under the guise of biblical prophecy and disavowed further use of The Protocols. Three years later, Brooks was still trying to get fellow prophecy teachers to "clear the church at large from the charge laid against it by unbelievers, that it had been a tool of Hitler and the Jew-baiters." Before his death in 1935, Gray swore off ever using The Protocols again; but Winrod and Riley never backed down. Some time after the "Manifesto" appeared, Gaebelein tried to get his name added to the list of signers. The fact that he never told his own constituency and continued to sell Conflict of the Ages until he died in 1945 made the gesture disingenuous.

Suffering with a purpose

Dispensationalism had a dark side that grew out of its beliefs about the Jews' complex role in prophecy. Jews are God's chosen people and heirs to all the prophetic promises; but present Jews are under the power of Satan and contributing to the decline of the present age. The glory of Israel is future.

It is no surprise that dispensationalists received news of the Holocaust with a combination of horror, resignation, and hope. They were among the first to warn the world of the coming catastrophe. In 1930, Gaebelein told his readers about Hitler and what might happen to Jews if he ever got control of Germany; and by the late thirties, premillennialist leaders had figured out what was going on in places like Buchenwald long before most people realized what the Nazis were capable of.

While dispensationalists condemned persecution of the Jews, they believed such things were inevitable and were happening for a reason. Just like Nebuchadnezzar and the Babylonians centuries before, Hitler and the Nazis were God's instruments of judgment. God was using them to increase the Jews' desire for a homeland of their own in Palestine. As Harry Rimmer observed, "By driving the preserved people back into the preserved land, Hitler, who does not believe the Bible . . . is helping to fulfill its most outstanding prophecy." Needless to say, once their awful work was done, God would judge the Nazis just as he judged the Babylonians.

Sometimes dispensationalists took comfort in their belief that persecution made Jews more susceptible to the gospel. Moody Bible Institute president Will Houghton claimed that Jewish youth

The history of prophetic interpretation shows that the Devil is in the details.

Jerusalem as Jesus Views It

Across the field from our residence in Jerusalem is Har Homa (Jabal Abu Ghneim in Arabic), the mountain that has caused so much conflict over the status of Jerusalem. On Easter morning 1997 we stood on the roof of our residence for a sunrise service. As the sun rose over the mountain, we celebrated the Resurrection with Scripture, song, and prayer.

Several days later we watched with pain as bulldozers cut a swath around the mountain, preparing the way for housing construction. Israelis insist this area is part of southeastern Jerusalem and that they have a right to expand there. Palestinians from the adjacent Christian towns of Bethlehem and Beit Sahour see this unilateral act as infringement on their right to expand their cities.

Jerusalem, the "City of Peace," is a source of conflict and disharmony. Israelis insist that Jerusalem should remain the unified and eternal capital of Israel under the absolute sovereignty of Israel. Palestinians, native to East Jerusalem, are critical of the Israeli claim to sovereignty; they want East Jerusalem to be the capital of a Palestinian state.

Jerusalem elicits the best and the worst in people, and it is being marred by those who claim to love her.

Just as Jerusalem incites the passions of three great religions—Judaism, Christianity, and Islam—it also inspires pilgrims. As we approach the year 2000, there is a lot of euphoria concerning Jerusalem. Some Christians are enamored with Jerusalem because they anticipate the restoration of Jerusalem when the time of the Gentiles is fulfilled. Hence, they uncritically defend Jewish control of Jerusalem because it fits their end-times theories. Christian pilgrims are flocking to see the sites where they anticipate these end-times events will happen. Jerusalem Mayor Ehud Olmert recently has even suggested setting up tent camps to accommodate the many Christian pilgrims.

I've been asked what I know about the Mount of Olives beginning to split (Zech. 14:4). Frankly, I've seen no evidence of that, nor is it my consuming passion. Some seem more interested in whether the mountain is beginning to divide than in the division of people living within the shadow of that mountain. Others seem more fascinated with the reconstruction of a third temple than with Jesus as temple or the believing community as temple. Groups of Christians have even contributed money for the rebuilding of the temple.

Several years ago in the Old City of Jerusalem I visited a Jewish group that is preparing for the eventual rebuilding of the temple. The man I interviewed was armed. The group was very guarded—literally and figuratively! This group does not indicate when or how the temple will be rebuilt, an assertion much too volatile. But they insist it is their task to prepare the ceremonial garments and utensils for that certain future event. Are groups like these the Christians' allies in Jerusalem?

Jesus reinterprets Jerusalem

Many Christians seem to have an Old Testament view of land, Jerusalem, and the temple rather than a New Testament view. The New Testament is positive toward Jerusalem and the temple: Jerusalem is a "holy city" (Matt. 4:5; 27:53), the "city of the great King" (Matt. 5:35), and the temple is a "holy place" (Matt.

HOW EVANGELICALS BECAME ISRAEL'S BEST FRIEND

in Warsaw turned to Christ en masse in the summer of 1939, immediately before the Nazi invasion. "Perhaps that is the reason the Devil saw to it that Warsaw was wrecked and the Jews scattered."

Later the same year dispensational leaders called for an international day of prayer for the Jews. Interestingly, the organizers did not advise people to pray for the persecutions to stop, only that Jews might turn to Christ in their despair. The best thing people could do for Jews under the circumstances was send them more New Testaments and missionaries.

The State of Israel

As bad as things got, dispensationalists knew that the Nazis would never annihilate the Jewish people. After all, God's entire prophetic plan hinges on getting a Jewish remnant back to Palestine to establish their own state in preparation for Armageddon and the Second Coming. Prophetically speaking, the most crucial point was not that millions were dying, but that some would survive.

In the thirties and forties, dispensationalists thought that the formation of a Jewish state was imminent. But the British were not so sure. For obvious reasons, the Palestinians, who greatly outnumbered Jews in the Holy Land, disliked the Balfour Declaration and mounted a massive resistance campaign. They went on strike, rioted, and occasionally committed acts of terrorism against the British and the Jewish population. The British did what they could to stop the protests, including restricting Jewish immigration and suggesting in the spirit of compromise that the Holy Land be partitioned into both Arab and Jewish states. But nothing worked. In 1939 the British issued a white paper that essentially abandoned the Balfour Declaration.

By the end of the war, not much had changed, except the Jews were now well armed and ready to force the issue of statehood, sometimes through their own brand of terrorism. Looking desperately for a way out, the British appealed to the newly organized United Nations. In August 1947, the UN Special Committee on Palestine also recommended that the area be partitioned into Arab and Jewish states; but Arabs refused to relinquish their land, so the UN abandoned the idea. By the spring of 1948 it was obvious to everybody that a political solution was not possible.

The British finally announced plans to withdraw their forces from the region on May 14, 1948. On that day the Jewish National Council declared statehood; and Arab armies invaded. Almost immediately, the U.S. recognized the new state. The fighting was fierce. By November the better-trained Israeli 24:15). Yet Jesus and the New Testament have a radically new perspective on Jerusalem and the temple. As the temple needed to be seen in the light of Jesus (John 2), so did Jerusalem (John 4). And Jesus predicted the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple because of the religious and moral failure of the people (Luke 19:41-44; 21:20-24). He called Jerusalem to repentance. A center of unbelief, Jerusalem killed its religious leaders (Matt. 23:29-24:2) and acted against the purposes of God (Luke 13:34). Because Jerusalem was using God for its own aggrandizement, it could no longer claim holiness.

When Jesus was asked, "Will you at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" (Acts 1:6, RSV), he replied: "It is not for you to know the times or periods that the Father has set by his own authority" (1:7). Rather, they are to witness to Jesus in Jerusalem—and throughout the whole world. Christians must focus more on Jesus than on Jerusalem the Holy City.

More important than the place of Jerusalem is the person of Jesus. Jerusalem is not the center for Christians; Jesus is. Jesus is also greater than the temple (Matt. 12:6) because Jesus took its place (John 2:21). Jesus' own sacrificial death ended the need for the sacrifices of the temple (Heb. 9:11-10:18). He is the divine presence symbolized by the temple. Believers in Jesus and the believing community are also the temple (1 Cor. 3:17; 6:19; 2 Cor. 6:16). If Jesus and the church represent the temple, is the reconstruction of a third temple—a Jewish edifice—essential to Christian faith?

Jesus' agenda for Jerusalem

Still, we may have an affection for the Holy City, but love for it does not mean that we conform to Jerusalem's agenda. Rather, we accept Jesus' agenda for Jerusalem. Looking at Jerusalem through the eyes of Jesus must include Jesuslike involvement in the following ways:

Weeping. Jesus lamented that Jerusalem killed prophets and stoned messengers, refusing to be gathered together as a hen gathers her chicks (Luke 13:34-35). Because Jerusalem did not recognize the things that make for peace or the time of God's visitation, it would therefore be destroyed (Luke 19:41-44). Jesus' tears expressed regret, compassion, and his reluctance to give up on Jerusalem.

Christians must feel the same anguish for Jerusalem. Sometimes the pain of Jerusalem is too deep for words. One can only weep. Weeping is the precondition for compassion, understanding, prayer. As Jesus prayed for Jerusalem, we are invited to pray for Jerusalem and the church in Jerusalem.

Prophetic critique. Jesus by prophetic word and action called Jerusalem to repentance. He did not criticize from a distance, but entered into Jerusalem's daily life. Jesus rebuked Jerusalem because the Holy City had become unholy. Critique must be laced with mercy and compassion.

Christians are often reluctant to critique wrongs or injustice because they are troops had prevailed, and a cease-fire was called. In May 1949 Israel was admitted to the UN.

Dispensationalists were ecstatic. This was the "sign of all signs." Louis Talbot of the Bible Institute of Los Angeles declared, "I consider it the greatest event, from a prophetic standpoint, that has taken place within the last one hundred years, perhaps even since 70 A.D. [sic], when Jerusalem was destroyed."

In the flush of prophetic fulfillment, most evangelicals showed little or no concern for Palestinian rights—which was ironic since there have always been more Arab Christians in the Middle East than Jewish ones. During the thirties and forties, a few evangelicals raised questions of justice, self-determination, and fair play for Arabs. After all, Palestinians had been there for centuries, much longer than the United States had been a nation. But most evangelicals believed that God's prophetic purposes were more important than such local concerns. Their attitude seemed to be, "This is the fulfillment of prophecy; the Palestinians will just have to get used to it."

Many evangelicals saw the establishment of an Israeli state as the beginning of the end. But there were unresolved problems: The new Israel occupied only a fraction of the land it held in Bible times. Therefore, dispensationalists were eager to see Israel expand its territory. In 1956, with French and English support, Israel attacked Egypt: the Israelis wanted the Sinai; their European allies wanted the Suez Canal. The U.S. government opposed the action. Most dispensationalists objected to the U.S. position because they considered it anti-Israel. For dispensationalists, not to support Israel was to align oneself against the purposes of God.

Evangelicals who thought this way were elated by the Six-Day War of June 1967. Fearing an imminent attack from Soviet-supplied Egyptian and Syrian forces, Israel struck first. In less than a week, the Israelis defeated the Arab coalition and occupied the Sinai peninsula, territory west of the Jordan River, the Gaza Strip, and the Golan Heights. Now the modern State of Israel looked more like the "Bible Lands" maps on the walls of Sunday school rooms. The most important result of the Six-Day War was that Israel controlled all of Jerusalem. Nelson Bell wrote in CHRISTIANITY TODAY, "That for the first time in more than 2,000 years Jerusalem is now completely in the hands of the Jews gives a student of the Bible a thrill and a renewed faith in the accuracy and validity of the Bible" (CT, July 21, 1967, p. 28). Here was an obvious fulfillment of Luke 21:24: "Jerusalem will be trampled on by the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled" (NRSV).

For most evangelicals, the war for Jewish statehood and the seen as "signs of the times." Yet Christians address issues of famine, social disruption, and apostasy, which are also "signs of the times." Some Christians, instead of calling Jerusalem to repentance, only bless Jerusalem and emphasize God's promises, ignoring the conditional nature of God's promises. Jerusalem is not exempt from God's will revealed in Jesus. Justice for all parties is more important than absolute sovereignty over Jerusalem.

Ethical discernment. The "sacredness" or "specialness" of Jerusalem blinds many Christians to ethical discernment. But devotion to Jerusalem without righteousness leads to unholy nationalism. Religious claims to the holiness of Jerusalem often lead to dispute and war rather than to ethical behavior. Holiness of space must not usurp the place of ethics. Holy behavior is more important than holy places. Where justice is lacking there is no holiness. Devotion to Jerusalem can become an idol. Instead of pointing toward God, it points away from God. Jerusalem must not take the place of God or be revered at the expense of the values expressed by Jesus.

Reconciliation and peace. Jesus wept because Jerusalem did not understand the things that make for peace (Luke 19:42). Can the "City of Peace" discover today the things that make for peace? Can Jerusalem be a place of blessing instead of a place of division? First-century Jerusalem was destroyed because it did not know what made for peace. Will Christian faith foster or hamper efforts for justice, peace, and security for all? Christians need to pray (Ps. 122:6), act, and hope for the peace of Jerusalem, a peace built upon the foundation of justice, a peace for all the people of Israel and Palestine.

Jerusalem is one of the few places in the world considered holy to several religions. Jews, Christians, and Muslims all see Jerusalem in a unique way, and often their religious perceptions clash. Justice and human rights call for a shared Jerusalem for Israelis and Palestinians—for Jews, Christians, and Muslims. Jerusalem is not only important for the religion of each, but each of these groups lives in Jerusalem. The claims of local people to Jerusalem should not be minimized. There will be no peace if some groups are excluded.

My joy in celebrating Holy Week events in Jerusalem is marred by the awareness that many Palestinian Christians are forbidden to come to Jerusalem to participate in the Palm Sunday walk or the Maundy Thursday procession from Jerusalem to Gethsemane. A shared Jerusalem insists that it be open for all. No one owns Jerusalem. It is God's Jerusalem.

Unity of Christian presence. In Jerusalem Jesus prayed that believers might be one (John 17:2123). Churches need to transcend their particular histories, renounce prejudice, and work for mutual understanding. As a symbol, the mother church of Jerusalem can help Christians transcend their particular community affiliations. Today there are hopeful signs of increasing unity among Jerusalem churches, both among Palestinian Christians and between Palestinian Christians and Jewish believers in Jesus. Christians from abroad should help to heal division rather than increase fragmentation.

Palestinian Christians are a minority within a minority. The diminishing number of Christians in the region due to emigration is of great concern to the Christian community. Archbishop of Canterbury George Carey, on a visit to Jerusalem in 1992, expressed hope that the diminishing number of Christians would not result in an "empty theme park." How tragic if the church should cease to be meaningfully present in the city where it was born.

How can Christians be an authentic presence in Jerusalem? Surely the living Christian community (the temple of Jesus) is of greater significance than the Temple Mount. Community-centered faith is more important than site-centered faith.

Calvin E. Shank is professor of religion at Eastern Mennonite University, Harrisonburg, Virginia. He and his wife, Marie, spend half of each year in Jerusalem on a Mennonite Church assignment.

HOW EVANGELICALS BECAME ISRAEL'S BEST FRIEND

Six-Day War were nothing short of miraculous. News reports on the wars of 1948 and 1967 read like excerpts from Exodus and Joshua. How could Bible believers complain or question what was happening? One did not have to be a dispensationalist to see that God was obviously in control and vitally concerned with Israel. After 1967, many people who had not given it much thought before were willing to consider Israel's prophetic significance.

The late great planet Earth

The 1970s brought a major change in the evangelical-Israel relationship. The Israelis began to understand the importance of the American evangelical community. According to Paul Boyer, "As liberal Protestant support eroded, Israel played its fundamentalist card. Privately ridiculing premillennialist readings of prophecy . . . , they recognized an important political bloc and dealt with it accordingly." On the American side, evangelicals realized that they needed to become more hands-on in their support of the Jewish state due to the increasing pressure on Israel to make peace with its neighbors by giving up occupied territory. Often this support turned into strong political advocacy, with right-wing political connections.

An intense courtship began. In 1971 Carl Henry, former editor of CHRISTIANITY TODAY, announced a prophecy conference in Jerusalem. Fifteen hundred delegates from 32 nations showed up. Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion greeted the delegates, and the Israeli government provided the meeting hall free of charge. That started a flood of favored treatment of American evangelicals from the Israeli government. The airport in Tel Aviv was quickly overrun by evangelical tour groups.

Entourages led by the likes of Jerry Falwell, Oral Roberts, or Hal Lindsey were treated to briefings by Israeli cabinet officers, such as Defense Minister Moshe Arens or Prime Minister Menachem Begin. Every televangelist worth his Nielsen Ratings scheduled his own tour; and the Israeli Ministry of Tourism brought evangelical pastors to Israel at little or no expense so that they could return later with their own tour groups. In January 1998, Israel brought at its own expense a large contingent of American evangelical seminary presidents and deans to the Holy Land.

The more this relationship developed, the more blatantly political evangelical support for Israel became. Hal Lindsey is a perfect case in point. In 1970 he published what became the bestselling book of the decade, The Late Great Planet Earth, which introduced dispensationalism to the widest audience ever.

Lindsey jazzed up the standard dispensational scenario by showing its connection to current events. The Antichrist's revived Roman Empire was the European Common Market. The northern confederacy was the Soviet Union and the Eastern Bloc. The southern confederacy was an Arab-African coalition headed by Egypt. The kings of the east were the Chinese Communists. He translated "fire and brimstone" into nuclear explosions and showed the chaos of the sixties as signs of the times. He predicted that before Antichrist is revealed and end-times events accelerate, the United States will decline into a second-rate power, done in by materialism, immorality, addiction to drugs, and false religion—or possibly destroyed by a surprise nuclear attack.

It was scary stuff, and Lindsey said exactly what he wanted his readers to do about it: accept Jesus as Lord and Savior and escape the wrath to come. For all its prophetic razzle-dazzle, The Late Great Planet Earth was essentially an evangelistic exercise.

When Lindsey took another look at world conditions ten years later, his perspective had changed considerably. Though still interested in evangelism, The 1980s: Countdown to Armageddon contained a full-blown political agenda. He maintained his prediction that "the U.S. must fade from its place of leadership for the west and its former supreme superpower status," but now he believed that if American Christians acted quickly, it might not happen until after the Rapture. His suggestions for slowing America's downward slide sounded like a page from the political Right's playbook. He blamed America's ills on a group of conspirators (the Council on Foreign Relations, the Trilateral Commission, and other political liberals) who had dismantled the military and undercut free enterprise. "... I believe that the Bible supports building a powerful military force. And the Bible is telling the U.S. to become strong again." "We need to clean house in Washington, and elect a Congress and a President who believe in the capitalist system." Only then could America give Israel the help it needed.

The politics of loving Israel

By the time Lindsey wrote The 1980s, conservative American evangelicals were finding their political voice. Concerned about what was happening to their country, they formed groups like the Moral Majority and the Religious Roundtable to help elect Ronald Reagan President in 1980. For the first time ever, premillennialists were becoming political insiders, and they liked it. In The 1980s Lindsey reported that the success of The Late Great Planet Earth had opened many doors for him. He had been invited to speak about Bible prophecy to Jamaican government officials, military planners at the American Air War College and the Pentagon, and to Israeli government officials.

It was becoming obvious to everybody that believing in Bible prophecy could have profound political consequences. Shortly after the Six-Day War, evangelicals organized Christians Concerned for Israel, which later changed its name to the National Christian Leadership Conference for Israel. The NCLC's goal was to "educate the American public, and especially the Christians, in the political and religious significance of the close relationship between the United States and Israel." The NCLC opposed any attempt to internationalize Jerusalem or trade West Bank land for peace. It defended Israel's invasion of Lebanon by putting on a pro-Israel rally at the White House and running a large ad in the New York Times.

No Israeli prime minister since Menachem Begin would think of making a trip to the United States without checking in with leaders of the New Christian Right in both public and private meetings. In April 1998, Benjamin Netanyahu spoke to a National Unity Coalition for Israel gathering, which included Kay Arthur of Precept Ministries, the 700 Club's Terry Meeuwsen, Paige Patterson (now president of the Southern Baptist Convention), columnist Cal Thomas, and a host of politicians such as Senators Trent Lott and Sam Brownback and Representatives Dick Armey, Dick Gephardt, and Tom DeLay. Jerry Falwell was there, too, and gave a speech against the internationalization of Jerusalem.

Falwell is a major player in the evangelical-Israel connection. When Netanyahu visited the United States in January 1998, Falwell helped arrange a meeting between the prime minister and a number of other evangelical leaders, including John Hagee and Southern Baptists Morris Chapman and Richard Land. Falwell and the others pledged to mobilize the evangelical community against the Clinton administration's pressure on Israel to give up more land to the Palestinians. "There are about 200,000 evangelical pastors in America, and we're asking them all through e-mail, faxes, letters, telephone, to go into their pulpits and use their influence in support of the state of Israel and the prime minister."

Pat Robertson likewise uses his vast connections and his Christian Broadcasting Network to promote Israel. He regularly features news stories about the Holy Land on his 700 Club and invites Israeli officials to appear. During a January 1998 interview with Netanyahu, Robertson asked him, "What would you like our audience to do?" He replied, "I think they are already doing it . . . , letters to the editor, communications with representatives . . . to support Israel."

Bible prophecy teachers are not inerrant; and they have changed their minds often.

The pro-Israel network

Examples of this kind of public advocacy by evangelical leaders are endless. But the real story in the last 20 years is the founding of scores of small, grassroots, pro-Israel organizations that rarely get into the headlines. They exist to educate and mobilize their local evangelical community to support Israel in the current crisis.

Some have rather specialized missions. Many help Israel by teaching Christians about the Jewish roots of their own faith. The Restoration Foundation of Atlanta puts on seminars, colloquia, and retreats to promote "the restoration of all believers to their rightful heritage in the Judaism of the first century church" and love for Israel and its people. The Arkansas Institute of Holy Land Studies in Sherwood, Arkansas, advertises itself as a "specialty college" and offers unaccredited bachelor's and master's degrees in "Middle East History."

Some of these groups promote Messianic Judaism as the truest form of Christianity. Hebraic Heritage Ministries of Houston wants Christians to worship on the Sabbath (Sunday worship is a product of paganism) and observe the Jewish festivals. First Fruits of Zion Ministries is based in Jerusalem but tries to get American Christians to live like Jews: to keep kosher, study Hebrew, keep the Sabbath and the festivals, and learn messianic Jewish dances (see CT, Sept. 7, 1998, p. 62).

Some of the pro-Israel evangelical groups are more humanitarian than educational. The Tulsa-based Bridges for Peace is a charitable organization working in Israel. Its "Operation Ezra" provides food, blankets, kitchen and school supplies, home-repair items, and the like to new immigrants and others in need. It claims its food bank is the only one currently operating in Israel. Its pitch for support says, "Don't just read about prophecy when you can be part of it!"

One of the most innovative humanitarian organizations is Christian Friends for Israeli Communities, which was founded in 1995 by Ted Beckett, a commercial real estate developer from Colorado Springs. He organized the CFIC to provide "solidarity, comfort, and aid" to Jewish settlements in Judea, Samaria, and the regions of Gaza by linking them with evangelical congregations in the United States.

At present 35 congregations are part of the program. Beckett's goal is to provide an evangelical partner for every Jewish settlement that wants one, which he estimates to be 100 to 110 out of 150 settlements. Each congregation is taught how to "link" with its assigned community by identifying pen pals, making e-mail connections, helping with fundraising, sending books or other supplies. Churches are also expected to promote awareness of Israel in their own communities. Beckett knows that his work is also political because, he says, God is sending Jesus back to Israel to set up his kingdom. There is nothing more political than that.

In short, there is an enormous network of pro-Israel and Christian Zionist organizations. Most of them have their own Web pages on the Internet, and they usually have links to one another. Unlike many other evangelical groups, they understand the virtues of cooperation. An umbrella organization that tries to bring them together from time to time is the International Christian Embassy in Jerusalem. Founded in 1980, the embassy, which has no real diplomatic standing, opposes internationalizing Jerusalem and establishing a Palestinian state. It has offices in over 50 countries and does what it can to encourage and facilitate Christian Zionism. Over 1,500 people from 40 countries attended its Third International Christian Zionist Congress in Jerusalem in 1996.

Last things

Israel has needed all the friends it can get, and evangelicals have been loyal, productive supporters. When Israel invaded Lebanon in 1982, no one defended it more strenuously in the U.S. than evangelicals. At one time, Israeli prime ministers could count on the strong support of both the U.S. President and the American Jewish community. But the present prime minister has neither. Netanyahu's relationship with President Clinton is strained, and the Jewish community is deeply divided over some policies of Israel's present government. Netanyahu was correct when he said that American evangelicals are the best friends Israel (i.e., his government) has.

But friendship comes at a cost. Supporting Israel has often meant that evangelicals must not be as evangelistic as they would like to be. Cooperation is difficult when one side is trying to convert the other. This does not mean that evangelicals stop believing that Jews need to be saved, only that evangelism must always be the first priority in their relationship. Evangelicals probably learned how to do this when they re-entered the world of politics in the late seventies. The Moral Majority welcomed Jews, Catholics, Mormons, and anybody else who shared common concerns. Falwell often said that since the organization was political, not religious, everybody could get along. Ted Beckett tells participating churches that people are always free to share their faith if asked, but they are not permitted to engage in any kind of overt proselytism. He says that he will "yank the charter" of any congregation in his project that tries to make a direct religious appeal to Jews in Israel. But old habits die hard.

For their part, Jews must learn to ignore what evangelicals believe about Bible prophecy and the need for all Jews to come to Jesus. Just as it is difficult for evangelicals to lay evangelism aside, so some Jews find it hard to ignore the motives behind evangelical support.

Rabbi James Rudin, interreligious affairs director of the American Jewish Committee, complains that "some of the very same people who are most supportive of the state of Israel and its security and well-being don't see Judaism as a full and valid religion. It's like 'Israel si, Jews no.' " Rudin is also critical of Jews who turn a deaf ear to such teachings in order to gain more allies for Israel. "Many American Jews will say: 'Any port in a storm. If they support Israel, . . . don't worry too much about the apocalypse.' "

One Jew who prefers not to worry is Esther Levens. In 1990 she and Christian friend Allen Mothersill decided to start a pro-Israel, interreligious study group after the Bush administration started making loans to Israel contingent on not allowing new Jewish settlements on the West Bank. Levens was surprised to discover the level of support for Israel among evangelicals, so she decided to network as many evangelical and Jewish organizations as she could find. The result was Voices United for Israel, which currently enrolls two hundred organizations, of which two-thirds are evangelical.

In 1998, the Kansas City-based organization sponsored two conferences in Washington, D.C., at which Netanyahu spoke, and the group's "media committee" has consulted with Israeli government officials in the development of new promotional and educational materials for use in American media markets. The organization faxes information about Israel to anyone who is interested and sponsors a speakers' bureau of heavy hitters from think tanks involved in Middle East policy.

Politically, Voices United for Israel is fairly homogeneous, but religiously, it is diverse. While the Christian contingent is almost all evangelical, the Jewish contingent ranges from Orthodox to Reform. What holds everyone together, says Levens, is their support for Israel and its current government and their willingness not to press religious differences. She knows about the prophetic views of the evangelicals in her organization and chooses not to dwell on them. For her, the important thing is that evangelicals love and support Israel. But still, Levens and her Jewish friends can get a bit mystified. A common joke in their circles is, "When the Messiah finally comes, my first question to him will be whether this visit is his first or second."

Some evangelicals have demonized the Palestinians:
Because they are the enemies of the modern State of Israel, they are also the enemies
of God.

Ira Nosenchuk of Brooklyn, who attended the Voices United for Israel Conference in April, summarized the spirit of cooperative compromise well: "When you have people supportive of your beliefs, . . . you have to go with them. . . . Sometimes I feel like there are more supporters for Israel among evangelicals than among Jews." Supporting Israel makes the strangest bedfellows.

The evangelical-Israel relationship also raises important theological issues. Despite the widespread influence of their views, dispensationalists have always made up a minority of the entire evangelical family. But their prophetic beliefs raise important questions that all Christians need to think about seriously.

As Christian history makes clear, in the wrong hands the doctrines of providence, divine sovereignty, and eschatology become fatalism; and fatalism takes the significance out of human action. If the future is fixed, people are merely playing out their assigned roles, with no ability to alter the direction or outcome of the divine drama. If one is privy to the process, one can identify the players, evaluate their performance, and make judgments about them. When one knows how the drama is going to end, there are no surprises. At times, then, dispensationalist prophecy can be quite fatalistic.

Eschatological activism

So why are evangelicals working so hard to keep Israel strong and independent? Why bother when they know how things are going to end up? How do their prophetic views and their political involvement fit together? These are hard questions to answer because evangelical political activists and prophecy teachers rarely if ever reflect on such issues. They do say that Christians must "occupy" until the Lord comes and that supporting Israel is a basic biblical imperative, citing Genesis 12:3 as their proof text: "I will bless those who bless you, and whoever curses you I will curse; and all peoples on earth will be blessed through you" (NIV). But neither observation says anything about what constitutes responsible action when historical outcomes are essentially determined.

Obviously, many evangelicals do not want to do anything to put themselves at cross purposes with God over Israel and the end times. The tendency is for many evangelicals to idealize Israel and believe that it can do no wrong. Some evangelicals have demonized the Palestinians: because they are the enemies of the modern State of Israel, they are also the enemies of God and the servants of Satan.

When evangelicals force all the complicated issues in the Middle East through the tight grid of their prophetic views, they can lose the ability to think critically and ethically about what is really going on there. For example, many evangelicals are reluctant even to consider the ethical issues involved in the Israeli occupation of Palestinian land and their 1982 invasion and occupation of southern Lebanon. Many Christians—mainline Protestants, Roman Catholics, and evangelicals among them—believe that Israel has some hard explaining to do.

While Jews have a right to be secure within their own borders, do they have the right to seize other people's land, occupy their territory, ignore their rights of self-determination, and bulldoze or blow up the homes and businesses of Palestinian families? Certainly the relationship between Jews and Palestinians in Israel poses difficult questions, and people of good will may disagree about what is justifiable when survival is at stake. But for prophetic reasons, many evangelicals seem unable to entertain the possibility that Israel may be at fault in some way for the stalemate in the region. Evangelicals need to consider whether believing in Bible prophecy absolves them of grappling with issues of right and wrong. Does having a handle on the prophetic details allow them to turn a blind eye to injustice? Do the ends justify the means, just because the ends have been prophesied? Richard Cizik of the National Association of Evangelicals believes that most evangelicals simply have not thought through the issue of Jewish settlements in Palestinian territories. Maybe it is time they start.

Of course, premillennialists are not the only Christians who struggle with issues of human responsibility and divine providence. These are tough issues and worth thinking through. Answers do not come easily. How do human beings participate with God in unfolding history? Drawing lines on a prophetic chart is easy in comparison to unpacking the complexities of the divine-human relationship within the historical process.

The most serious issue that grows out of the relationship between evangelicals and Israel is whether the connection has helped or hindered the peace process. Because of their prophetic views, evangelicals are often less than optimistic about the prospects for peace. For instance, Jerry Falwell sounded downright scornful of the Camp David peace accords that were brokered by fellow evangelical Jimmy Carter in 1979. "In spite of the rosy and utterly unrealistic expectations by our government, this treaty will not be a lasting treaty. . . . You and I know that there's not going to be any real peace in the Middle East until the Lord Jesus sits down upon the throne of David in Jerusalem."

Falwell and other evangelicals have a right to be skeptical. Agreements have been fragile. But 20 years is not bad for a Middle East peace treaty. Even so, no one really expects any human peace accord to be "lasting." Most are only temporary. But that does not mean that they are worthless. The pessimistic attitude of many other evangelicals toward peace in the Middle East does not give even a temporary peace much of a chance. And it certainly does not honor Jesus' words "Blessed are the peacemakers." No peace is perfect; no peace lasts forever. But how can anyone be sure that we are so close to the end that peacemaking is a waste of time?

Part of the problem is the overconfidence evangelicals have about their prophetic views. Bible teachers are not inerrant; and they have changed their minds often. The history of prophetic interpretation shows that the Devil is in the details. Premillennialist prophecy pundits have been wrong over and over again about identifying Antichrist, setting dates for the Rapture, and a host of other things. Nobody anticipated the demise of the Soviet empire or most aspects of the Gulf War. When history takes unexpected turns, the experts have to make adjustments, redraw their maps, and come out with new editions. History is still full of surprises—so why make categorical statements about what cannot happen between Israel and her neighbors?

A new generation of dispensationalist scholars has toned down the excesses and sensationalism of its predecessors. "Progressive dispensationalists," though seeing a future for national Israel, are less inclined to engage in map drawing and categorical predictions. When one is teaching or writing for a well-defined religious community, speculating about the future is one thing; but when one is engaging in political advocacy with far-reaching consequences, it is another. The future is in God's hands; in the end, Jesus wins. But getting to that point may be more complicated and full of surprises than many people think. It is time for a strategy of humility and hope. CT

Timothy Weber is professor of church history and dean at Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, Lombard, Illinois.

Brother

Andrew's

Boldest

Mission Yet:

"Smuggling" Jesus

Brother Andrew said once, "Show me a closed door and I will tell you how you can get in." (He added, "I won't, however, promise you a way to get out.") Erstwhile "God's Smuggler" (and author, with John and Elizabeth Sherrill, of the book by that name), Andrew goes to places most of us avoid to interact with people most of us dismiss in order to aid Christians in circumstances most of us know little or nothing about. He founded the (aptly named) Open Doors ministry to champion the cause of the suffering church around the world and to facilitate his enigmatic ventures of goodwill. Both he and the ministry have come a long way since the 1950s when he started smuggling desperately needed Bibles to Christians behind the Iron Curtain, hiding them in the back seat of his beat-up Volkswagen Beetle.

This year Brother Andrew turned 70, celebrated 40 years of marriage to his wife, Corry, and welcomed their first grandchild. He will tell you, looking back on his life, that his dreams have come true. Open Doors has made a significant impact and has grown into a force he never imagined: "The curtains have come down in the communist world. That is what I worked for. I am very happy about that."

God's Smuggler introduced his burden for Christians behind the Iron Curtain to fellow believers all over the world, which created a network of support that multiplied the reach of Open Doors. Today the ministry has offices in 20 countries and 200 full-time workers. (Brother Andrew serves as president emeritus.) Through Open Doors, Brother Andrew has brought Bibles and Christian materials to struggling churches in the one-time communist Eastern bloc, to China, Cuba, Vietnam, Africa, and Latin America. They have sponsored "congresses" (like the Love Africa Congress in the 1970s that brought together leaders from all over the continent for prayer and ministry support), prayer campaigns (such as Seven Years of Prayer for the Soviet Union that began in the early 1980s), and "projects" (Project Pearl delivered clandestinely a million Bibles to China in 1981 and Project Crossfire distributed Christian literature throughout Latin America in 1985).

Brother Andrew's plea: That Palestinian children (left) and Islamic leaders (like Chief Justice of Pakistan Nasim Hasan Shah, above) can answer the question "Who is God?"

nto Muslim Hearts

In this decade, Open Doors has sponsored Project Samuel, which supplied a million schoolchildren in the former Soviet Union with their first Bibles; distributed 20,000 "unofficial" copies of a Chinese Study Bible to church leaders; presented the first complete Albanian Bible to the president there; and initiated Ten Years of Prayer for the Church in the Muslim World.

In 1997 alone, Open Doors distributed 814,041 Bibles; 210,908 New Testaments; 87,606 Gospels; 650,843 "spiritual books"; 387,050 other forms of Christian literature; and trained tens of thousands of pastors and lay leaders in seminars and workshops. (This does not include their visits to imprisoned Christians, emergency help for families of martyrs, church repairs, medical aid, legal support, relocation assistance, vocational training, and just plain being there. A church leader in Lebanon recalls the time when his home was bombed; as he staggered amidst the rubble, he saw Brother Andrew making his way through the wreckage just to be there with him.)

But there is one dream (with two parts) that remains unrealized: The church in the Middle East is dwindling, and the Islamic strongholds are not being penetrated with the gospel. "Communism proclaimed that there is no God, which is stupid and schizophrenic," he says, "because they say there is no God, and then they fight him. The challenge now is not that proclamation; it's the challenge of Who is God?"

"Islam confronts us with that question."

Colliding realities

When God's Smuggler came out in 1967—powerful as it was in rallying support for the those languishing behind the Iron Curtain (it sold over 10 million copies in 27 languages)—it ended Brother Andrew's access to these countries. "I could not go back there, and it caused me a lot of heartache to even make the decision [to do] the book."

At that time, he took a trip to the Middle East. He foresaw a power shift taking place that he sensed would pose a critical challenge to the church: He anticipated the disintegration of the communist stronghold; he was witnessing the moral and spiritual collapse of the Western world; and he predicted the ascendance of Islam as both a world power and a religious force.

In 1973, during the energy crisis, the OPEC oil cartel doubled the price of a barrel of oil (from $2.55 to $5.09). Western nations gave in to the price hike, which sent the signal to these oil-producing nations that they had power. This, says Brother Andrew, became the defining moment in the realization of his prophetic insights. "Islamic eschatology teaches that in the end time, Islam will conquer and rule the world. In 1973, Islam woke up to the fact that Allah had put oil under their sand for 'such a time as this.'"

Oil, it turns out, is the lifeblood of the West, which has placed these desert kingdoms in a position of near-apocalyptic importance. This has created a complicated network of colliding realities that Western Christians face when it comes to understanding the Middle East. This network consists (in broad

The challenge now is the question

'Who is God?'

Islam confronts us with that question.

strokes) of the following aspects:

- Oil is in high demand in the West;
- Demand has heightened the power and influence of these Islamic nations;
- Islamic power and influence have shaped American politics in the region;
- Politics is driven by the requirements of a consuming culture ("The moment we discover you can run cars on water," says Brother Andrew, "we'll drop the Saudis.");
- Consuming culture has (to a greater or lesser degree) influenced the outlook of the Western church;
- The Western church has inadequately understood both the politics of the region and the religious sensibilities of Islam;
- Islam is asserting itself (both politically and religiously) and expanding its influence.

Brother Andrew says that Islam threatens the viability of Christianity in this region and internationally, not because these nations have oil (integral though that may be in this picture), but because Islam has forced the question Who is God? and Western evangelicals have been unable to answer that question.

He describes a conversation he shared with some leaders in Hamas (the fundamentalist Islamic resistance movement in the West Bank, Gaza, and East Jerusalem whose aim is to reverse Israeli occupation and establish an Islamic state in Palestine):

"I challenged the Hamas leadership about the suicide bombers, and they denied that they had suiciders. 'There is no suicide in Islam,' they said.

"Then what about the bombers in Tel Aviv and Jerusalem?"

"One man said with full conviction, 'It is religious.'"

They have an endless supply of "suiciders," Brother Andrew says, because everybody wants to go to heaven. Crying Allahu Akbar, they blow themselves up (and those around them) and are ushered straight to heaven proclaiming "God is greater!"

"Greater than whom?" Brother Andrew asks. "Than Jesus, than Jehovah, than the God of the Christians," he says. "One Muslim terrorist, before he got himself killed, made a video recording of himself. He said, 'Our love for death is greater than your love for life.'"

"Unless we come willingly to enter into dialogue—not to win, but to witness to the point of laying down our lives—we won't get anywhere. This is what I saw the Russian and the Chinese Christians do under communism: lay down their lives in the gulag, in the re-education camps, in the labor camps. That's why the church won.

"We've entered a very difficult time of total misunderstanding, miscommunication, misinformation, hostility, and not talking to each other.

"I want to change that," he says.

So his most recent—and perhaps most controversial—ministry focus has shifted to the Middle East where he witnesses boldly about Jesus (by invitation) in the gatherings of Hamas and Hizbollah (the latter—the Party of Allah—is a Lebanese fundamentalist movement within Islam) and extends encouragement and solidarity to the dwindling Christian population in the land where Jesus walked.

Fleet-footed troublemaker

Brother Andrew's propensity to defy the odds has contributed to his being widely misunderstood. The answers to the many questions his activity provokes (What is he doing hobnobbing with terrorists? What about the ethics of smuggling? Why doesn't he use a last name?) are grounded in who Brother Andrew is: he is a no-nonsense doer, with no patience for committees. This can be seen in both his nature and his nurture.

Brother Andrew is, by nature, unfazed by the prospect of dying. When his beloved older brother Bas lay dying of tuberculosis, the young Andrew (age 11) determined that "if Bas was going to die, then I wanted to die too." He threw himself on top of his dying brother and "kissed him again and again on the mouth." (Bas died a few months later while the young Andrew remained "healthy as ever." He felt as if God had "betrayed [him] twice.")

He is, by nature, spirited and adventurous. When the Germans bombed an airstrip four kilometers from his home in Holland on his twelfth birthday (May 1940), he acted out his self-confessed "fantasies of resistance" by sneaking out at night, taking the family's highly treasured sugar ration, and dumping it into the gas tank of the "fat little German lieutenant." "Everyone in the village was amused when the lieutenant's staff car began to give him trouble."

He is, by nature, a risk taker. On another occasion during the occupation, late at night he tossed a cherry bomb onto the lieutenant's doorstep, purposefully waiting until the village patrol was in sight. ("I thought it would be fun to have these old men in their heavy boots run after me." He was the fastest runner in his hometown.) In his fantasizing, he didn't reckon on guns. When one soldier cocked and aimed his, the young boy tossed the firecracker and bolted. Running in zigzags, darting over bridges, and taking cover in the cabbage patch, he evaded them and was "elated by this success," which inspired him to start brazenly "discharging volleys" in broad daylight.

He is, by nature, stubborn and impulsive. At the age of 17, wanting to be treated like a man, he joined the army and broke his mother's heart. ("She had seen enough of armies," he said.) While in training, an officer asked him, on the spot, if he could drive a Bren carrier (a tank). Not wanting to appear weak and dumb (and feeling sure he could figure it out), he said that he could—failing to mention that he didn't even know how to drive a car.

He was right when he thought he could drive it; he just couldn't figure out how to stop it. The tank quickly picked up speed: "Arms flailing and feet flying, I tried every button and lever I could find. . . . [A]nd with one last surge of power we plowed into the row of Bren carriers parked at the curb. All seven of them bucked forward, each slamming against the other until we came to rest, hissing and smoking."

But other external forces—what I refer to as his "nurture"—have tempered his extremes.

For example, by "nurture," he has reckoned with calamity. The German occupation meant hardship and squalor for Andrew's family: all electricity was reserved for the Germans, so the family's oil lamps were fueled by oil they made from cabbage seeds; the Germans took all the vegetables from their gardens, so they ate tulip bulbs; the military took over Andrew's school building when he was in the sixth grade, so he never completed his education.

By nurture, he has been softened by personal loss. On the day he left home for the army to serve in Indonesia after the war, as he said good-bye to his mother, she pulled her little Bible from her apron. Handing it to him she asked, "Will you read it, Andrew?" (She had taken him to church every Sunday as a boy, but he had always managed to sneak out and enjoy the morning skating the frozen canals or sitting in the fields.)

He put the Bible in his duffle bag "as far down as it could go" and promptly forgot it. That encounter was the last time he saw his mother.

He has, by "nurture," been broken by his own misguided adventures. He found himself in a situation in the army when he realized that he had been wrong about this "adventure." He and his company had been in combat in Indonesia for weeks when they entered a village that was riddled with land mines. When they stumbled into the mines, fatigued and disoriented, the company "went berserk:" "Without orders, without reasoning . . . we shot everything in sight"—including unarmed civilians.

"I wanted to kill myself after that," he said. And he bought a bright, yellow straw hat that he wore into combat, making himself an easy target for enemy fire. He was eventually shot, but not killed, as he had hoped. The bullet shattered his ankle, making the fleet-footed, dare-devil Dutch boy more or less a cripple.

These external forces eventually broke him and precipitated an inner crisis. Standing at his mother's grave after he returned, he said, "I did read your Bible, Mama. Not at first, but I did read it.

"Mama, what am I going to do now? I feel so useless. And guilty. Answer me, Mama."

No answer came from the grave that day, but his answers did eventually come. At one point, during his weeks in occupational therapy at a nearby veterans' hospital, a young woman invited Andrew to attend a tent revival. Motivated more by the desire to escape the hospital than by spiritual sensitivities, Andrew and a friend attended the meeting. By the time they entered, they were giddy with amusement, having finished off half a bottle of alcohol they had snuck in. They sat in the rear of the tent so they could finish off the rest. They choked back the laughter when a "funny-looking man" took to the podium.

Andrew's hilarity stopped short, however, when the speaker announced from the podium that "there were two people in the congregation who were bound by powers they couldn't control." Later in prayer the speaker prayed for "our brethren over whom foreign spirits have gained influence." He ended the service with the song "Let My People Go."

Occasional breakdowns: Brother Andrew's Volkswagen Beetle was once his sole means of getting Bibles to suffering Christians.

Andrew did not "go forward" that night. But the song's words—"Let them go; let me go"—haunted him for days, to the extent that he picked up the Bible his mother gave him, which he hadn't looked at in years. "All the passages that had seemed so puzzling when I struggled through them before read now like a fast-paced action yarn."

He spent so much time in his bed reading his Bible that his father and siblings were alarmed. "Papa says it's shell shock," his sister said to him. He started attending church—this time to learn something (and not to mock the speaker). But as sincere as his newfound spiritual interest was, he couldn't apprehend the faith in a way that made it seem real to him.

Then, during a winter night in 1950 (Andrew was 21) when a storm descended, he seemed to hear in the wind: "Let my people go. . . ." It was as if the wind was telling him what he needed to do. He prayed, "Lord, if you will show me the way, I will follow you." In that moment, he says, "I let go of my ego," and all those no-holds-barred attributes that he possessed "by nature" were under new command. (He opted not to tell his family about his conversion because, he said, "they were worried enough about me already.")

Gospel with a G-O

He spent two years at the Worldwide Evangelization Crusade (WEC) missionary school in Glasgow, Scotland (1953–55), taking Bible classes, systematic theology, homiletics, linguistics, and car mechanics. As "an exercise of faith" the students (in groups of five) were sent out throughout Scotland on a four-week missionary tour with only a one-pound note. They were expected to pay for their transportation, lodging, food, any advertising, and renting of halls (plus refreshments); they were not allowed to take up offerings or mention monetary needs; and they were expected to remit the one pound upon their return. (Andrew's team came back with enough extra money to send some to WEC missions overseas.)

As he prepared to return to Holland in 1955, after completing his schooling, he stumbled upon a magazine that advertised a youth festival sponsored by the Communist party to be held in Warsaw, Poland, that summer. He wrote and told them he was training to become a Christian missionary and asked if they would allow him to attend the festival to exchange ideas. (They would talk about socialism; he would talk about Jesus.)

"Most certainly," was their reply, and the festival organizers gave him a student discount. This trip was to be the turning point in Andrew's life.

He visited an unregistered (and thus struggling) Baptist church while he was there and was unexpectedly asked to bring a message. Afterward, the pastor said, "Even if you had not said a word, just seeing you would have meant so much. We feel at times as if we are all alone in our struggle."

Andrew pondered the situation of this church, with hardly any young people, comparing it to the other more "successful" "state approved" churches he had visited. He also recalled a student march he had seen with the young, robust, clean-cut socialists marching eight abreast. "They marched singing, and their voices were like shouts."

His heart ached for the Communist youth who had so zealously given themselves to this cause, and he was troubled by the lack of resources and support that the nonstate-approved churches faced, which diminished their numbers and stifled their ability to grow in spiritual maturity. He asked God, "What should I do?" He found his answer in the Book of Revelation. The words jumped out at him: "Awake and strengthen what remains, and is on the point of death" (Rev. 3:2).

From that moment to this, "serving the suffering church worldwide" has defined Brother Andrew's (and later Open Doors') mandate. This meant, he says, "We find out what a church needs, [and] we come back and supply it, whatever they ask." In most cases, during the early years in the Eastern bloc, they desperately needed Bibles. He prayed before each border crossing: "Lord, in my luggage I have Scripture that I want to take to your children across this border. When you were on earth, You made the blind to see. Now, I pray, make the seeing eyes blind." Sometimes he would lay a few Bibles in open view on the back seat of the car and answer honestly when officials asked what they were (to disarm suspicion that there might be more). As far as was possible, he chose to operate within the bounds of the law. When the civil law co-opted God's law, however, he would "obey God rather than man." (In 1981 he orchestrated the secret delivery of one million Bibles to China on a single night. The idea came from the Christians in China, and they told Brother Andrew's team how, when, and where to do it. That was "very illegal," he says.)

His desire to go to the suffering Christians ("you can't spell the gospel or even God without first spelling go") ultimately compelled him to stop using his last name. The more he traveled (and had an impact), the more difficult it was becoming for him to register at hotels and to cross borders. "Anonymity was becoming a problem. If I kept using my real name when I spoke, wouldn't I jeopardize my freedom to come and go across borders?" Last names had "almost ceased to exist among Christians" behind the Iron Curtain. So for all these reasons, "God's smuggler" decided to drop his last name. Henceforth he has been known only as Brother Andrew.

Where Jesus walked

His mandate to "strengthen what remains and is on the point of death" has led him to prisons, refugee shelters, and house churches in the farthest reaches of the globe. But most recently it has led him to the land of Jesus—specifically, to the churches that are struggling for survival in the West Bank and Gaza.

"I have never seen so much despair that leads to running away, and to violence, and to conversion to Islam," says Brother Andrew of the Christians in Bethlehem. "There is one tiny evangelical church in all of Gaza, and I preach there every year. Every time I'm there the numbers are down. The last time I preached a couple of months ago, there were only 12 Christians."

Fifty years ago the number of Christians living in "the Holy Land" (Israel, the West Bank, and Gaza) hovered around 30 percent, according to Brother Andrew (other sources estimate 10 percent). Today a generous estimate would put the Christian population at 2.3 percent of the 5.7 million Israelis and 2.5 million Palestinians. (Andrew thinks it is more like 1.8 percent.) Some of this is due to the massive influx of Jewish immigration in recent years, but there has also been a significant exodus of Christians, who endure severe hardship if they choose to stay.

"If a bomb goes off or a boy throws a stone, then they close all the schools," he says. "The schools are closed most of the time. The [Bethlehem] Bible College was closed." And even when they are open, very often students and staff cannot get to schools if they are coming from outside the area. So the cumulative loss of days adds up. The high unemployment rate in Gaza and the West Bank makes finding jobs very difficult. So, on one level, diplomas, when they are earned, "are worthless"—not academically so much as in the sense that many graduates feel, What is the use of having a diploma if I cannot get out of my 'prison'?

"There is no electricity for long periods of time because they cut it off," says Andrew. "They shut off the water, so they take their laundry to another village. They can't travel—a farmer cannot go to his field because in between is a piece of Israel that he cannot cross."

Unemployment in Bethlehem hovers around 50 percent, according to Jane Handal (quoted in the Religious News Service [RNS]), an architect and Catholic Christian who lives in Bethlehem. "All the younger generation want to leave. All who study abroad stay where they are and try to find work. Opportunities are rare here." Many Christian families who have lived there for centuries (some since Pentecost) have decided to leave, "besieged by wars, unemployment, and the unstable peace between Arabs and Jews," writes Steve Chambers (for RNS).

Heaped upon the church's struggle for survival is the insult of Christian tourists and pilgrims "walking where Jesus walked" while sidestepping their hurting brothers and sisters in the West Bank and Gaza. "Pilgrims come and go. They visit churches, visit the stones, but not the living church," says Claudette Habesch, who serves as secretary general of the Caritas Jerusalem charities office (quoted by Chambers). "Many pilgrims come and go without ever realizing there are Christians living in the Holy Land."

But Brother Andrew's concern for the dwindling Christian presence in the West Bank and Gaza encompasses only one aspect of his larger concern about the exponential and unchallenged rise of Islam in the Middle East. Muslims' "influence is growing while [Christians] are declining in influence," he says. "Christians are losing ground in the Muslim world."

The rise of Islam has remained largely unchecked

I tell them, 'You don't have to blow yourself to pieces.

There's another way.

because of negligible Christian activity in this region. ("There is one missionary to every 250,000 Muslims," says Brother Andrew.) Both of these phenomena (the rise of Islam and the marginal Christian response) can be understood in terms of a modification of the "network of colliding realities" mentioned earlier:

- Islam is asserting itself because of increased prosperity from oil and meager Christian activity by the Western church;
- The negligible Christian activity is due, in part, to the outlook aroused by the politics of the region and a general lack of understanding;
- The politics of the region exists to secure access to oil in order to accommodate Western lifestyle demands;
- Western lifestyle demands have distorted both the Western view (including the Western church's view) of the Middle East and the Middle Eastern understanding of the West (including Western Christianity).

This is what Brother Andrew means when he says that Christians in the West and Muslims in the Middle East have "entered a very difficult time of total misunderstanding, miscommunication, misinformation, and hostility."

As he has come into relationship with many Muslims, including leaders of Hamas and Hizbollah, he has found that they are surprisingly open to Christianity—that is, once they understand what it is really all about. He has been invited to speak at gatherings of both groups, and in one instance, drew a crowd of 400.

There is another way: By loving Muslims, he shows them they don't have to die in jihad to see God.

"You see," he says, "every Muslim is afraid of the judgment day because, in their concept of good deeds and bad deeds, the bad angel is gloating: 'Your bad deeds are a lot greater than your good deeds.' Every Muslim lives under that condemnation and there is only one way out—and every Muslim knows it: to die in jihad."

"We must confront them with a greater determination," he says. Like the time he told some leaders in Hizbollah that he wanted to exchange his life for a hostage they were holding. Brother Andrew said, "Chain me to the radiator in the dark basement and let him go. He has suffered enough. Let him go back to his wife and children."

The Hizbollah leader's "eyes almost popped."

"I don't know how you can say that," he said.

"That's the spirit of Jesus," Andrew said. "He gave his life to let me go. Now I come to give my life so he can go." ("He did not follow my advice, but we became friends.")

This same leader came back to Andrew later and said, "Andrew, you Christians have a problem."

"What is it?"

"You Christians are not following the life of Jesus anymore."

"What do you think is the solution?"

"You must go back to the book, the New Testament."

"I figured if we Christians could go back to our book, we would obey the scriptural injunction: love your enemy. The moment I love my enemy," he says, "I have no enemy."

"I have lectured officially at the Hamas University on the subject 'What is real Christianity?' Every time I mentioned the prophet Muhammad the front row of Hamas leaders would whisper, 'Peace be upon him.'"

"You can have that, I thought. But I am proclaiming Christ, and peace comes through him."

"I stand there and I open the New Testament and I read about the cross, about forgiveness, and this concept of God's love. Forgiveness is unknown. Allah forgives or he does not forgive, according to his will. They know nothing about the assurance of salvation. They're such uncertain people. Why are we not crying out with compassion and pity on a billion people like that? We're not dealing with structures. They are human people that have the same fear and pain and anxiety and love that I have."

"According to 1 Peter 3:15, we're supposed to 'give an account of the things that you hope and believe.' As we are transparent, and not political, they will accept you as their brother or sister, and together you can study the Scriptures and find out who God is."

"I tell them, 'You don't have to blow yourself to pieces. There's another way.'"

A plea to the church

Brother Andrew cites the last verse in Hebrews 11 to articulate his appeal to the Western church: "They [the suffering church] will not be perfect without us." But he puts on an addendum: "Nor will we be able to survive in the so-called free world without them." Why? Because the plight of our struggling brothers and sisters in conjunction with the rise of Islam is forcing the Western church to answer the question, Who is God?

Islam rises in strength and numbers and the Christian presence dwindles, either because of outright persecution and discrimination or lack of governmental support. And there is little or no advocacy asserted by Western Christians for their struggling fellow believers. So Islam proclaims the victory of Allah over the God of the Christians, whose people are weak and whose churches are dying.

Brother Andrew extends a two-sided plea to American Christians. First, he asks that we actively advocate on behalf of Christians in the Middle East and offer financial support to the floundering Christian institutions there. That means, for example, when Christians visit Israel, they should seek out and encourage struggling brothers and sisters, even if that means going off the standard tourist trail.

"Christian evangelicals could make a point of insisting at the tourist office that they go to places like the Bethlehem Bible College," he says.

"I took a group to the Palestinian hospital on top of the Mount of Olives. The Muslim director was very helpful. We met a number of born-again Christian nurses in the hospital. It was the highlight of the whole trip."

Christians will be flocking to the Holy Land, especially as the new millennium approaches, many enamored with end-times prophecies. But, Andrew says, "The end-times prophecies can never be fulfilled if there is no church in the Middle East. There is no 'holy city,' only 'holy people.' There is a living church, and so there is a responsibility."

"We have a surplus of liberty, of knowledge, of goods, of resources that fit exactly their need," he says. "If we do not reach out to them, we are not fulfilling our God-given purposes for life. God gave us this for them. But keeping it, we commit spiritual suicide. I spoke at a prayer conference some years ago and said, 'Stop praying for revival [in America]' because God will not create a monster of the body of Christ by letting half of it grow huge beyond proportion and the other half shrivel into oblivion."

Brother Andrew's other plea involves becoming more aware of and concerned for Muslims. "Nothing will change until we begin to spell Islam 'I Sincerely Love All Muslims.' We Christians are not praying for Muslims. One [Christian] brother in prison told me that he was praying for his torturers. We are not even praying for our IRS men or gang members. It's one reason why America is in a mess—we're not praying for those who are 'enemies' of our society. We have to learn that lesson from the suffering church."

"Get prayer letters, read books about persecution—make them bestsellers!—and begin to pray. Very soon God will say, 'Why don't you answer your own prayer?'"

Not going to places that are more easily avoided, not interacting with people who are more comfortably dismissed, and not advocating for believers who struggle in situations we know little or nothing about will leave unanswered the question that Islam poses to the West. And going, interacting, and advocating can be, as Brother Andrew puts it, "a dangerous business."

"But the doors are not closed," he says. "Only when you are there can God tell you what you should do. Jesus said in Acts 1:8 to go. He didn't say 'Go, if the doors are open'; or 'Go, if you have an invitation or a red carpet treatment.'"

"He said, 'Go,' because people need his Word."

CT

The Muslim Challenge

One of the earliest prayers in the Bible is Abraham's prayer for his other son: "If only Ishmael might live under your blessing!" (Gen. 17:18). I believe that if more Christians will pray this prayer today, we will begin to have an impact for Jesus upon the world of Islam.

Today many of us have created an enemy image of the Muslims. They are all terrorists who hijack our planes, blow up our embassies, and take innocent people hostage. Not only is this untrue, but the very minute we view them this way we make it impossible to reach them with the gospel. God cannot use us.

Every trip I've made to the Middle East, beginning with my earliest visits to Israel and Jordan in the mid-1960s, has been an education. More often than not it has been a reeducation, because I've had to unlearn so many of the things I've been taught by Western church leaders. By being there, seeing the situation for myself, and talking with many people face to face, I've gained an entirely new perspective on this part of the world and its various peoples. Let me give a few examples.

- I learned that there are many Christians among the Palestinians. When I took time to speak with these fellow believers, they poured out their pain to me—specifically the pain of not being recognized by the Western church as part of the body of Christ.

- I learned that the percentage of Christians in the Middle East is shrinking at an alarming rate. For a variety of reasons, large numbers of them have emigrated during this century, and the trend continues.

- I learned that just as Christians come in many varieties, so do Muslims. There are many Muslim groups and sects, and they disagree and fight with one another in much the same way Catholics and Protestants have fought over the centuries. Some interpret the Muslim teaching of jihad, or holy war, to mean literal war and even terrorism, while others believe it simply means they should strive to obey Qur'anic teachings.

- I learned that the church in the Middle East has not figured out how to handle Muslim converts. The problem is that in many Muslim countries, conversion to Christianity is illegal. Muslims who accept Christ can be dismissed from their families, can have their wives and children taken from them, can be sent to jail or to their death. As more and more Christian missions begin to reach out to the Muslim world, this matter of "convert care" will become a key issue.

- I have seen that there is a genuine openness to Jesus

among some Muslim groups. The Qur'an considers Abraham, his sons, Moses, David, Solomon, and Jesus to be prophets, and it recognizes the Torah, the Psalms, and the Gospels as holy Scriptures—though the Qur'an is considered to be the last revelation.

We've seen that there is a startling openness to the gospel among some of these people. But unless we go to them now in love and influence them in a Christian direction, the ongoing cycle of violence and revenge will force them to take hard-line, extremist positions. They will come to us—the "Christian" West—in judgment.

Though most of my recent travel has been in the Middle East, I have also visited other Muslim countries. Usually the body of believers I found was small and badly in need of encouragement, but very much alive.

The situation in Iran remains very tense, for example, because of the rise of Muslim fundamentalism and radicalism and polarization. And the church is learning how to resist fear and grow in boldness and confidence. Maybe because of all the suffering the country has endured, Iran will be one of the first countries to reap the benefit of the gospel.

A recent experience I had at the Israeli airport in Tel Aviv symbolized both the problem in the world today and the solution that can be found only in Christ.

"So where have you been?" the uniformed [inspector] said sternly.

"I have been to Bethlehem," I said, knowing she wouldn't be happy about it. (Bethlehem is in the West Bank, Palestinian territory occupied by Israel.)

"Where else?"

"Kiryat Arba."

Her eyes flashed in disbelief. (Kiryat Arba is a very rightist Jewish settlement.) "What were you doing there?"

"The son of a Dutch friend of mine lives there, and he was recently shot by a Palestinian terrorist. I wanted to console the family."

"Bethlehem one day and Kiryat Arba the next—that is quite a change in location, Sir."

"Yes," I said, "but they are both about people who suffer."

Muslims are not a vast, faceless ethnic group to project our hatred upon, not a new enemy to replace the Communists, but children of Abraham, people created in the image of God, people in need of a Savior whose name is Jesus.

Excerpted from The Calling, by Brother Andrew with Verne Becker, published by Moorings, © 1996. Used with permission from Open Doors International, P.O. Box 27001, Santa Ana, CA 92799.

The Unforgettable Story of a Man Who Discovered the Adventure of

THE CALLING

BROTHER
ANDREW

Author of THE CALLING
A Personal and Spiritual Journey with Verne Becker

Satan with a Stethoscope

Novels you don't want to read before surgery.

ou're in the hospital. Your spouse has gone home to take care of the kids; the room is dark; you're disoriented and doped with painkillers. Medical personnel have been doing strange and inexplicable things to you all day. You wake up at 2 A.M. and find an unfamiliar white-clad figure injecting something into your IV line. Do you (a) close your eyes and drift back off in childlike trust, or (b) sit up and bellow, "Stop! Stop!?"

It depends on what you've been reading. If you are planning a hospital stay anytime soon, don't put a medical thriller in your overnight bag.

The doctor as compassionate healer, worthy of unquestioning trust, has been taking a beating ever since Robin Cook's Coma hit the shelves in 1977, and the trend shows no sign of stopping.

"When a doctor does go wrong," Sherlock Holmes once remarked to Watson, "he is the first of criminals. He has nerve and he has knowledge." This view of the doctor as occupying a plane above common humanity (Holmes's opponent in "The Speckled Band," Dr. Grimesby Roylott, can bend a poker double with his bare hands) persists.

But it is not the nerve or the poker-bending muscle that intimidates us layfolk; it's the knowledge. Only doctors know all the secrets of the body, including the ones they aren't telling us. We can only hope they put this knowledge to work for us instead of for themselves.

Greed: the great corrupter of the profession. Mainstream medical thrillers—those you are likely to find in what the book trade refers to as the "ABA market" (American Booksellers Association), in contrast to the "CBA market" (Christian Booksellers Association)—are almost entirely centered on doctors who use their knowledge for gain. Cook, a physician who has been on leave from the Massachusetts Eye and Ear

S U S A N W I S E B A U E R

Infirmity since he hit the bestseller list, pops out a thriller every year or so, and his string of novels provides a useful sort of index to the depredations of greed.

In 1987's Outbreak, hemorrhagic fever appears in three separate chains of hospitals that provide an innovative service: managed care. Widespread panic and a sudden drop-off in business follow. Eventually, we discover that a right-wing group of private practitioners is to blame; they have conspired to spread disease in HMOs in an attempt to protect their own patient base. Marissa, Outbreak's perky CDC investigator, looks at the head bad guy and sees his "expensive silk shirt, the heavy gold cuff links, the tasseled Gucci loafers. . . . It all represented the conspicuous consumption of a wealthy doctor, now fearful of the new medical competition, of changing times, of medicine no longer being a seller's market."

Greed is also central to 1995's Contagion, which is practically the same novel in reverse. This time the good guys are the private doctors who've been driven out of business by the managed-care giants: specifically, one Jack Stapleton, who lost his ophthalmology practice to the huge for-profit chain AmeriCare. AmeriCare sweeps through Middle America, "gobbling up practices and hospitals with bewildering speed" and destroying the quality of patient care. When odd epidemics start appearing in AmeriCare facilities, Stapleton hunts down the villain: another managed-care chain, spreading germs to put the competitor out of business.

Medical thrillers go through fashions—fetal-tissue research, euthanasia, Ebola, genetic tinkering, managed care—and the current fashion appears to be illegal transplant organs. Take, for example, the most recent novels of doctors-turned-writers Tess Gerritsen and Leonard Goldberg. In Gerritsen's Life Support, doctors grow genetically altered embryos in the wombs of hired prostitutes. The embryos turn into blobs of tissue studded with dozens of pituitary glands; the doctors abort the pregnancies and then transplant these glands (for a substantial fee) into rich elderly patients who want their youth back. This would work fine, except that Gerritsen's greedy doctors eventually step over the line by killing a couple of adults, which leads to their detection by a perky female doctor named Toby. And in Goldberg's Deadly Harvest, a perky female doctor named Joanna goes searching for a liver for her critically ill sister. Instead, she discovers an organization that grows babies for organ donation. "Oh, my God!" screams Joanna. "The children . . . are being kept like animals, to be sacrificed when needed?" The villain, a greedy doctor, shrugs: "It's a moneymaker." Fashions come and go; greed always remains.

Medical thrillers have only recently appeared in the CBA market, and the greater number are written by nondoctors. Alton Gansky's By My Hands and Marked for Mercy (1996 and 1998 respectively) are billed as medical suspense. By My Hands revolves around the hunt for a mysterious Healer who performs several cures at a local hospital and then disappears; Marked for Mercy deals with physician-assisted suicide. Gansky himself is a pastor, not a doctor, and it shows. In By My Hands, the putative central character is Dr. Rachel Tremaine, a woman surgeon who finds nurses a "chronic annoyance" and treats her patients with "impatience and disdain." One of those patients turns out to be pastor Adam Bridger. Despite his emergency appendectomy, Bridger visits parishioners in the hospital, convinces a Jehovah's Witness to accept a blood transfusion, outargues atheists and New Age philosophers, and even convinces the antagonistic Rachel that a minister's training is just as rigorous as a doctor's. ("A theological education is not a cakewalk. . . . Most ministers with doctorates have a working knowledge of Hebrew . . . Koine Greek . . . and at least one modern language." "What's your point?" Rachel inquires.)

Gansky's point is clear by the end of the book, when the villain is unmasked: he's the manager of a traveling word-of-faith evangelist, determined to find the mysterious Healer and make a mint by organizing gigantic healing services. He is, in fact, the ecclesiastical equivalent of an ABA thriller-villain: a man who uses his calling for personal gain. But the novel is church-centered, not doctor-centered. Gansky's Marked for Mercy makes several good and sometimes unexpected points about physician-assisted suicide, but it's not a true medical thriller either (even though the central character is a perky female doctor with fawn hair and blue eyes). Rather, it's a mystery that happens to involve doctors.

Sigmund Brouwer's Double Helix (1995), on the other hand, features many of the markers of an ABA thriller—an evil doctor who grows mainstream of the sp

make the spiritua

babies in surrogate wombs, a maverick independent hero (Slater Ellis), and a perky female investigator named Paige (she isn't a doctor, but she has spectacular red hair, and legs that go "to her shoulders"). But while the ABA bad guys want money, Van Klees is trying to create a superrace. As he explains to hero Slater Ellis:

"Any genetic change you make in an embryo will be passed on to the next generation. I was laying the groundwork for future scientists to evolve us into superhumans. . . . In the long run, we can mold the human species to our own vision."

Van Klees is a more chilling villain than his mainstream counterparts; he's an actual zealot, driven by something other than gain. But Brouwer is a writer, not a doctor, and Double Helix has more adventure than medicine in it.

Harry Lee Kraus, Jr., a general surgeon who practices in Virginia, wrote the first

CBA medical thriller, the unfortunately titled Stainless Steel Hearts (1994). The title is supposed to serve as a pun; the villain of the story, cardiothoracic surgeon Michael Simons, is literally "stealing" the hearts of aborted fetuses for his research. The fact that this pun made it into the title of the book points up a difficulty with all of Kraus's books: He needs a strong editorial hand. His medical scenes are vivid, and he plots well, but his point of view swings wildly back and forth, he inserts large chunks of backstory in the middle of his action, he steps out of his characters to editorialize, and when his bad guys swear, they emit annoying strings of %$#*&.

But Kraus's medicine (and his capacity for creative paranoia) rivals that of his ABA colleagues. In Stainless Steel Hearts, evil doctor Simons theorizes that hearts from late second-trimester abortions could be transplanted into infants born with congenital defects. To test this procedure, he teams up with a local abortionist to obtain fetal hearts. Together, the two of them encourage women to wait as late as possible before aborting; Simons then experiments on the still-living fetuses.

ers show little awareness l dimension of greed; Christian thrillers ension all too visible.

What's behind the evil? Like Brouwer's Van Klees, Simons isn't driven by greed alone. In fact, he's developed an interest in New Age writings.

At first he began with some meditation techniques that he learned at a local university seminar. Occasionally during a time of meditation, or when he was envisioning himself in a position of great influence, he would gain the impression of an idea or thought that seemed to originate outside his body. Later he began having a strong sense of guidance in some of his research.

Money considerations aren't completely absent from Kraus's thrillers. In Fated Genes, pediatric surgeon Weber Tyson rations care for retarded infants, justifying himself with the explanation that "debilitated infants won't have to live on as needless burdens on an already overtaxed society." But it turns out that Tyson is being manipulated by Lenore Kingsley, president of United Biotechnical Industries. Lenore is also a Satanist who worships with a local coven, even bearing several children for sacrifice in Satanic rituals, and Tyson is simply an instrument for a demonic plan.

In Lethal Mercy, the spiritual evil gets even more obvious. As Simons (making a repeat appearance) operates on the son of his enemy, a demonic creature clings to his back and whispers in his ear; overhead, an angelic warrior stands ready to protect the child. And in The Stain, Kraus's latest book, a rich philanthropist hires doctors to create clones. But the intent behind this high-dollar project is purely spiritual: to clone DNA found on the shroud of Turin, to prove that Jesus was simply human, nothing more.

Like all too many CBA novelists, both Gansky and Kraus tend to insert "anchor" characters, ideal Christians who don't doubt, and who serve as a "normative" voice. Belle, the praying grandmother in Fated Genes, Kerri, the trauma nurse in The Stain, pastor Paul Carpenter in Marked for Mercy—they are capable of explaining God's will, too virtuous to be real ("With Kerri Barber, prayer was like breathing. . . . She enjoyed an ongoing spontaneous consciousness of God's presence in her life that many believers yearn for"), and far too ready to supply mini-Bible studies on demand ("Find Philipians chapter one," Paul Carpenter tells a character, in the time-honored tradition of Christian fiction. "Do you want to read it out loud, or shall I?").

But these books are, after all, thrillers. The characters are no more exaggerated than Cook's wicked managed-care providers, happily spreading 1918 flu virus acquired from a frozen Eskimo corpse; or Goldberg's spectacularly brilliant, beautiful, and courageous medical examiner, Joanna Blalock. The true distinctive between mainstream and Christian medical thrillers seems to lie in the deepest motivations of the evil doctors. In the ABA, the dollar is the ultimate villain. In the CBA, Satan always lurks beyond the dollar.

This is perfectly good theology. After all, in the medical-thriller villain, we see the reflection of the serpent's face. "Know enough," he whispered to Eve, "and you too will have the powers of a god. Know enough, and you can satisfy your own desires." The self-serving doctor, using knowledge to acquire instead of to heal, responds to this same temptation. The greedy physician—like the greedy lawyer, ad executive, or church administrator—is, ultimately, the servant of the Destroyer.

But how is this theme best worked out in fiction? Mainstream thrillers show little awareness of the spiritual dimension of greed; Christian thrillers make the spiritual dimension all too visible. The battle with greed is a spiritual battle, yes, but the battlefield is not the coven down the road. The fiercest skirmishes are not fought between angels and demons, hovering in the air above the operating table. The battlefield is the human heart; the war is fought out with human hands; and any novelist ignores the human face of evil at his own peril.

Consider Kraus's The Stain, which begins (like Cook's Contagion) with a managed-care giant taking over a private practice. Dr. Seth Berringer lands himself in a mess, trying to protect himself in the face of managed care's unreasonable demands. Is this a spiritual battle? Of course it is. But Kraus subordinates it to the novel's central plot, the demonic attempt to clone Jesus and destroy Christianity. As a matter of fact, when Berringer becomes a Christian, his managed-care problems seem to dissolve. He has been worried about finding work outside the Coast Care system; after his conversion, he says confidently, "I'll be returning to work soon. This town hasn't completely abandoned me. You'll see. Besides, God is in control now."

But surely a Christian medical thriller should deal, at least in passing, with the hard question: How does a Christian physician operate day-to-day in a system that defines itself by profit? Such a medical system may not have Satanists lighting candles in the corridors, but the serpent is certainly slithering through its halls. The recognition that greed, whatever form it takes, is itself a demonic force—this, in the end, is what will separate the Christian medical thriller from its mainstream equivalent.

Susan Wise Bauer's second novel, Though the Darkness Hide Thee, was recently published by Multnomah. She teaches literature at the College of William and Mary.

Putting Your Day- Reading

M

uriel Sparks's third novel, the macabre but sharply witty Memento Mori (1959), has three epigraphs; the first two by Years and Traherne are about old age, while the third from The Penny Catechism is as follows:

Q. What are the four last things to be ever remembered?

A. The four last things to be ever remembered are Death, Judgment, Hell, and Heaven.

Sparks, who was 39 before she published any fiction, had converted to Roman Catholicism five years before, calling the church "something to measure from" rather than a direct source of inspiration. But the "four last things" are not listed as such in Scripture, as eschatology had been developed by that very church out of Jesus' references to apocalypse (largely in Matthew 24–25), bits of Isaiah and Daniel, and especially the Book of Revelation.

DORIS BETTS

Sparks might well have added an epigraph from the psychology of C. G. Jung, for in this novel all her characters are not merely old, but some are senile; and Jung held the view that anyone in old age who did not focus on the goal of death was probably neurotic. By Jung's definition, most of Sparks's characters are.

This aging circle of old friends and rivals lives in the quarrelsome past; they prolong old literary arguments and jealousies, jockey to inherit wealth, snipe at society and one another, employ silly substitutes for former sexual vitality, collect encyclopedic but insignificant

chario

Death in Timer

as memento mori.

research on the process of aging, and when blackmailed, either keep or reveal secrets the reader judges to be trivial. In short, these elders meditate on everything except their own imminent deaths.

Besides this cluster of superficial friends and kin in the 75 to 85 age bracket, 12 old ladies (called by nurses "the Gran-nies") survive but wet their beds in the government-subsidized Maud Long Medical Ward. The dozen includes Miss Jean Taylor, formerly a maid-companion and acquaintance of that larger senior group still able to live independently outside old-age institutions. Both Taylor and retired Chief Inspector Henry Mortimer receive the whispered fears of the rest as, one by one, they begin receiving phone messages from an anonymous caller who says only, "Remember you must die!" and then hangs up. To every person, the caller reveals a different tone, accent, apparent age, or class.

After Dame Lettie Colson is bludgeoned to death during a random robbery, police try to link these spreading telephone calls to some actual stalker preying on the elderly, but wiretaps and detective work fail. Both Mortimer and Taylor decide the strange caller must be Death himself, or else a personification rising from the subconscious of each victim on whom death is persistently laying claim, despite their denials of mortality.

During his own conscientious investigation, policeman Mortimer remarks that if he had his life to live over, he would "compose himself every night by practicing the remembrance of death," because that practice intensifies life. "Without it," he adds, "you might as well live on the whites of eggs."

And when one visitor to the old ladies' home, who is also plagued by the unknown caller, suggests that Jean Taylor's quick mind with its history of sophistication must hate to be remanded by arthritis to this collection of drooling, incoherent wards of the state, she calls those other 11 grannies her own "memento mori"—like your phone calls."

Supernatural into natural

However gloomy this plot summary may sound, Memento Mori is an amusing novel in Evelyn Waugh style, affirming life by showing this last stage either deepened or wasted, produced by a writer who has always been preoccupied with metaphysical questions of good and evil.

Sparks often introduces the supernatural into everyday settings, as if (since the two planes coexist side by side) sometimes the membrane between them would be bound to break—a premise applied by Flannery O'Connor in her own fiction. Sparks, for example, brings Satanism into the suburbs in The Ballad of Peckham Rye. In one of her stories, as cynics are conducting a tawdry Nativity play, a real and irritating angel bursts in.

This intrusion of supernatural into natural seems, once permitted at all, to become recurrent with writers, and not simply in Frank Peretti's sagas of demonic warfare. In my novel Souls Raised from the Dead, once I had written one scene in which a possible "ghost" (the dead Miss Lila Torrido) appears while Mary Grace Thompson is dying, it became inevitable that the restless spirit of Tamsen Donner should haunt many pages of the next novel, The Sharp Teeth of Love, as it is inevitable that death and love are every serious writer's primary subjects. Ghosts themselves are contagious scene stealers, appearing, for example, in the novels of Reynolds Price, entire story collections by Alison Lurie and Edith Wharton, in Voltaire's Semiramus, Henry James's Turn of the Screw, and the work of Toni Morrison, Randall Kenan, and many other African-American writers, even as a sense of the revitalized presence of the late Joy Davidman in C. S. Lewis's A Grief Observed.

Whether readers decide such ghosts are actual spirits or only psychological projections matters less than the intended light the real as well as fictional death casts back onto life itself. Though one of La Rochefoucauld's maxims warns that "Death and the sun are not to be looked at steadily," Socrates did not flee Athens despite Crito's advice, and Jesus moved straight ahead to Jerusalem and Gethsemane. Jung's opinion about confronting one's own impending death is shared by Kierkegaard, who—finding an advantage in our normal death-fearing despair with all its risk of meaninglessness—suggests that from that precipice man might "leap" and "fall into the open arms of God."

Two local deaths

On one Sunday in the spring of 1993, I was driving home from church down the narrow rutted road in Chatham County, North Carolina, that we shared with neighbors, when I was stopped by my husband's waving arms. "Frank died," he said tersely. "Can you sit with Lib till the undertaker comes?"

This couple had been our good neighbors ever since we had bought land here a decade before, land that had once been part of a larger tract owned by Lib's father. When we moved into an existing small house on those acres of pasture and forest, we must have seemed helpless city folks; but their natural kindness embraced us nonetheless, advised us on well pumps and feed dealers, sent our loose dogs home, shared garden produce.

Lib and Frank, then in their seventies, had lived through a long marriage with its good and hard times. During these later, harder days, his emphysema some-

We Ch
m last th comfort when that Jesus hi on the cross.

times frustrated a once-active Frank; nursing him while coping with her own ailments had also made Lib weary. When his condition worsened, I served as witness on the day he signed his living will to reject extreme resuscitation measures. On that day he seemed irascible, mistrustful, as if the paper gave permission for spouse and hospice to rush him to the grave.

Now he had died at home as he preferred. I went indoors to where Lib sat like a guard by the hospital bed, watching the sheet-covered features of her husband. Although as a child I had said farewell to grandparents who then died overnight, had hugged my recuperating father only to learn by phone that he did not survive to the next dawn, I had by now reached the age at which burgeoning cancers and waning hearts were killing my own former schoolmates; this was my first experience of sitting with the widow and the newly dead—a vigil that for a generation earlier had been commonplace.

For an hour or so we talked about Frank, who had "died so easily," just between spoonfuls of Jell-O being slipped into his mouth. There were memories of early marriage, golf games, other houses and jobs in other cities, baseball, their inability to have children, special vacations, his love of chocolate, and his fatal love of unfiltered cigarettes.

Gone from this history was any recollection of how illness had lately made him cross. If the dying are said in the end to review their own lives, so survivors also sort through the years, and favorably, as if the corpse might overhear. Selectively, the slate is wiped clean, the sum of good increased. At one point, Lib suddenly leaned forward, pulled down the sheet, and kissed Frank's cooling forehead.

Then she said softly, "I have always ans still ating on the draw remember lf was no stoic loved you," and covered his face again.

Afterward, in a buzz of crowded activity, the undertakers came to wheel out the body, hospice workers to flush prescription pills down the commode into the septic tank, men to roll away the rented bed and oxygen equipment, until the room was suddenly empty of the whole experience. Frank would be cremated, his ashes retained until the urn eventually could be propped between Lib's embalmed hands—I do not know if this was done when she died 18 months later.

Neither had a dramatic death; neither took a stirring nor quotable departure toward Rabelais's "great perhaps," but they had left for me a local parallel to Goethe's Baucis and Philemon, and a reminder of his words in Elective Affinities, "The sum which two married people owe to one another defies calculation. It is an infinite debt, which can only be charged through all eternity."

How to die now

Montaigne once wanted to produce a book of real and literary deaths that "in teaching men to die should after teach them to live."

In 1980, Norman and Betty Donaldson compiled 300 real deaths in How Did They Die?—an alphabetical chronology stretching from Socrates to Elvis Presley. Their pages primarily make readers contemplate the contrast between pre-antibiotic deathbeds at home versus today's choices of high-tech hospitals (where 50 percent of Americans died in 1949 and 80 percent do now) or Dr. Kevorkian's oxygen-stealing machine; choices among extreme unction, Elizabeth Kubler-Ross's five stages, or Raymond Moody's near-death experiences (famously known now as NDEs); between the mossy country churchyard and today's perpetual-care parks where flat headstones make grass cutting easy for power mowers; between those who have died accepting God's mystery and those others accepting some other metaphysic—reincarnation, New Age karma, whatever.

During the nineteenth century, physicians encouraged to prescribe narcotics for the dying were said to engage in "obstetrics for the soul"; today lawyers and doctors more typically argue over how much more humanely we euthanize dogs and cats.

Death and church

Let it be said straightaway that we children who grew up among Associate Reformed Presbyterians had memento mori impressed on us officially every seventh day and subliminally during nightly prayer: "if I should die before I wake." We were admonished young to work, for the night is coming, to remember our Creator in the days of our youth, and so on. Although in the Sermon on the Mount, Jesus had not one word to say about death, and although our radio heroes regularly escaped death to fight crime again in next week's sequel, Sunday school made vivid to us how Stephen went down under stones, made clear to us also that the head of John the Baptist could not be reattached.

My lifelong "remembering" since then has run the gamut. I tried the American Society for Psychical Research, but lost patience with Ian Stevenson and those reincarnated (previously wealthy) children in India. Bridey Murphy and the Fox sisters proved fake. Every photo of ectoplasm always looked like damaged film. Even now, when insomniac, I listen to Art Bell's wee-hours broadcasts from Nevada, on which he frequently interviews time travelers, witches, UFO witnesses, Big Foot survivors, and alien abductees; but I do not phone in for details. Neither Houdini nor those whom I loved, once deceased, have ever come back bearing news. Of course, kin and old friends appear in my dreams, where they always seem healed, whole, and happy while they walk along tropical beaches—but so what?

No, after transmigration and Freud's Thanatos; after the crystal balls, Ouija boards, hellfire preachers, eternal recurrence, Buddhist reabsorption, automatic writing, magnetic leeches, druid monoliths, table tipping; after Hades, Sheol, and Gehenna; beyond J. B. Rhine, Colin Wilson, Edgar Casey, Hal Lindsey, and Shirley MacLaine; after Camus's weary Sisyphus gives up; after Marcus Aurelius plus the stoicism of Ecclesiastes wears thin (these being the most appealing alternatives), there is no place for this aging Death-Rememberer to go but home to the New Testament.

Koheleth or Christ?

Ernest Becker, in his Pulitzer Prize-winning book, The Denial of Death, concludes, "I think it is very hard for secular men to die." He did die, of cancer, shortly after the book was published.

So did Dostoevsky die three months after finishing The Brothers Karamazov, which opens with a New Testament epigraph and closes with an affirmation of hope for eternal life.

Ars moriendi—the art of dying—and its parallel, the art of mourning the dead, still seem in the end to rely on secular stoicism or religious faith. For example, Sherwin B. Nuland's 1994 bestseller How We Die is careful, scientific, even ethical; but it is not religious. And when in 1997 professional poet and also professional undertaker Thomas Lynch published his essay collection about life, death, and faith, the book was criticized in the New York Times Book Review from the viewpoint of a secular humanist who preferred Jessica Mitford's version.

But we Christians still meditating on the last things draw comfort when we remember that Jesus himself was no stoic on the cross. He felt despair and dread before and during the crucifixion; he cried out his challenging question to God as have King David, Job, Ivan Ilych, and millions upon millions. Stoicism is not required of believers, but hope is offered. Jane Kenyon, dead before fifty, ends one poem thus: "and God, as promised, proves / to be mercy clothed in light."

If I cannot refute the stoics, nor shrug off cosmic indifference, if I cannot cheer up Beckett's lonely characters waiting onstage, not concur with Freud about the infantilism of religion, discard it, and then advance bravely into "hostile life," neither can these refute my sometimes wavering hope. And my emphasis is on hope, hope in God's mercy rather than fear of eternal punishment, which worried even ancient Egyptian kings and made Virgil separate the good from the justly punished dead. It is our sadism, not evangelical Christianity, that relishes medieval and hellish visions of torment, and it is our hubris that in imagination tests and tunes the personal harp and mentally tries on well-suited wings. Only if ends justify means can we (on the far side of the veil) take pleasure in separating sheep from goats forever, after we have finished (on the near side of that veil) making war on infidels and burning heretics at the stake.

Spiritual journeys into the beyond were nearly as frequent in the Middle Ages as those taken now during flat EKG moments before a defibrillator blasts the heart into rhythm again. In their context, medieval soul travelers often saw on their journeys ample fire and brimstone; in ours, the dying patient typically rushes through some final birth/death canal toward light. Doubters, of course, dismiss testimony about NDE as a subjective response to oxygen deprivation. To them, such anecdotal evidence is as unpersuasive here as in second-hand, multiple translations of Saint Paul. Even Hans Küng, in Eternal Life, distinguishes death as the final destination from the process leading to it, dying cell by cell, and believes most of Moody's NDE samples have experienced the first stage of that process but not the last condition.

Remember you must live

Memento mori, then, commands me not so much to dwell on heaven, hell, or the millennium, nor to contemplate the whole world's eventual death in apocalypse, but to value today's immediate gift of life against the backdrop of transience and God's eternity. Though Jesus acknowledged an end time, his emphasis was on daily forgiveness and hourly love.

The earliest Gospel, Mark, takes only 11 verses to summarize all postresurrection events—in the long version of the ending—and it ends with the apostles at work in this world. The earliest New Testament Easter story (1 Corinthians 15) says little about the mechanics of how Christ died and then came back, but concentrates more on what his overcoming of death should mean in human lives. And that elaborator Luke, who will double everybody else's angels at every opportunity, relocates Jesus' ascension to Bethany but closes by emphasizing the praise and worship of the 11 left behind. (Naturally, he cannot resist adding more angels plus a spread of clouds in Acts 1:10, but the heavenly message puts a quick end to sky gazing; clearly the coming Pentecost is more important.) And gospel writer John shows no interest at all in postresurrection space travel. Jesus at the end of the Fourth Gospel is far too busy to take airy flight because, by patient repetition, he keeps trying to make one thing clear to Peter: "Do you love me? Feed my lambs."

Memento which dying, then?

For me, as for some characters in my fiction, memento mori is an order to take life as seriously as its Creator did, to apply urgency, to view each day in an eternal context, to live right now the abundant and loving life Christ commanded—and to fail at all these but still to trust in mercy.

Except for this heightened commitment and purpose provided by our sure mortality, I believe that in ways beyond my understanding God has in Christ defeated the former annihilating power of death.

Oh, that's easy to say. Too easy. Vague. Facile.

Such trust comes harder when tested against real dying. When Bob, my Early American Literature colleague in the University of North Carolina's English Department—a friend of 30 years—progressed downward by slow medical degrees from finding a lump in the groin to lymphoma, then up by way of successful chemotherapies and optimistic MRI reports, he experienced all that intensity of life measured against the risk of death. He was free to retire, to write more essays on the books he loved, to travel to Spain.

But before too long, in disguise and by sabotage, the cells in his lungs went malignant. When no more cure was available, he received at home old friends and kin and former students. There was time to laugh and talk, to share many good memories, to omit any pretense that he would long survive.

Those good times ran out. When last I came, he had turned into a skeleton thinly wrapped in yellowing pastry, eyes already closed, the breath whapping in and out with a great suck and labored release. Having been told that hearing is the last sense to shut down, I sat by his shell through which air slammed in and out, and reminded his ear of affections and blessings. It was like trying to talk to a bellows.

The next day he was gone, having told us no more about death than all the 300 recorded in the pages of How Did They Die? And at the memorial service in a bland campus auditorium, I swallowed hard and read aloud as he had wished Emily Dickinson's "Because I could not stop for Death." Cole Porter recordings were played, the Lord's Prayer murmured. By the podium, Bob's color photo—pink and precancer, young and already long ago—was displayed.

Not a churchgoer, Bob was perhaps not technically a Christian except in his behavior, but I have continued to remember his particular death (and the bravery by which an excellent teacher continued to teach us who would outlive him) in the context of Goethe's Faust. The play opens with a God-Mephistopheles wager much like the opening of Job, and it ends with Faust, who richly deserves all punishment, being granted mercy instead. When Goethe was 82, he emphasized that this salvation came not because it was earned but "by the divine grace vouchsafed to us."

"Say to the moment, 'Stay!' Thou art so fair!" Goethe's line captures the intensity with which we transient mortals who know we are transient must surely seize the day. And "He who strives mightily we are allowed to save," speaks to that final and mysterious grace that runs to meet all of us prodigal sons and daughters.

Say to the moment, Stay! Strive mightily. Memento mori.

CT

Doris Betts is Alumni Distinguished Professor of English at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill. She is the author of many novels, including most recently The Sharp Teeth of Love (Knopf). This essay is taken from Things in Heaven and Earth: Exploring the Supernatural, edited by Harold Fickett, Copyright 1998 by Paraclete Press. Used by permission of Paraclete Press, P.O. Box 1568, Orleans MA 02653.

The Lord Puts Strange Hooks in the Mouths of Men

A story.

B

elle Metcalfe stood on the steps of her cabin at Rocky Look Bible Camp and looked toward the dropped-down sun. A blue pickup shimmied along the valley road far below, fishtailing here and there on the loose gravel. Though she couldn't see the truck, Belle heard it coming. She knew that her niece Jeanette was finally home from an all-day trip with Drew Parks, and she knew, too, that they'd been up to no good. About the only thing she didn't know was that a hitchhiker sat in the back seat of their pickup, wondering what kind of weird fate had brought him here. The mountains to the east had turned dark purple. You could still smell dinner, though dinner was all done and the dining hall staff had finished washing up.

"What do you think about Jeanette and her boyfriend?" Belle asked her husband, Dean, who sat beside her on the steps having his after-dinner pipe before vespers. Belle was grey-headed, but Dean and his brother, Gratian, both had shiny curls of hair, black as you please. It grew down the sides of their faces like tree bark, and Fansher, the camp cook, liked to tell them they had African blood.

"There's a Afro-American in your woodpile," she'd say.

BETTY S. CARTER

Could be true or could be not true. Most people said that Gratian looked like Abraham Lincoln, but poor Dean was too fat for that.

"I think it's about time little Jeanette found herself a husband," Dean said calmly. "She don't seem to have nobody else interested in her."

"That's because she's already dated every other man who set foot here! She's run through most of the counselors, none's good enough."

"I can understand that," said Dean. "The counselors are a little young for Jeanette, ain't they? She's past college age, she don't want a younger man."

"She's not past 30," said Belle. "She's only 26, and that Drew Parks is younger than she is."

"Oh, what you so worried about, Mother?"

"I'm worried about the way they act together."

"How do they act together?"

Belle whispered something to her husband, something that had the words "tight clothes" and "temptation" and "desperate" in it. He looked around warily, then knocked the ashes out of his pipe and stuck it in a clean brass spittoon beside the door.

"Well," he said, "she's not the beauty in the family; you can't blame her for trying to reel one in while her sister Delphi's off to college. This is a Christian boy we're talking about, isn't it?"

"Dean, do you hear what I'm saying? I'm trying to keep Jeanette out of trouble. She's so crazy for the boys. She reminds me of her mother."

"Oh, don't let's get started on to that."

"Get started on to what? Tell me your brother doesn't need help raising two girls alone. I think you should say something to him about this."

"I'm going down to the chapel. I'll see you at vespers."

"I wonder why God brings all these rascals our way," she mumbled. "Can't he bring just one decent fellow?" She watched her husband—so innocent, so trusting, too godly for his own good—pick his way down the hill toward the campground. When he was well out of sight she hurried jauntily after him. She slung past the pretty log cabin that belonged to his brother, Gratian—the cabin where little Jeanette and Delphi had been raised without a woman's guiding hand (other than her own) since their mother ran off so long ago.

She took a trail that did not lead to the chapel. This trail cut off through the woods toward the playing fields. It was ferny and damp, strewn with boulders and pine straw. Down near the softball field lay Jeanette's cabin, beside a row of pecan trees and a small parking lot with a sign thrusting up from the middle of it that said

ROCKY LOOK BIBLE CAMP
THREE FORKS, TENNESSEE
EST. 1955 FOR THE GLORY OF GOD AND THE SALVATION OF YOUNG AMERICANS

There sat the blue truck, empty, in front of Jeanette's cabin. The hood made a clacking noise as it tried to cool. The air smelled like burning oil. Belle looked this way and that to make sure her husband didn't come out of the trees and catch her snooping. Then she waved at some girls pitching a ball a hundred feet away and darted past the empty truck to the cabin.

She pulled slightly at the screen door, trying to be quiet, but it had swollen tight shut in the heat. She clenched her teeth and yanked the door open with a loud screech. "Jeanette girl, you home?"

"Huh?" A bare-chested boy jumped about a foot from a folding chair behind the door.

"Excuse me, ma'am!" He stood up, covering his white stomach with his elbows.

Belle's mouth dropped open. "Son, what you doing in Miss Jeanette's cabin? Don't you know the rules? No male campers in the girls' cabins."

"Well, ma'am, I'm not exactly a camper."

"No excuses. Come on out right now. And get you a shirt!"

The boy came outside as quickly as he could, smiling in what she thought was a stupid way. His jaw stuck out from his head; his face was red either with sunburn or shame.

"What is your name?" Belle asked, putting her head back through the door, "and who is your counselor?"

"My name's Cecil Howard. I'm not a camper, ma'am. I got a ride out here from Georgia, see. These folks picked me up back on the road and I don't mean to stop long, neither. I'm on my way to New Mexico."

She had her mind on other things. "Do you happen to know exactly where my niece went?"

"Jeanette? I think she went thataway." Cecil pointed to a path that led into the woods beyond the pecan trees.

Belle straightened up. "Was she with him? Drew Parks?"

"Yes, she sure was."

She narrowed her eyes. "Well go on to vespers, son. Don't be hanging around Miss Jeanette's cabin any more."

"No, ma'am, I won't. Have no intention of it."

"Good." Belle hurried over to the path.

Cecil took a breath as he watched the trees close around her. She might have been a rabbit, the way she bent forward, her round tail sticking up. He looked back at the truck, figured there was no chance of getting any farther on the road tonight, and sat down on Jeanette's porch to think about his plans.

In his back pocket was a letter from the girl he intended to reach before the end of the week:

Dear Cecil,

I am not very happy in this place, but when I think about you and how you are so kind, it is enough to make me cry with happiness. It is very hot and dry here. Even if I could have a garden I couldn't bend over far enough to plant things but they don't let us garden since there is not enough water and we already have to take three minute showers.

I'm getting out on June 1 if everything comes out all right (ha ha) and the address of the new place is Sunshine House, 145 Eureka Trail, Albuquerque. So come as soon as you can and I will be waiting for you, sans baby, since it will be in foster care. I promise I will not sign anything final until you get here.

All my love,
Maria

Cecil had never laid eyes on Maria, only written to her c/o the Branton, Georgia, Public Library Pen Pal Program, but he pictured her as a beautiful person about his age sitting beside a cactus in a

as he sat on Jeanette's porch, "I really am coming, but this was the only ride I could get and now I'm stuck here for tonight."

A bell began to ring. "Vespers!" shouted the softball players across the field, and they crowded together and began walking in the same direction. Cecil watched them go, then stood up and started after them.

He brushed against a shaggy apple tree, its leaves a mix of deep green and pale yellow, no fruit on its branches.

Must not be any other apple trees about. Straight in front of him, right beneath a big hill shooting up from the ground like a man's head, sat a little chapel.

"Hey you! Where's your shirt?" asked a young man standing by the chapel bell. He wore a whistle around his neck. "You can't go in to vespers like that."

"I reckon I got it too dirty to wear."

"Then go on get another shirt, boy. Don't be coming down here half naked. Which cabin you in?"

"I—" Cecil gestured back toward the hill.

"Oh, up there in Enoch. Where's your sense? Go in my cabin—it's the one behind the latrine. Borrow a shirt from my dresser. Not my Vols shirt. And give me the shirt right back after vespers!"

Cecil moved through the crowd to the cabin. It sat in long shadows, under oaks and more pecans. He opened the screen door and slipped in quickly.

The bunks were simple mattresses on metal frames. Each one had a sleeping bag rolled up at the foot. Each one had a striped grey and white pillow. On a trunk at the far left end of the cabin sat a transistor radio playing something religious, and next to the radio lay a pile of T-shirts, size X-tra large, three pairs of rolled-up socks, and a pair of black sports sandals.

There were some pictures, too. One was of a girl. Cecil couldn't see her well in the shadows. He hesitated for a second, then picked it up and walked back into the light. The girl was pretty. She had long blond hair and heavy bangs. Her eyes were sort of turned up, her teeth white. Could Maria look like this? On the back was written, "To Franklin, Love Delphi." Cecil smiled at the girl and hated to set her back down alone in the dark on that guy's trunk in this place. He put the picture in his pocket next to the letter from Albuquerque and went on to vespers wearing a plain white T-shirt he'd found at the bottom of the pile.

The chapel was a huge, dark, wood-paneled room with big screens for windows and a stone fireplace at the front. He sat down on a wooden folding chair near the back, next to a blond boy with a red face and cracked lips. You could see that he'd recently grown about a foot. The skin on his knees was pink and smooth. His hands looked too large for him.

"You like this camp?" the boy asked.

"Guess so. Never been to another."

"This is the best I been to so far. What cabin you in?"

"Well, Jonah, I guess. I just got here."

"I'm in Ezekiel." The boy cracked his knuckles. "I'm glad I'm not in Jonah, ain't y'all's counselor that Franklin over there with the big stupid whistle? I heard y'all take those 4:30 A.M. hikes most every day."

"Sounds nasty," said Cecil.

"I'm in the Scouts. You in the Scouts?"

"Used to be," said Cecil. "I hate the Scouts."

"Sorry to hear that."

The boy sighed, then looked around and started a similar conversation with the girl on his other side. While they waited, it turned dark outside. No light remained but the big hanging light inside the chapel, shaped like a globe.

"All right, young people," said a pudgy black-headed man standing up to the polished wooden pulpit. "Brother Gratian's going to deliver the Word of the Lord tonight. I'm just going to open with prayer. I want each and every one of you to pray that the Lord will speak something to your heart tonight, something that will change you forever. Pray with me now."

A quiet fell across the room, a quiet like first sleep. The man prayed. Cecil didn't really listen, except when the man said, "Lord, forgive our wandering hearts. Draw us to you, O Lord."

"I ought to get on my way," thought Cecil. "I ought to be getting on my way out West." Outside, the frogs sang loudly.

The prayer stopped and the man raised his head and sat down. Then, from the back of the room came another man, just as black-headed but much taller, with broad, thin shoulders and a long neck and low-hanging belly.

"Thank you, Dean," he said when he hot desert garden, one soft hand across her swollen stomach. Now he was on his way to rescue her and her child. That was his plan, at least, though he'd already come out of his way just by accepting a ride to Tennessee. What would their meeting be like? He saw himself stepping in between Maria and the sun and saying, "I'm here. I'm going to take care of you and that baby of yours, and you won't have to worry about a darn thing."

"I really am coming, Maria," he thought got up to the pulpit. "You know, it's a little funny sometimes to hear Dean call me 'brother' and reflect on the fact that he is indeed my brother, my earthly brother, and yet that you all are my brothers and sisters. Am I right? Yes, I am right. Folks, young people, am I a good man?"

There was a nervous pause. "Yes, Brother Gratian," said a girl in the front with braces on her teeth. "You are."

"What's your name, sweetheart?"

"Kenna Drender."

"Kenna, why do you think I'm a good man?"

She said something in such a low voice that Cecil couldn't hear.

"Well!" Brother Gratian practically shouted the word. "That's nice of you to say so, Kenna, but what if I was to tell you I'm a murderer? I killed a man. You still think I'm nice? No, I reckon you don't. In fact, you want to run out that door, don't you, so you can call your mama and tell her to climb in her automobile and come after you? Don't want to be friends with me no more. Because I am a dangerous man. Am I right, y'all?"

Some of the boys laughed, but Brother Gratian paid no attention. "It happened quite a few years ago, you see. I killed a good man, tortured him and watched the breath and blood slowly ebb, ebb, ebb, ebb from his pain-racked body. I looked on without mercy, I turned away from him without regret. I thought I was innocent, but his blood is on my hands."

Everyone in the room hushed. "I killed a man," said Brother Gratian. His hands shook as he lifted them. "But so did all of you kill him. Kenna Drender and"—he pointed to a boy in the front—"that young man there, I don't know your name yet, son, but I'll learn it, and John Evan over there, and even my own two sweet baby girls, Jeanette and Delphi. We all killed him, every one of us. Drove spikes through his hands and feet. And the blood ran down his cheeks from the thorns of his mock crown."

"You say, 'How, Brother Gratian? I was not there the day that Christ Jesus died.' But I say to you, young people, we were all there. With our sin we nailed him to a cross. And with his death he paid out our debt to God for all that filthy, disgusting, murderous sin."

"You say, 'How, Brother Gratian? I haven't sinned that much.' But listen, young people, you got to look in your heart. What's there? What's behind the face you show to the world? Is there rage? Is there jealousy? Is there lust? Is there a desire to be your own savior, to do works of righteousness in order to save yourself or your sister or your brother—when really we're all doomed to perish without Jesus there to snatch us from the Devil's jaws?"

"Yes, there is, because we all have sin in our hearts. And when Jesus filled his burning lungs to gasp, 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do,' who do you think he was talking about?"

He looked around, raised his eyebrows for a second, and sighed. "And all you in this room. We all killed him. He forgave all of us."

There was a sharp smell in the chapel, pine wood and young sweat. Cecil felt a pain at the back of his neck, as though someone had yanked him up like a cat. He stared at the preacher's lips, which kept opening and closing, and for another moment all he could hear in the room was the slow whine of a girl beginning to cry.

Outside, an owl hooted. At the back of the chapel a door opened and Brother Gratian stopped in the middle of his sentence and took a deep breath. All the young heads in the room, those baby faces on grown bodies, turned to look. Belle came in, her short grey hair sticking up and her mouth set straight. Behind her walked Jeanette, staring at the floor. Where was Drew?

"Have a seat, honeybun," said Brother Gratian. "Glad you finally decided to join us." Jeanette nodded at her father and slipped onto a back row across from Cecil. She didn't look at him, but he knew something was wrong. Her long hair was kinky and wet. She had grass on the backs of her bare calves and heels. She stared straight down, her mouth as tight as a seam in her white face. Cecil watched her until the sermon was over and the singing started. "This World Is Not My Home," "Jesus, Name Above All Names," "Beautiful Savior," "We Are One in the Spirit."

Jeanette didn't sing. She sat as still as the dirt dug from a grave. Then suddenly she got up and walked to the front alone. She walked right to the pulpit all by herself and stood before her own father.

He pulled a piece of grass out of her hair and said something to her in a gentle voice.

Cecil felt a terrible, terrible need. He hardly knew Jeanette, he'd only met her that afternoon, and yet he couldn't bear to see her alone up there kneeling. It was the loneliest sight he'd ever seen, her with her shoulders shaking and her daddy leaning over her. "Come!" something said. He stood up and jumped forward as if someone had pinched him. He practically pushed Jeanette sideways to kneel beside her. She smelled like wet grass and crushed mint leaves. Their bare arms touched.

"Son," said Brother Gratian hastily, looking down at him with lifted eyebrows while Jeanette began to sob and moan—"It's all my fault! I drove my precious Drew away."

"Son," said Brother Gratian, beginning again, "do you come today to repent of your sins and accept the Lord Jesus?"

Cecil stammered. "Mostly, uh, yes sir, I believe I do."

"Then pray this prayer with me." Two heavy weights fell upon Cecil then, one pair of hands on his shoulders and another on his head. He closed his eyes and repeated Jeanette's father's words, and then he heard feet shuffling up behind him. Others had come to be saved.

After a few seconds the burden of hands lifted from his head and shoulders and he opened his eyes again. But Jeanette was no longer beside him. He twisted around and saw that the back door of the chapel stood open. She had slipped away, but he was trapped by the small crowd and couldn't escape to reach her.

Even when the singing and praying had finished and he could go out in the dark to search for her—well, then he couldn't get to her! He found her cabin windows lit, but the shutters were drawn and others were already inside talking. He heard snatches of their conversation: "By their fruits ye shall know them," Jeanette's aunt said, and Brother Gratian said, "It's a good thing we found out about that Drew before it was too late, before he got our little girl in real trouble." Below their voices he heard Jeanette's soft crying.

Cecil figured he'd find a place to sleep, not far away, and help Jeanette in the morning. So he settled down on the ground again, next to a creek that cut its way down the hill above her cabin. All night he slept soundly, no longer thinking about Maria, not wondering when he'd reach Albuquerque, not remembering the photograph in his pocket nor even considering that he might now be bound for heaven. Yet Brother Gratian had said that he was—right after that brief prayer in the chapel: "Son, you have been redeemed and justified, signed, sealed and bound up for glory. Amen." CT

Betty S. Carter is the author of two novels, I Read It in the Wordless Book (Baker) and The Tower, the Mask, and the Grave (Harold Shaw), and has just completed a third, from which this story is taken.

THE NEXT Great Spiritual Awakening

Be a vital part of the
Fasting & Prayer '98 Gathering
November 12-14

Originating live from Houston and linked
by satellite to every community in America.

Technology will link us for three days—
prayer will unite us for eternity!

Available in Spanish on Satellite and Radio

JOINTLY SPONSORED BY MISSION AMERICA
AND CAMPUS CRUSADE FOR CHRIST

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE INCLUDES:

Dr. Don Argue
Northwest College

Dr. Larry Lewis
Mission America

Mrs. Kay Arthur
Precept Ministries

Mr. Bill McCartney
Promise Keepers

Dr. William R. Bright
Campus Crusade for Christ

Dr. Jesse Miranda
Azusa Pacific University

Dr. Vonette Z. Bright
Campus Crusade for Christ

Dr. Bob Reccord
Southern Baptist Convention

The Rev. H. David Bryant
Concerts of Prayer Int'l.

Dr. M. G. (Pat) Robertson
Christian Broadcasting Network

Bishop Roderick R. Caesar, Jr.
Bethel Gospel Tabernacle

Dr. Adrian Rogers
Bellevue Baptist Church

Dr. Paul Cedar
Mission America

Dr. Thomas E. Trask
Assemblies of God

Mr. Franklin Graham
Samaritan's Purse

Mr. Sid Wright
Fasting & Prayer '98

Join Fasting & Prayer '98 in Houston or establish a satellite site in your community.

For details or to register, call today:

1-800-888-FAST

or www.fastingprayer.com

FINISHING

After achieving success, early retirees are finding significance in second-career mission assignments.

CHRISTINE J. GARDNER

Nelson Malwitz was having a midlife crisis. At 50, he was at the top of his game. As corporate director of chemical research for Sealed Air Corporation in Danbury, Connecticut, the company that invented Bubble Wrap, Malwitz achieved seven patents for plastic foam technology. He served as an adult Sunday-school teacher at Walnut Hill Community Church, a congregation he helped found. He had a wife, Marge, and two teenage sons, Jonathan and David, who loved him. But something was missing. Then he remembered Urbana.

The year was 1967. Raised in the Christian and Missionary Alliance denomination, Malwitz was mortgage payments soon got in the way.

Now with a view from middle age, Malwitz decided to revisit his dream and pursue a second career in missions. But he quickly found missions agencies were unprepared for a skilled professional in his fifties. "It was so difficult to get in, and I had no idea where the point of entry was," Malwitz says.

Gene Shackelford, a friend from church, had a similar experience. At 59, he retired as a vice president of Union Carbide. He and his wife were active in Bible Study Fellowship and participated on his congregation's missions committee, but it took them three years to find a position in missions. "I thought, That's way too long," Malwitz says. "The task is way too difficult for people to get a significant second career if the missions infrastructure is not ready to take people." So Malwitz decided his contribution to missions would be to encourage others from his generation to consider second careers in missions and to help them through what he calls "the missions minefield."

Malwitz founded Finishers Project in 1996 (finishers@compuserve.com). "As you hit 50, you no longer count your years from the time you were born, but you count the amount of time you have left," he says. "The big idea has to do with finishing well." The concept has captured the attention of more than 30 missions agencies, which are joining with Finishers Project to host an "Urbana-like" conference in Chicago October 1-3. Finishers Forum is addressing financial, health, and family concerns, and connecting an anti-pated 600 boomer participants with 150 missions agency representatives.

Like Malwitz, who calls himself "the generic evangelical baby boomer sitting in the pew," millions of boomers, identified as those born between 1946 and 1965, are approaching retirement with their nests empty and their 401(k)s full. In 2001, the leading edge of the 82 million-strong group turns 55, for an estimated total of 21 million boomers 50 years or older. Malwitz has determined that 4.6 million of them are evangelicals. If 1 percent is interested in missions, 46,000 individuals could be available for ministry.

They are the healthiest, wealthiest, and best-educated retirees ever. These evangelical boomer "finishers" (or "second-halvers") may want to return to their Urbana roots and start second careers in missions. They have already achieved success in their careers; now they want to achieve significance. Their idealism—as well as their skills and money—could help revive flagging North American missions.

SEARCH FOR SIGNIFICANCE: Michael Darby, a senior vice president at Shearson Lehman, had been a stockbroker for 30 years, and his wife, Elizabeth, had owned a retail store for 13 years when they started feeling burned out. "We didn't have the joy of going to work like we used to," Michael says.

A teaching cassette by television preacher Charles Stanley about discovering God's will and a job offer from a friend at Focus on the Family prompted the Darbys to consider career opportunities in ministry. A visit with friend Bruce Finishers founder: Nelson Malwitz's new mission is to recruit baby boomers into ministry.

21 when he attended the InterVarsity student missions conference in Urbana, Illinois. Reflecting the idealism of the time, Malwitz wanted to change the world, so he committed his life to missions. But family, career, and

WELL

On a mission:
Ken and Pat
Kingston pack for Africa.

Wilkinson at Walk Thru the Bible confirmed their call to missions.

But panic quickly set in. They had a business to liquidate, a house to sell, and a career to conclude—but at least their children were grown and they had no financial debt. The Darbys decided to let God take care of the details. “If it’s his calling, we’re not supposed to worry about those things,” Michael says. “We’re just supposed to obey.”

In 1991, Michael retired early at 54 and Elizabeth, then 49, sold her store so they could work with CoMission, a cooperative effort by 80 organizations to teach Christian values in Russian public schools. After short trips to the country, the Darbys joined a team from Navigators to live in Rostov, Russia, for a year to disciple new believers. The Darbys exchanged a home on the Florida coast for university housing with no hot water, infrequent heat and electricity, and a view of a garbage dump; but they considered themselves blessed to have rediscovered God’s purpose. Now living in Georgia, the Darbys are working with Navigators on a new program to help other finishers determine their giftedness.

Ken and Pat Kingston assumed they would retire one day and move to Florida or Arizona. But retirement came sooner than they expected when Ken, a middle-school teacher in Crystal Lake, Illinois, for 29 years, had an early retirement option at age 59. In 1991, they seized the opportunity to pursue a lifelong dream of becoming missionaries with Wycliffe Bible Translators.

The Kingstons believe God orchestrated the timing. Pat’s mother, who had been living with the Kingstons, had died a month earlier. Their youngest son married the previous summer.

But credit card debt concerned them, along with leaving their four grandchildren, all of whom lived within two blocks of their home. Ken’s pension helped, but the Kingstons still had to raise support.

The Kingstons “adopted” many new grandchildren in Lima, Peru, where Ken used his experience as an educator to start a school for missionary children while Pat served in the Wycliffe office. After six years, the Kingstons returned home for a year, but they now are packing for a three-year assignment in Kenya. "[Retired] people are traipsing around the country in RVs," laughs Pat. "I think that would be the most boring life I could ever imagine."

Both the Darbys and Kingstons achieved success in their careers, but they wanted something more. Bob Buford would say they sought significance. Buford, whose book Halftime (Zondervan, 1994) is the unofficial guidebook for finishers, says that for retirees who choose service over leisure, "the payoff is blessedness."

A recent survey of 600 evangelical boomers, sponsored by Finishers Project, indicates 61 percent would like to retire early and pursue a second career. Fifty-four percent say they would consider a second career in missions. Eighty-one percent want to be able to serve with their spouse. "They want to leave a legacy," says Rod Beidler, director of international recruitment for Navigators.

MISSIONS DILEMMA: As early retirees search for significance in the second half of their lives, some missions leaders are wondering whether self-absorbed boomers are willing to make the costly sacrifices necessary to serve in overseas ministry. But with the leveling off of church commitment to foreign missions, agency leaders may have few alternatives to draw in a significant number of fresh missions candidates.

The Mission Handbook (MARC, 1997) indicates that by 2000, more than 1 billion people still will not have heard the gospel message. Yet as the world's population increases, North American mission efforts have not.

"Basically, we've plateaued," says Jim Reapsome, founder of Evangelical Missions Quarterly, commenting on the current numbers of full-time North American missionaries. By contrast, the number of short-term missionaries—on assignments as short as two weeks—continues to rise.

There are more available missions positions than qualified candidates to fill them. TEAM is recruiting for 700 positions. Wycliffe has 1,500 openings. Servant Opportunity Network, a computer matching service for retirees, lists more than 6,000 available jobs with more than 200 missions agencies.

Ralph Winter, general director of Frontier Mission Fellowship, estimates non-Western missionaries will outnumber Western missionaries in the next few years. Missions experts point to the new ranks of cross-cultural missionaries from developing-world congregations as the result of centuries of missionary commitment from the Western church.

But in North America, the church's financial support of missions is steadily declining. According to Money Matters: Personal Giving in American Churches (Westminster John Knox Press, 1996), 10–15 percent of Protestant church budgets goes to foreign missions, roughly half the amount of what it was in the 1950s. The State of Church Giving Through 1992 (empty tomb, inc., 1994) estimates that Protestant church members each gave only $20 to foreign missions in 1991, compared to $164 spent on soft drinks and $103 for sporting goods.

"[The church] is losing its zeal," says Larry Walker, southwest regional director for ACOM, which assists its 1,000 member churches with their missions programs.

But in North America, the church's financial support of missions is steadily declining. According to Money Matters: Personal Giving in American Churches (Westminster John Knox Press, 1996), 10–15 percent of Protestant church budgets goes to foreign missions, roughly half the amount of what it was in the 1950s. The State of Church Giving Through 1992 (empty tomb, inc., 1994) estimates that Protestant church members each gave only $20 to foreign missions in 1991, compared to $164 spent on soft drinks and $103 for sporting goods.

"[The church] is losing its zeal," says Larry Walker, southwest regional director for ACOM, which assists its 1,000 member churches with their mis-

ance and financial planning. Navigators' Rod Beidler says that when he started receiving calls from finishers looking for second careers, "we didn't know what to do with them. We were caught very much by surprise."

Ed Lewis, a recruiter with International Teams, says finishers know the primary need to spread the gospel worldwide. "They are up to the challenge and want to get involved," he says. "We don't want to put unnecessary obstacles in their path. And I think maybe, right now, we're doing that."

Mike and Linda Green, of Jupiter, Florida, shared a desire to use their skills in communications technology to further world evangelism. In 1994, Mike retired early at 58 from a 30-year career as a nuclear engineer and started his own business as a software consultant. Linda, then 49, worked as an editor of an online financial publication. Their passion for missions had been fueled by Urbana, which Mike first attended in 1957 and they both attended in 1996. But the missions agencies they approached would not accept them because they both had earlier been divorced—twice for Linda and once for Mike, while he was a Christian.

Mike and Linda applied at six agencies, all of which turned them down. Most agencies terminated their applications early in the process. "Some just come right out and say, 'Sorry, we can't have divorced people as part of our organization,'" says Mike. One agency said they "had to limit their damages, so to speak," he says. The Greens' worst experience involved a missions agency that accepted them after numerous interviews, but later retracted their offer after a staff member threatened to leave if the organization hired a divorced couple. "It was painful at times," Mike says.

OVERCOMING OBSTACLES: Missions agency leaders agree that they need to update their processes to accommodate boomers. Malwitz, as a test to see how agencies would respond to a finisher, forwarded the name of Indiana financial consultant David Ober to two dozen missions agencies. Sixteen of the agencies made no effort to contact Ober. Eight sent standard information packets—data geared to recent college graduates, not older professionals with concerns about health insur-

Overcoming Obstacles: Missions agency leaders agree that they need to update their processes to accommodate boomers. Malwitz, as a test to see how agencies would respond to a finisher, forwarded the name of Indiana financial consultant David Ober to two dozen missions agencies. Sixteen of the agencies made no effort to contact Ober. Eight sent standard information packets—data geared to recent college graduates, not older professionals with concerns about health insur-

Overcoming Obstacles: Missions agency leaders agree that they need to update their processes to accommodate boomers. Malwitz, as a test to see how agencies would respond to a finisher, forwarded the name of Indiana financial consultant David Ober to two dozen missions agencies. Sixteen of the agencies made no effort to contact Ober. Eight sent standard information packets—data geared to recent college graduates, not older professionals with concerns about health insur-

Overcoming Obstacles: Missions agency leaders agree that they need to update their processes to accommodate boomers. Malwitz, as a test to see how agencies would respond to a finisher, forwarded the name of Indiana financial consultant David Ober to two dozen missions agencies. Sixteen of the agencies made no effort to contact Ober. Eight sent standard information packets—data geared to recent college graduates, not older professionals with concerns about health insur-

that make them so appealing—spiritual and emotional maturity, professional skills, and financial security—may also create problems that could hinder missions objectives.

The largest cross-cultural adjustment a boomer may have to make is between the corporate and nonprofit worlds, especially if the boomer has left a leadership position. "If a finisher is a high-powered, CEO-type, he's not going to be prepared to sweep the halls," says Winter.

Some finishers may expect a leadership position in missions, Lewis says, but it will take time for them to gain credibility with career missionaries who may feel threatened by finishers who seem to use missions as a hobby. He believes more finishers such as Michael Darby—who had no qualms about leaving a man-leaving to plant a church with a Mennonite missions team in Albania, have raised their full support. Mike and Linda Green sold their house in August in anticipation of their move to Colorado. "We're back at square one in many ways," says Mike.

Another potential area of frustration is recruitment and training. Finishers say the hiring process is too slow, taking several months to several years before a candidate is accepted, trained, and has raised support.

In most cases, finishers are mature in their faith but have not had the formal Bible training required by most agencies. TEAM, for example, requires 30 semester hours of Bible classes for its full-time missionaries. Finishers Project is looking to develop a "Bible SAT" to accommodate those who are biblically literate but may not have the college transcripts to prove it.

The lack of a foreign language could also hinder a finisher's effectiveness in missions by limiting options to support roles in the United States or reliance on an interpreter.

But altering the training requirements to meet the needs of boomers is an area of serious concern for Winter, who sees a growing "amateurization" in missions. "I don't care if you have a Ph.D. in marketing, [a finisher] still needs to know what missions is," he says. Otherwise, they will just be "sand in the machinery."

DRIVE-BY MISSIONS? Despite the eagerness of missions agencies to retool their processes to attract finishers, some missions experts are skeptical. They fear finishers could change the focus of missions by demanding short-term options, disregarding indigenous leadership, and posing a threat to career missionaries.

Winter believes finishers will not want to spend their last years of life overseas, instead choosing "drive-by missions projects."

"For the most part, short-termers have given up trying to make a contribution to missions," Winter says. "It's kind of an expensive education, and almost a futile way of conducting missions."

But short-term missions opportunities could help finishers verify their commitment to longer-term assignments, says Paul McKaughan, president of the Evangelical Foreign Missions Association.

Missions experts herald the growth of indigenous leadership in missions and express concern over whether a new corps of Western finishers may be counterproductive to internationalization. "The role we played in the past is not the role we will play in the future," says McKaughan. "We will not be calling the shots from the West."

Ruth Tucker, visiting professor of mission at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, says, "Our fix-it-upper mentality—that we can do it—it's passé." Finishers Project is "wrong-headed," she says, if nationals are not consulted first.

Bill O'Brien, director of the Global Center at Samford University, says finishers need to know the church in the Two-Thirds World is prospering, with an estimated 1,000 sending agencies and more than 40,000 missionaries. North American Christians still have a pivotal role to play in missions—especially in the training of national leaders—but O'Brien says finishers need to understand they are the students in this process.

The agencies' eagerness to court finishers could be perceived as a slap in the face to career missionaries who bypassed opportunities for profitable careers. "Often-times, missionaries are a little bit offended by the fact that these people come in and 'haven't paid their dues,'" acknowledges Malwitz. "However, they're just going to have to get over it."

HISTORIC OPPORTUNITY: Despite the concerns, Finishers Project is taking advantage of a historic opportunity. Plans are under way for an adult educational video, a toll-free number with information on job availabilities, and a finishers magazine. The idea is spreading around the globe: Malwitz has received calls from boomers in Canada, Germany, Ireland, New Zealand, South Africa, and Taiwan who want to start their own Finishers Project.

Thousands of boomers are approaching retirement and want a second chance to make a difference in their world; but a problem could arise if significance, not service, becomes their goal.

O'Brien warns that boomers' desire to become finishers should have more to do with meeting missions goals than their personal goals. Missions is "not just a flash-in-the-pan that gave me a warm, bubbly feeling because I felt significant for a minute," he says.

North American missions needs the energy that comes from a new corps of impassioned missionaries. Finishers need to find significance in their retirement years. But finishers must move from the pursuit of personal fulfillment to fulfillment of the Great Commission—sharing the gospel with a world desperate to hear—if they want to use their life skills to nurture a young, but growing, church. CI agement position in finance to work as part of a discipleship team in Russia—are looking for a respite from the responsibilities of leadership.

Leaving a legacy: Finishers find fulfillment overseas in education, outreach, and church planting.

Others, such as the Kingstons and the Greens, may want to use their professional skills in missions, but it may mean they will have to serve in a support role. If they are not wealthy enough to support themselves on retirement income alone, they may have a difficult time raising support. "We view missionaries as people going into hardship posts, maybe wrestling with cockroaches," says Art McCleary, a finisher who left a career in human resources to work for Senior Ambassadors for Christ. "But when they are in an office setting in the West, it is difficult to see them as missionaries."

Mike and Linda Green finally found computer positions with the Caleb Project in Littleton, Colorado, but they recently had to withdraw their acceptance because they could not raise enough support. After 15 months of raising funds, the Greens had only 15 percent of their $70,000 combined first-year support. By contrast, Mike's oldest daughter and her husband, who are

The Unmoral Prophets

Evolutionary psychologists are society's new prophets, says

CHRISTIANITY TODAY's editor at large, Philip Yancey, in the following article condensed from BOOKS & CULTURE, a sister publication of CT. While their message would reduce us to mere survival machines, Yancey points out, their logic contains fatal flaws. Yancey's most recent books are Church: Why Bother? and What's So Amazing About Grace? (Zondervan).

PHILIP
YANCEY

The new science of evolutionary psychology attempts to explain all human thought and behavior as the unguided result of natural selection. As products of blind evolution, say these thinkers, we deceive ourselves by searching for any teleology other than that scripted in our DNA. We must look down, not up: to nature, not its Creator.

The hubris of this new science is breathtaking. Predicts Robert Trivers of Harvard, "Sooner or later, political science, law, economics, psychology, psychiatry and anthropology will all be branches of sociobiology." He might have added ethics to the list.

Writers on evolutionary psychology are talented and entertaining, and they fill their works with vivid descriptions of birds, bees, and chimpanzees. They explain courtship displays, infidelity, maternal instincts, gossip, and social organization in arresting ways. Newsmagazines like Time hire these writers to interpret gang behavior in the inner cities or sexual indiscretions in the capital city, and the results are so winsome that evolutionary psychologists have become the new cosmologists, helping us make sense of ourselves and our role in the universe.

Philosophers are just now beginning to scrutinize the assumptions of evolutionary psychology, and I suspect they will have a field day with its epistemology. I am more concerned with its implications for what I have called "the crisis of unmorality." As if in direct fulfillment of the apostle Paul's predictions in Romans 1, scientists have relocated our primary source for morality and meaning in the beasts.

1. Evolutionary psychology relies on one principle—that of the selfish gene—to decipher behavior. I do what I do, always, to advance the likelihood of my genetic material perpetuating itself. Even if an individual act does not benefit me personally, it does benefit the "gene pool" I am contributing to. Evolutionary theorists herald it as the most important single advance in their theory since Darwin.

PETER SAMUELS/TONY STONE IMAGES

By their own admission, the new scientists propose a wholly deterministic understanding of the human species. As Richard Dawkins puts it, "We are survival machines—robot vehicles blindly programmed to preserve the selfish molecules known as genes. This is a truth which still fills me with astonishment. Though I have known it for years, I never seem to get fully used to it."

Critics propose many anecdotal exceptions to the human behavior, evolutionary psychology has both the virtue and the defect of simplicity. When Robertson McQuilkin, who left a college presidency to stay by his Alzheimer's-afflicted wife (CT, Feb. 5, 1995, p. 32), contends that he stands by his wife out of his love for her and because of his commitment to biblical standards of fidelity—why, of course he would argue that. He makes his living as a Christian writer and speaker, does he not? He is finding a way to propagate the ideas that have served him so well.

Robert Wright, one of the best expositors of evolutionary psychology to the general public, articulates the tautology: "We believe the things—about morality, personal worth, even objective truth—that lead to behaviors that get our genes into the next generation. . . . What is in our genes' interests is what seems 'right'—morally right, objectively right, whatever sort of rightness is in order."

Carry the logic far enough, and any notion of good and evil disappears. In Morality must, of course, serve the monistic selfish-gene principle: "Human behavior—like the deepest capacities for emotional response which drive and guide it—is the circuitous technique by which human genetic material has been and will be kept intact. Morality has no other demonstrable ultimate function."

This, of course, raises important questions about human freedom and moral responsibility. Western jurisprudence assumes the right to judge a person guilty of criminal behavior if he or she (1) can discern the difference between good and evil and (2) was mentally competent to make a free decision when committing the crime. Sirhan Sirhan was sent to prison and John Hinckley to a mental institution over just this legal distinction. Evolutionary psychology appears to call both principles into question by claiming that none of our actions are free, and that the difference between good and evil is a social construct.

Robert Wright points to lust as a clear example of the selfish-gene principle at work. Lust developed as nature's way of "getting us to act as if we wanted lots of offspring and knew how to get them, whether or not we actually do." Following this line of reasoning leads Wright tentatively to endorse polygamy. After all, the practice addresses the basic sexual imbalance between what men and women want. If a man grows restless after a woman gives him a few children, why shouldn't he "fall in love" and begin another family line without divorcing his first wife?

Lyall Watson takes on the case of Susan Smith, who rolled a Mazda containing her two infant sons, nicknamed "Precious" and "Sugarfoot," into a lake. Infanticide is nothing new, says Watson, citing the statistic that in the U.S. alone, 1,300 children are killed each year by parents or close relatives. In a statement that could stand as a parody of the morally neutral stance of evolutionary psychology, Watson observes: "We have to be careful not to confuse the interests of parents and offspring, which often conflict where optimal fitness is concerned. Children nearly always want more than their parents can provide, and nice judgment is required to reconcile such disparity. In many situations, unconscious calculations are clearly being made, with selfish-gene theory. What about gay people, or childless couples, who do not plan to perpetuate their genes—how to explain their behavior? Or consider Mother Teresa, who early in her life committed to a vow of chastity. On what basis can we account for such altruistic behavior? As if explaining algebra to a child, the evolutionary psychologists take up such thorny problems one by one and explicate them in terms of the selfish gene.

As if explaining algebra to a child, the evolutionary psychologists take up thorny problems one by one and explicate them in terms of the selfish gene.

Like all monistic explanations of essence, the evolutionary psychologists have devised a unified theory of human depravity that would make John Calvin blush. Hard-wired for selfishness, we have no potential for anything else.

2. Morality springs entirely from our genes. Most evolutionary psychologists take their turn at accounting for the origin of morality. The sociobiologist Edward O. Wilson proposes that, over the course of thousands of generations, natural selection wired in certain tendencies that are "largely unconscious and irrational," on the level of "gut feelings."

every evidence of an evolutionary perspective coming into play."

Trapped in philosophical naturalism, evolutionary biologists cannot embrace any external code, such as the Tao described by C. S. Lewis in The Abolition of Man. The Tao represents objective truth, the first principle beyond which we cannot argue; it allows us to make judgments; we cannot judge it. Without such a standard, modern science must constantly teeter on the edge of self-contradiction. Why choose one set of values over another, especially when you do not believe in free choice?

Some evolutionary biologists cheerfully acknowledge the problem. Concludes Robert Wright: "Thus the difficult question of whether the human animal can be a moral animal—the question that modern cynicism tends to greet with despair—may seem increasingly quaint. The question may be whether, after the new Darwinism takes root, the word moral can be anything but a joke."

3. Nature gives mixed messages about morality. After demonstrating that we can look to the primates for early examples of sympathy, empathy, and justice, Frans de Waal writes, "We seem to be reaching a point at which science can wrest morality from the hands of the philosophers." Examples of "ethical" behavior abound in nature: whales and dolphins risking their lives to save injured companions, chimpanzees coming to the aid of the wounded, elephants refusing to abandon slain comrades.

Well, yes, but it all depends on where you point your field binoculars. Where do you learn about proper behavior between the sexes, for example? Nature offers very few examples of monogamy and none of egalitarianism. Should our females, like the praying mantises, devour the males who are mating with them? Should our neighborhoods resolve their disputes as do the bonobo chimpanzees by engaging in a quick orgy in which they all have sex with one another? Should human males mimic the scorpion-fly by lying in wait to take the nearest female by force?

Mark Ridley sees sexual jealousy as a Darwinian adaptation for humans that enabled our ancestors to outbreed their more relaxed contemporaries. But he quickly adds that he can "imagine a society in which people are conditioned to enjoy the thought of their spouse's being unfaithful." In his discussion, the morality of sexual fidelity is a value-neutral adaptation to social circumstances.

Or, consider violence. Lyall Watson admits he finds it "disturbing" that hyena cubs seem genetically programmed to attack and kill their siblings on sight almost from birth. Researchers such as Frans de Waal and Jane Goodall likewise react in revulsion and dismay when primates they have grown to love are murdered by others of their species. On what grounds? The animals themselves seem undismayed; they are acting "naturally," in response to genetic mes-

I do not worry about the morality of individual evolutionists, but I do worry about the morality of those who follow their doctrines to their logical ends.

sages. What gives an evolutionist the right to step outside of nature, endorse a moral concept of nonviolence, then apply it back to nature, of which we are all a part?

The alternative is not just jarring but appalling. Some evolutionary psychologists, showing more consistency, look to nature to explain, and even justify, the most egregious human behavior. Lyall Watson, for example, though mysteriously disturbed by fratricide among hyenas, admits that he could not easily condemn headhunting, because such a practice keeps certain tribes in ecological balance.

In response to their critics, evolutionary psychologists are quick to argue, "Don't go from is to ought. We examine nature to see what is, to learn why we behave the way we do. It does not necessarily follow that we ought to do what other species do." Fair enough; but where do we go to get the ought? And another question: Where did this whole notion of ought come from, anyway?

4. A morality based in nature is vulnerable to large-scale abuse. Julian Huxley declared in 1963,

The population explosion is making us ask . . . What are people for? Whatever the answer . . . it is clear that the general quality of the world's population is not very high, is beginning to deteriorate, and should and could be improved. It is deteriorating thanks to genetic defectives who would otherwise have died being kept alive, and thanks to the crop of new mutations due to fallout. In modern man, the direction of genetic evolution has started to change its sign, from positive to negative, from advance to retreat: we must manage to put it back on its age-old course of positive improvement.

The Western intellectual community, in the wake of Hitler, today finds eugenics repulsive and roundly condemns racism based on Social Darwinism. Yet its allegiance to philosophical naturalism leaves it vulnerable to abuse, especially now that advances in gene research allow for genetic "improvement."

Any time a leading thinker uses phrases like "general quality of the world's population" and "genetic defectives," the rest of us should invest in home security systems. An engineered society or engineered individual must conform to some standard of correctness or normalcy, and here is where evolutionary psychology and social engineering break down. Who decides the standard or norm? Julian Huxley or Martin Heidegger? Bill Clinton or Pol Pot? I am still trying to think of a large-scale attempt to improve human society that has not led to catastrophe.

Trust us, say the new behaviorists. We're kinder and gentler. We have your best interests—the best interests of the whole species—at heart. Oh? And what historical examples can you point to in which behavioral conditioning was used for benevolent purposes? Must we repeat history?

From a Christian perspective, the new science of evolutionary psychology founders on its anthropology, its basic understanding of the nature of humanity. The "trouser ape," C. S. Lewis satirically called us in The Abolition of Man. Perhaps that should be updated to "untrousered ape." Scientists are finding it increasingly difficult to claim any distinctiveness about being human. Stephen Jay Gould faults the view that places humanity at the top, as the pinnacle of evolutionary progress. We are instead, he says, "a cosmic accident that would never arise again if the tree of life could be replanted."

Animal-rights activists seize upon the new paradigm as an endorsement of their campaign against "speciesism." Animals, being no different from people, should be treated accordingly. "There really is no rational reason for saying a human being has special rights," says Ingrid Newkirk, cofounder of People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals. "A rat is a pig is a dog is a boy."

Evelyn Pluhar takes that logic further down the same road, arguing that in certain cases, an animal's rights should take precedence over a human's. For example, as one reviewer of the book suggested, "Compare a normal chimpanzee to a severely retarded human child unable to take care of itself or to speak or to reason. Given that neither qualifies as a rational moral being, capable of asserting its rights, why do we allow vivisection of the chimp but not of the child? Surely, if moral significance attaches only to full persons, then the child should be granted no more protection than the chimp, or the pig awaiting slaughter."

It takes an honest scientist indeed to acknowledge that all discussion about rights is irrelevant. Rights are, by definition, granted. As zoologist Paul Shepard admits, "'Rights' implies some kind of cosmic rule prior to any contracts among users, legislation for protection, or decisions to liberate. It refers to something intrinsic or given by God or Nature. . . . Wild animals do not have rights; they have a natural history."

At least Shepard is honest about the moral vacuum at the center of evolutionary psychology. Books in this field by evolutionary psychologists tend to contain glaring contradictions. They call on us to respect the rights of animals without giving us a rationale for those rights. They inform us we have no claim to superiority over other species—though so far as I know, only humans will be reading their elegant arguments. After describing nature's examples of gang rape, murder, and cannibalism, they urge us to rise above our genetic scripting. They call us to "higher" values of nonviolence and mutual respect, even though there is no "higher" and

"lower," and apparently we have no freedom to act anyway. They urge us to transcend the destiny of natural selection, to combat the cosmic process. Yet by binding us within that cosmic process, and by insisting that we have no other fate but natural selection, they deny our ability to act on such noble instincts.

I have met a few evolutionary psychologists, and they seem like cultured, well-mannered individuals who do not beat their children or murder their undesirable cousins. Yet the doctrine they promulgate, by undercutting any transcendent basis for morality, destroys our very ability to judge such behavior "bad" or "evil." I do not worry about the morality of individual evolutionists, but I do worry about the morality of those who follow their doctrines to their logical ends. "We make men without chests and expect of them virtue and enterprise," wrote C. S. Lewis.

Meanwhile, the leaders of the movement are cranking out books, writing cover stories for newsmagazines, and being feted at major universities. For the moment, at least, they hold the spotlight, and it illuminates a benign and knowing smile. At last we understand human behavior. At last we understand ourselves.

More than three centuries ago another scientist, Blaise Pascal, considered a pre-modern version of the loss of faith. This was his conclusion:

Now, what do we gain by hearing it said of a man that he has now thrown off the yoke, that he does not believe there is a God who watches our actions, that he considers himself the sole master of his conduct. . . . Do they profess to have delighted us by telling us that they hold our soul to be only a little wind and smoke, especially by telling us this in a haughty and self-satisfied tone of voice? Is this a thing to say gaily? Is it not, on the contrary, a thing to say sadly, as the saddest thing in the world? CI

To subscribe to BOOKS & CULTURE: A CHRISTIAN REVIEW, call 1-800-523-7964.

The Next Masterwork from RICHARD FOSTER

"This outstanding book helps us understand what makes our Christian faith so rich and meaningful. . . . This book will bring rich enlightenment and helpful understanding."

—TED W. ENGSTROM, President Emeritus, World Vision

HarperSanFrancisco
A Division of HarperCollinsPublishers
<http://www.harpercollins.com>

From the Author of the Million-Copy Bestseller *Celebration of Discipline

One Nation

Religion, Politics, And Culture In America...

For years, the radical secularists that dominate our media, our legal system and our universities have sneeringly dismissed the crucial role of religious principles in the founding of this great country. We at the Conservative Book Club know that in order for our nation to survive and prosper, these principles must be upheld by America's institutions and citizens. That is why, since 1964, we have been bringing you the books you need to combat the liberal elites and their revisionist propaganda. Please join us in our mission by choosing your first 3 books today!

The Blood and the Shroud

New discoveries reveal the truth about the Shroud of Turin. Ian Wilson is an internationally acclaimed expert and researcher of the Shroud's amazing story. His latest findings will send the skeptics running for cover.

Item #4891 Retail $25.00

The New Age Movement and the Biblical Worldview

What makes the New Age movement so dangerous to your family? Dr. John Newport uncovers every area of this many-sided movement and explains the need for Christians to understand the New Age threat and how it differs from Christianity.

Item #4915 Retail $35.00

Domestic Tranquility

"F. Carolyn Graglia, a lawyer before she became a homemaker, makes an unassailable case against feminism...[She] holds feminism up to a light and reveals it to be anti-female and anti-human..."

--- Dan Neyer, club reviewer

Item #4830 Retail $29.95

Their Blood Cries Out

Dr. Paul Marshall, a leading authority on religious persecution, shatters the media's silence to reveal the growing persecution of Christians worldwide. "A profoundly moving book!" — David Kilgour, Deputy Speaker, Canadian House of Commons

Item #4678 Retail $24.95

The Book of Virtues

In a time where smut, violence, and immorality pervade the media, this inspiring collection of fables, poetry, stories, and other readings is a lesson in morality, and must-read for our nation's families! This #1 bestseller Ronald Reagan's Secretary of Education will provide a solid foundation of morality for you and your children.

Item #3884 Retail $30.00

Losing Our Virtue

David Wells offers a bold new critique focused on the fractured moral vision of society at large and its reflection in today's evangelical church. He argues that now is the best time for the church to regain its moral weight and become a missionary of truth once more in a foundering world.

Item #4971 Retail $25.00

Defeating Darwinism

A survival guide for Christians battered by the creation/evolution debate. Phillip Johnson, Darwin's most respected critic, helps you grasp the essentials of the dispute and gain confidence in upholding and defending the truths of God's Creation.

Item #4665 Retail $15.99

Summer for the Gods

Distinguished historian Edward Larson deconstructs the popular historical myths surrounding the "Scopes Monkey Trial." Learn what really happened in the summer of 1925 when the forces of creationism and evolutionism collided in the rural south.

Item #4924 Retail $25.00

The Historical Jesus

Prof. Gary Habermas gives a rigorous defense of the accuracy of the Gospels, based solely on extrabiblical evidence. Here are the facts that support the biblical Jesus from His birth through His resurrection and ascension.

Item #4561 Retail $13.99

Mother Teresa

One of the most inspiring religious leaders of our time. This new biography gives a detailed account of Mother Teresa's life and the challenges she had to face. Hers is a wonderful story of courage, integrity, and an unshakable faith in God.

Item #4457 Retail $23.00

Goddess Unmasked

The women of the "Goddess" movement are fighting for gender neutral Bibles in churches. Dr. Philip Davis takes you into this feminist movement and shows how it is based not on real theology, but rather on political rhetoric and propaganda.

Item #4991 Retail $29.95

David

Best-selling author, Charles R. Swindoll helps you link the events of your life to the timeless lessons revealed in the life of David.

Item #20539 Retail $19.99

C.S. Lewis and Francis Schaffer

These two great minds helped shape the conservative Christian worldview of the 20th century. Now, as we move forward into the 21st century, revisit their ideas and philosophies and see how they still apply today.

Item #4957 Retail $14.95

Under God.

From The Conservative Book Club.

The Gods of Atheism

In this deluxe new hardcover edition, Fr. Vincent P. Miceli shows how man cannot exist without a God. Thus modern atheism is merely a replacement of God, less a belief system than an anti-Christian movement.

Item #4841 Retail $24.95

The Outrageous Idea of Christian Scholarship

Should religion be reintroduced in the American academic world? Dr. George M. Marsden shows how Christian thought can defeat prevailing academic ideologies, like moral relativism, and thus needs to be present at today's universities.

Item # 4685 Retail $22.00

Spirit Wars

Peter Jones, professor at Westminster Seminary, ties the apparently disparate movements of feminism, homosexuality, multiculturalism, civil rights, abortion, euthanasia, mystical spirituality, and moral relativism. His basic thesis: Judeo-Christian America has become an incubator for revived paganism.

Item #4740 Retail $18.95

Slouching Towards Gomorrah

Robert Bork, one of the nation's most distinguished conservative scholars, assails the unprecedented decline of morality in America, and points a finger at the culprit — modern liberalism.

Item #4427 Retail $25.00

Nearer, My God

Explore conservatism's Christian soul in William F. Buckley's moving autobiography of faith. "The greatest conservative figure of our age relentlessly probes the ultimate question: God. And gives us a stirring, at times deeply personal defense of his Catholic faith."

Item #4780 Retail $24.95

Bible History

This book follows the whole history of the Bible in a concise and readable manner. It will help you and your children understand the Bible without missing any of the major events.

Item #4799 Retail $19.95

The Parables of Christ

Since it was first published in 1915 this work has been instrumental in helping Catholics understand and interpret all of the parables of Jesus Christ. Recently reprinted, this is the guidebook for the engaged student of the New Testament.

Item # 4705 Retail $35.95

In Defense of Miracles

14 distinguished evangelical scholars "...undertake the arduous task of philosophically justifying rational belief in miracles...an impressive display of the best sort of intellectual work now emerging in the evangelical world."

Item #4764 Retail $17.99

Burden of Truth

Charles Colson shows how to confront the deceptions of the world with God's Word on topics as diverse as medical ethics, education, crime, science, pop culture, family, art, and government.

Item #4796 Retail $19.99

Boy Clinton

Blockbuster exposé by the publisher of The American Spectator, R. Emmett Tyrone Jr., has unearthed the truth about the real Bill Clinton — including facts that have never been revealed before.

Item #4367 Retail $24.95

The Secret Life of Bill Clinton

From the reporter the White House most fears — and with good reason — comes an assiduously documented exposé of the crimes that have characterized the Clinton presidency as the most corrupt in history.

Item #4756 Retail $24.95

Darwin's Black Box

Biologist Michael Behe demonstrates that the complexity of even the lowest forms of life proves that life was created according to an intelligent design.

Item #4387 Retail $25.00

Take 3 Books for Just $1 Each!

Get a 4th For only $4.95

Send No Money Now!

Benefits of Membership and How the Book Club Works

WANT SAVINGS! Join today and get any 3 of the books pictured in this ad for just $3 plus shipping and handling. Then take up to two years to buy four more books at regular low prices (20-50% below retail) or three books over two years, if you've selected the New Member Bonus. After you have paid for your books, your Membership can be ended by you or Club. Plus you will also get opportunities to buy from our list of Superbargain books that the regularly offers. These books are offered at 70-90% discounts!! (Sorry, Superbargain books don't count toward your book commitment.)

CLUB BULLETIN! Up to 15 times a year you will receive the Club Bulletin packed with kind of books you will want to read and own. Each Bulletin will describe a Featured selection chosen just for our Members. Also included are a number of alternate selections about politics, religion, history, home schooling, investing and other areas of interest to conservatives.

READ AT HOME CONVENIENCE! When you receive your Bulletin you will have the chance to examine the many books of interest and read reviews for each. If you want to receive the Featured Selection, do nothing and it will be sent to you. If you don't want the Featured Selection or you would like an alternate selection, simply indicate your wishes on the handy card enclosed with your Bulletin and return it before the deadline date. It is an easy way to build your conservative library from the comfort of your own home.

100% SATISFACTION GUARANTEED! If you are not completely satisfied with any book, return it and receive a complete credit. Plus you will always have at least ten days to make your selection to receive the Featured Selection. If you ever have less than ten days, you simply return the book at Club expense for a full credit. One Membership per household please.

☒ YES! Please enroll me as a Preferred Member of the Conservative Book Club under the terms outlined in this ad. Send me the three books I've indicated and bill me just $3, plus shipping and handling. I then need to buy only four additional books at regularly discounted Club prices (20% - 50% off retail) during the next two years. Please write book numbers here:

C0499-A-2

☐ YES! I want to take advantage of the New Member Bonus! Please send me a 4th selection as I've indicated below. I understand I will be billed an additional $4.95, plus shipping and handling. I then need to buy only three more books at regular Club prices during the next two years. Please write book number here:

C0499-A-2

Name

Address

City State Zip

* Prices slightly higher in Canada * Membership subject to approval by the Conservative Book Club

Fill out this coupon and mail to:

1101

CONSERVATIVE BOOK CLUB
P.O. Box 97196, Washington, DC 20090-7196

Me? Apologize for Slavery?

Gordon Marino

I may not have owned slaves, but I've benefited from their having been used.

CORBIS-BETTMAN

Slavery:
White Americans must deal with our racist past.

Gestures of collective repentance have become popular in recent years. In 1994, the pope offered an apology for past sins committed against non-Catholics. In the summer of 1995, the Southern Baptists, who number over 15 million, voted to express a resolution of repentance that read in part, "We lament and repudiate historic acts of evil such as slavery from which we continue to reap a bitter harvest." Last year, President Clinton apologized to the African Americans who were the unwitting subjects in the infamous Tuskegee study of syphilis, and he seriously considered the possibility of apologizing for slavery in general.

Reactions to Clinton's proposed mea culpa varied. Ward Connerly, an African-American entrepreneur, regent of the University of California, and architect of the California antiaffirmative action referendum, Proposition 209, pronounced this verdict on the idea: "Apologizing for slavery is probably one of the dumbest things anyone could do." Conversely, civil-rights leader Julian Bond maintained that an apology for slavery would be a good and important symbolic gesture.

Last summer, in between Little League baseball games in a largely white Minnesota town, I did some informal polling of my own. Though none of the people I talked to took the President's proposed apology to be an urgent matter, about half expressed mild support for the idea. Others scoffed at repenting for what they took to be ancient history. The wife of a professor commented, "Why should I apologize for something done to blacks more than a hundred years ago?" A fair question, which might be restated: "Why should I apologize for a crime that I had nothing to do with?" Or more to the point, "By what authority can I apologize for someone else's actions?" It would, after all, be hubristic for me to think that I could repent for a mugging that I did not participate in.

As a professor of philosophy, I have encountered many white students over the years who accurately or out of paranoia believe that they are constantly being asked to feel guilty and repent for racist institutions and actions in which they themselves had no hand. When it comes to race and repentance, these students are of the Aristotelian opinion that we should only be praised or blamed for our own voluntary actions. Oddly enough, many of them feel no qualms about taking pride in the accomplishments of the various communities with which they identify—their college, church, country, or for that matter, their local major league baseball team.

This minor inconsistency aside, many of those who sneer or snarl at the suggestion of apologizing for deeds from the deep past need to consider the possibility that we may bear a moral connection to actions that we did not ourselves commit. In this regard, it would be useful to distinguish between actions that one neither commits nor profits from and actions not committed but profited from.

Suppose, for example, that unbeknownst to me, a friend of mine robs a bank and makes off with $7 million. Clearly, I am neither responsible for the robbery nor am I in a position to apologize for it. However, if after telling me about the theft, my friend offers me a million dollars of the stolen loot, and I accept it, then I am no longer innocent of the robbery, despite the fact that I had nothing at all to do with the heist. It could be argued that white people have profited from our racist past, and thus, relative to slavery, we are more like receivers of stolen goods than innocent bystanders who just happen to bear a physical likeness to slave owners.

Paradoxically enough, Americans do not shy away from admitting that we profit from access to cheap foreign labor, and yet whites find it hard to believe that we have benefited in any way from hundreds of years of free labor. Obviously, this lack of awareness would be exculpatory if, in fact, slavery and discrimination did not serve the interests of whites. However, if ignorance of being privileged is an ignorance we ourselves are responsible for producing, then we become morally reproachable receivers of stolen goods. And to be psychologically realistic, whites have a strong investment in blinking their assessment of the broad effects of racism.

Let's return to my earlier example: assume that when I accepted the gift of a million dollars, I had no reason to think that the money had been stolen. Years later I came to understand that the funds upon which I had built a comfortable and respectable life had been pilfered from the accounts of your great-grandparents. Would the fact that many years had gone by cover the sin to such a degree that I would not bear any responsibility to the descendants of my great-grandparents' victims who, thanks to my ancestors, now led a distinctively unprivileged existence?

Individuals who benefit from a crime are mistaken in thinking that they have nothing to do with the crime. If responsibility does not extend from the robber baron to his children, then the material benefits of his wrongdoing can be passed along with impunity to future generations.

Once again, it is essential to distinguish between cases in which one generation is entirely innocent of a transgression committed by an earlier generation and those in which the sins of the father continue to bear fruits of advantage for his descendants. Although I am not sure that a presidential apology would have the healing effects that some anticipate, I do know that white Americans have profited from slavery and discrimination. In a competitive society, whites have always had a leg up on African Americans, whether it be in hunting for a job, loan, house, or a position in a corporate firm.

Consider the Texaco scandal in 1996, when unsuspecting white corporate executives were caught on tape espousing racist sentiments. Or consider a story that a friend recently shared with me. My friend, who is about 35, recently returned to his hometown in a Detroit suburb for a class reunion at his richly integrated public high school. After the reunion, four of his old school chums convinced him to go out and play a few rounds of golf. All were corporate executives and registered Democrats. And yet, when the issue of race came up, all of them swore they would never "take the risk" of hiring an African American to fill a leadership role in their respective companies. In other words, any white applicants who sought employment in one of their firms would have a decisive advantage over all African American applicants.

Apologies are becoming all too easy to make today. But abuse is no argument against use.

I was not involved in the civil-rights struggle of the sixties. While I have huffed and puffed and shaken my head about racial injustice, I have made no significant sacrifices for the cause of racial justice. I have no special authority to preach on the matter, and yet I have lived long enough in this country to recognize by whose sweat and on whose backs this country has been built and why. Because of slavery and discrimination, African Americans have provided an endless supply of cheap labor. They still work the fields, wash white babies and white octogenarians, shake drinks in country clubs, and mop floors in the classrooms in which white folks debate about race. It was not by chance that a black woman closed my dead father's eyes. It was no accident that a black woman was there when my child first opened his blue eyes.

As a result of institutionalized racism, African Americans have been cornered into doing more than their fair share of protecting, building, and preserving this land. For that reason, I suggest that even white Americans who have cursed racism have unwillingly and perhaps unwittingly benefited from it. Thus, whites are in no position to slough off the call for an apology by insisting that they have no connection to slavery.

The Hebrew scriptures ring with intimations that blessings and blandishments can be passed on from generation to generation. The children of Abraham are blessed because of Abraham's faith. On the other side, there was clearly a time when the Israelites believed that the sins of the fathers would be punishable unto the fourth generation.

The revolutionary prophet Ezekiel inveighs against the notion of cross-generational responsibility. Attempting to focus his people's attention on their individual actions, Ezekiel proclaims that if a man "has a son who sees all the sins that his father has done, considers, and does not do likewise, . . . he shall not die for his father's iniquity" (Ezek. 18:14, 17, NRSV). When we refuse to acknowledge the harm that our community has inflicted upon others, when we the unoppressed refuse to acknowledge that, at least for a time, oppression benefits those who are not forced to walk on the other side of the street, then we fail to turn away from the sin of oppression.

By turning a blind eye, the sins of the father become the sins of the more passive son. By refusing to acknowledge who has been doing what for the last four hundred years, we fail to turn away from the grievous sins of our forefathers.

There is some sense today that apologies are becoming all too easy to make. Perhaps so. But as the philosopher Stephen Toulmin has pointed out, abuse is no argument against use. If Americans ought to feel sorry that people in our community ever permitted slavery, then we ought to be willing to say that we are sorry for slavery. Clearly, it is a sorry character who does not regret our slaveholding past.

Gordon Marino is associate professor of philosophy at Saint Olaf College, Northfield, Minnesota.

Bringing Up Babies

It takes a church to raise the McCaugheys' septuplets.

At a prayer meeting last year at Missionary Baptist Church in Carlisle, Iowa, Kenny McCaughey asked fellow members to petition God on behalf of his wife, Bobbi, that fertility therapy would be effective. Upon learning that the prayers for his wife to conceive had been answered sevenfold, McCaughey turned to pastor Robert J. Brown with questions on how he could handle such a brood. Brown prayed that God would be glorified by whatever happened.

Since that time, life has not been the same for the McCaugheys, Brown, or Missionary Baptist Church.

The birth of the world's first surviving septuplets on November 19, 1997, changed the dynamics of the church immensely. Besides living through to do anything we can do, no matter how long the haul may be."

Preparation began long before Kenneth, Alexis, Natalie, Kelsey, Brandon, Nathan, and Joel came into the world. Church members began bringing meals three times a week when a doctor ordered bed rest for Bobbi McCaughey in her ninth week of pregnancy—21 weeks before delivery. There have been 70 volunteers from their church to aid in caring for the septuplets—and their two-year-old sister, Mikayla—as well as in cleaning the home and preparing meals. Many on-site helpers take one shift a week, ranging from four hours in the morning to eight hours overnight.

Compassion not coincidental

Such devotion is not a new phenomenon at Missionary Baptist Church. "Their giving attitude did not start with Bobbi's pregnancy," says her father, Robert Hepworth. "It's a natural extension of what had been going on before. They are very giving to anyone who has need." Hepworth and his wife, Peggy, both 53, attend the church, as does Kenny McCaughey's father, Kenneth George, 53, and his stepmother Val, 42.

"It's not unusual for people in this church to help people in need," Val McCaughey says. "Of course, there's never been a need like this before."

Indeed. Bobbi McCaughey prepares 45 bottles of formula herself every day, but the task of periods of intense media scrutiny, the 100-member congregation has rallied to become a model of what the church is designed to be: a support in time of need, even if the circumstances are overwhelming.

"When Bobbi and Kenny found out they were expecting seven, we said, 'You don't have to do this by yourselves,'" says Brown, 49. "The response from families in the church has been to commit ourselves feeding, bathing, and changing diapers for seven babies around the clock—while trying to attend to other household chores—is beyond any one person. Although the McCaugheys have many relatives in the area, it has been their extended family—the church—that has seen them through.

Even if the McCaugheys feel a bit awkward relying on the assistance of others to raise their family, Extended family: Missionary Baptist members, including Brown (back row, third from right) have taken the McCaugheys under their wings. Above, Kenny and Bobbi with Kenneth W. and Natalie.

MICHAEL E. ADAMS

they know it is part of God's plan. "The help has been simply outstanding," Bobbi McCaughey says. "If it was just me, the laundry wouldn't get done and the meals wouldn't be made."

The church in Carlisle, a town of 3,400 people 10 miles southeast of Des Moines, has been at the center of the lives of Kenny and Bobbi McCaughey both before and after the birth of the septuplets. Before the big event, they had been active at Missionary Baptist Church, which is affiliated with the General Association of Regular Baptist Churches, by working in the children's ministry and singing in the choir. Both Kenny, 28, and Bobbi, 30, attended Bible college before he became a billing clerk at the local Chevrolet dealership and she became a seamstress.

The McCaugheys continue to attend Sunday school, morning worship, and Sunday evening services faithfully, with their eight children in tow. Church members are there to help them unload and load the safety seats in the van. Friends often hold the septuplets during services.

The day of delivery, Brown led intercessors in prayer at the hospital. McCaughey chose the church sanctuary as the site of a press conference to announce the births. A prayer chain formed when newborn Joel came perilously close to death and needed a blood transfusion.

At times, Brown has been enamored with the adorable septuplets. "If I had my druthers I'd be at their house almost every day," Brown says. "But that's not my calling. I'm the pastor."

Before the births, a three-woman church committee that includes Brown's wife, Ginny, 47, formed to organize a volunteer schedule to meet the practical day-to-day needs of the McCaugheys. They initially identified three paramount needs: housing, transportation, and income.

But generous American individuals and companies have taken care of many of the needs, including free diapers, clothes, and baby food. A consortium of area businesses is putting the finishing touches on the most amazing gift: a 5,000-square-foot house being constructed with donated labor and materials. The ten-member family has lived in a 770-square-foot house the first year. Chevrolet bestowed on them a 15-passenger van to take care of transportation.

That left basic at-home needs, and two-thirds of the families from the church have helped. A volunteer is at the McCaughey home overnight for an eight-hour shift, seven days a week.

"Pastor Brown and Ginny are the right people for this," says Val McCaughey. "They are great organizers and they know how to handle the media."

Managing the publicity

Maintaining equilibrium has not been easy. While the birth of the septuplets has provided a marvelous opportunity to demonstrate to the world that God can work miracles through a faithful church, the attention heaped upon the McCaugheys at times has been consuming. "This is a whole new dimension of ministry we've never had before," Brown says.

Brown and his six-member deacon board have been careful to make sure other congregants are not slighted because of the immense attention that has been showered upon the McCaugheys. After much agonizing, Brown and the deacons decided to allow crews from NBC's Dateline and ABC's PrimeTime Live to film in the church. Concerns about disturbing the holiness of God's house and invading the privacy of members dissipated when the news programs both portrayed church members as loving and devoted.

The births have had a unifying effect on the congregation, according to Ginny Brown. "This has enabled other people to grow," she says. "Other people are being blessed by helping out."

Brown appreciates his faithful flock. "These people are really committed," Brown says. "Many have jobs 40 hours a week. But they see this as ministry."

One such volunteer is Ken Bailey, a 47-year-old commercial artist in West Des Moines. "I like to take care of these babies," Bailey says. "It's neat to see them grow and how their personalities develop."

For 40-year-old Craig Milligan, a farmer nine miles south of Carlisle, helping the McCaugheys is a way to thank Bobbi McCaughey, who brought his wife, Joy, meals when she broke her arm while eight months pregnant.

"It's our turn to give back," Milligan says. "God has watched over this family. Every one of these children is so precious."

Bobbi McCaughey hopes the volunteer shifts at their home will be phased out by early next year. "We don't anticipate having help forever," she says.

Nevertheless, Brown vows that assistance will continue as long as it is needed. "We're just a local church trying to do what God has told us to do," he says. "Two years ago we never dreamed we would be a part of something like this. It humbles us and causes us to be in awe."

By John W. Kennedy, in Carlisle, Iowa.

Parents and Teens Can Turn Anger to Honor

DURING Greg's teen years, best-selling author Gary Smalley went through a stormy time with his son. But now they've teamed up to share what they learned with others.

A relationship of honor, trust, respect, and love is possible with your teenager. Just like God designed it.

Look for Bound by Honor, coauthored by Gary Smalley and his son, Dr. Greg Smalley, wherever quality books are sold.

Tyndale House Publishers, Inc.
www.tyndale.com

Resources for Life

Unreached People Group: Classical Musicians

There is a need for the light of the gospel to permeate the arts community, . . . to reverse the tide of a poisonous, self-destructive attitude," says Douglas Yeo, bass trombonist for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. "The problem really is spiritual, an unwillingness to fulfill the role that we have clearly defined for us in the symphony orchestra."

Audiences would be amazed at the attitudes among symphony members, Yeo thinks.

Christian musicians as role models

When one thinks of unreached people groups, classical musicians aren't likely to spring to mind. But hundreds of musicians are aiming to reach the world of classical music with a Christian witness. Yeo openly shares the gospel and his views on the brutal competition in classical music, employing his Web site (yeodoug.com) as a forum.

He believes Christian musicians can be role models, pointing to Paul's description of the body with each member having its part. His part is third trombone, and he is content with it—an attitude apparently rare in the competitive world of classical music.

John Kasica, percussionist with the St. Louis Symphony, says he applies Christ's servant philosophy to his fellow professionals. "If you serve your colleagues and give them the first opportunity to have the best part, and encourage them and help them sound better rather than compete with them—let them be the best—you reap what you sow. God will position you to do the best work. Now that takes a lot of faith in God—to die to your own talent—but that's what it takes."

"With the arts, you have an opportunity to bring the gospel to people in creative ways. We don't always have to use words," notes Kasica's wife, Paula, a professional flautist.

The desire to communicate God's glory through beautiful music was a motivating force behind the founding of the Christian Performing Artists' Fellowship (CPAF), which got its start in Washington, D.C., by holding professional classical music performances by Christians. Since its inception in 1984 with six founding members, CPAF has grown to about a thousand members, mostly professional musicians and academicians in the performing arts, including music, theater, and dance.

Members of CPAF study the Bible and grapple with everyday applications of biblical teachings to their craft. They also go to great lengths to learn the language of their "people group" extraordinarily well. While excellence in art is an end in itself, they believe their musical credentials must be beyond question in order to gain a hearing for the gospel with their colleagues, as well as witness to paying audiences who expect the best. All this takes hours of daily practice.

Summer camp for musicians

Two years ago, in its quest for virtuosity, CPAF debuted the MasterWorks Festival, a summer camp for promising Christian music students ages 14 to 24. The faculty includes musicians from major orchestras such as the National Symphony (D.C.), the New York Philharmonic, and the Pittsburgh Symphony, and instructors from leading schools of music, including Juilliard and Eastman in New York State.

Held annually at Houghton College in rural western New York, the festival is designed to help young musicians hone their skills to the highest level in preparation for classical music careers, while at the same time providing spiritual instruction to help them avoid compromising their Christian character. One morning, Alan Harrell, cellist with the Cleveland Orchestra, led campers in a clapping exercise to demonstrate how hard it is to go against the beat—as Christians in a worldly environment must do all the time. On another day, Roslyn Langlois, a pianist from Tasmania and resident camp counselor, gently addressed the issue of competition: "If we have a sneaking fear or a worry about someone being better than us, the Holy Spirit is there to say, 'Love them, bless them, give thanks for their gifting. Don't worry, I'll look after yours.'"

Many seasoned symphony players, including Yeo, come for a day or two to conduct master classes at the four-week festival, providing both musical and spiritual instruction. Other faculty, like the Kasicas, come for one or both two-week sessions, offering private lessons and playing alongside students in the orchestra. Participants give weekly concerts, free to the public, featuring major orchestral works, and almost daily performances and recitals for fellow campers.

"The MasterWorks Festival is a chance for Christians from these various orchestras to get together and encourage and inspire each other with their playing," says John Hodges, a MasterWorks guest conductor from Memphis. Unlike professional symphonies with their sturdy hierarchies of players, seated in order beginning with the most proficient, MasterWorks takes a radically egalitarian approach.

"We make it an educational experience for anyone. We put some good players in the back, and we seat professional musicians right with the kids," says Patrick Kavanaugh, CPAF's executive director and founder. "When Stephen Clapp, the dean of Juilliard, was here, he asked, 'Do you mind if I go to orchestra rehearsal and sit in back with the second violins?' A young high school kid was sitting in the back of the section by himself. The night before he had prayed for a stand partner—and it turned out to be the dean of Juilliard!" John Kasica notes, "It's exciting for students to be working with so many players of excellence, and they rise to the occasion."

Many of the musicians at MasterWorks admit they feel like fish out of water, performing in secular organizations, and finding the church not terribly encouraging about their calling. "I think [the church] has often misunderstood how it can be effective in the culture, and it's lost its view of itself as the cutting edge of cultural accomplishment," observes Hodges. "Since the Enlightenment, the church has decided that the arts are so un-Christian that it's given them over to the unbelieving world."

Although many Christian musicians long for the church once again to embrace fully their musical genre, CPAF is most concerned about the secular profession of music. Kavanaugh urges musicians of faith to "be right there in the marketplace. The music world will listen to our people who are well-trained musicians more than they're going to listen to preachers and evangelists. We speak their language. I can go down to the Kennedy Center and talk about Jesus and Beethoven in the same sentence, and they respect that."

Being salt and light

Kavanaugh wants to expand MasterWorks to new locations in the U.S., Europe, and Asia. He also envisions a Christian music conservatory—but wonders whether Christian students might be better salt and light in secular academies.

MasterWorks students and CPAF musicians believe the rigors of endless practice and often unaccepted outreach constitute their peculiar calling. Opera student

Ruth Crumley, a Bob Jones University student, says her musical training is for God's purposes: "He's given us talents to use for him. That's the one goal I've learned so much about here. Our music is not just for ourselves, but it's primarily to glorify God, and to uplift others and bless them."

CT

By Sara Pearsaul. For further information on the Christian Performing Artists' Fellowship and the MasterWorks Festival, call 888-836-2723 or visit www.ChristianPerformingArt.com

Douglas Yeo

The White Robed Army of Westminster

SIMON WALKER/NEWS INTERNATIONAL SYNDICATION. ©TIMES NEWSPAPERS LTD., 1998

Unveiled July 9 at Westminster Abbey, London: Ten modern martyrs are commemorated in niches that have been empty since the façade's construction in the fifteenth century. Some of these martyrs died unheralded at the hands of their own Muslim or animist families or were executed for the sake of political expediency. Some, like Archbishop Oscar Romero, made chillingly prescient statements about their imminent deaths: "You can tell them, if they succeed in killing me, that I pardon and bless those who do it. But I wish they would realize that they are wasting their time. A bishop may die, but the Church of God, which is the people, will never die." From left: Maximilian Kolbe of Poland (Franciscan), Manche Masemola of South Africa (Anglican), Janani Luwum of Uganda (Anglican), Grand Duchess Elizabeth of Russia (Orthodox), Martin Luther King of the United States (Baptist), Oscar Romero of El Salvador (Roman Catholic), Dietrich Bonhoeffer of Germany (Lutheran), Esther John of India (Presbyterian), Lucien Tapiedi of Papua New Guinea (Anglican), Wang Zhiming of China (evangelical).

CT

Classic and contemporary excerpts

Real Reality

Most persons would "listen on their knees" to anyone who would make God absolutely real to them, so that they could say as John did, "We have beheld His glory." The world is weary of traditional religion, of formalism and hollow words, but most hearts are hungry for that true thing by which life is actually renewed.

—Rufus Jones in
Rufus Jones
Speaks to Our Times

No Melody

One frequently meets passers-by with music emanating from transistor radios on their persons. Lacking music in our hearts, we carry it in our pockets!

—Vance Havner in
The Vance Havner
Quote Book

Be Patient

Jesus went to Jerusalem one Passover holiday and met a man who had waited thirty-eight years at the Bethesda pool for a healing. Tradition had it that every so often an angel of the Lord would stir the waters and whoever stepped in first would be cured. For thirty-eight years, this man had reached out for a healing only to be muscled aside by someone bigger and faster.

Some folks say this man didn't want to be healed, or else he would have pushed other folks aside and hustled into that pool himself. I say true patience is so scarce, we're apt to confuse it with apathy. There's a load of difference between the two. Apathy curls up into self-pity when times get hard. Patience quietly waits its turn, trusting that God will get around to making things right in his perfect time.

—Philip Gulley in Home Town Tales

Vain Search

Those who seek happiness too intensely will have little of it.

—Calvin Miller in
The Taste of Joy

The Sin of Self

Christians do not see themselves as wicked; they do not see their righteousness as filthy rags; they do not see themselves as needing to be in a state of ongoing confession and repentance. The result is that the body of Christ is, in large part, suffering from the power-draining effect of a universally unconfessed sin . . . the vanity of self-righteousness!

—Jim Russell in Awakening the Giant

It Starts with One

But where was I to start? The world is so vast, I shall start with the country I know best, my own. But my country is so very large. I had better start with my town. But my town, too, is large. I had best start with my street. No: my home. No: my family. Never mind, I shall start with myself.

—Elie Wiesel in Souls on Fire

Forget the Past

It is a mistake to be always turning back to recover the past. The law for Christian living is not backward, but forward; not for experiences that lie behind, but for doing the will of God, which is always ahead and beckoning us to follow. Leave the things that are behind, and reach forward to those that are before, for on each new height to which we attain, there are the appropriate joys that befit the new experience. Don't fret because life's joys are fled. There are more in front. Look up, press forward, the best is yet to be!

—F. B. Meyer in Our Daily Walk

"Junk Food"

Today we often tend to treat the Lord Jesus something like a convenience food—handy to have around in case of unexpected need.

—Margaret Clarkson in All Nature Sings

Father of Evil

It is so stupid of modern civilization to have given up believing in the devil when he is the only explanation of it.

—Ronald Knox in Let Dons Delight

Where God Lives

Who has not found the heaven below
Will fail of it above.
God's residence is next to mine,
His furniture is love.

—Emily Dickinson in Poems

Time's Value

Time is what we want most, but what, alas, we use worst, and for which God will surely most strictly reckon with us when time shall be no more.

—William Penn in Fruits of Solitude

The Reconciliation Walk

"From the beginning of the Reconciliation Walk, the Holy Spirit has stressed to us that we must walk in the true spirit of the Cross. The Crusaders used the Cross as a banner for battle, but we are called to redeem its meaning among Muslims and Jews. We must do more than carry the message,

WE MUST BE THE MESSAGE."

Lynn Green

The aim of the Reconciliation Walk is to mark the 900th anniversary of the Crusades by conveying a person-to-person message of apology from western Christians to Muslims, Jews and Orthodox Christians.

The Reconciliation Walk is an effective approach for defusing some of the suspicions with which Muslims, Jews and the Orthodox Church view western Christians.

Its effectiveness will be due to the indispensable value of meeting one another face-to-face and to prayer. You now have an unprecedented opportunity to participate and help defuse the bitter legacy of the Crusades.

You can participate for as little as 10 days or for as long as 3 weeks (depending on location); we recommend small teams of between 3-8 people, though you can apply as an individual.

Immediately before you start your reconciliation walk (to Syria or Lebanon), you will need to attend a 2-day orientation on location in Beirut.

All you have to do is contact us at either our US or UK office for application forms. Upon receipt we will then arrange accommodation for your Orientation time and help you with international/internal flights. The location/route you will take and accommodation, after Orientation, along that route will all be arranged and booked at Orientation. It's as simple as that and you'll soon be on your way.

"This is a wonderful idea, I compliment all of you on your largeness of spirit. This is very much needed, a very important project".

LEBANANESE AMBASSADOR, USA

ORIENTATION DATES ARE AS FOLLOWS:

September 13th-16th	(arrive Beirut 13th and depart for the rest of your trip on September 16th)
October 11th-14th	(arrive Beirut 11th and depart for the rest of your trip on October 14th)
November 22nd-25th	(arrive Beirut on 22nd and depart for the rest of your trip on November 25th)
January 17th-20th	(arrive Beirut on 17th and depart for the rest of your trip on January 20th)
February 21st-24th	(arrive in Beirut on 21st and depart from the rest of your trip on February 24th)
March 21st-24th	(arrive in Beirut on 21st and depart from the rest of your trip on March 24th)

Extra

There is also a tour from October 29th-November 9th – Southern Turkey, Syria and Beirut. Visiting fascinating Crusaders sites, with visiting speakers opening up historical and spiritual insights. There will be opportunities to share the Reconciliation message in three countries, with worship and prayer being offered in the many locations which are of current, strategic importance.

Future

There will also be further opportunities to participate between April and the end of the project in July 1999. WATCH THIS SPACE!

FOR MORE INFORMATION/APPLICATION FORMS, PLEASE CONTACT:

The Reconciliation Walk, P.O. Box 38369, Colorado Springs, CO 80937

Tel: 719-540-0914 Fax: 719-527-2680 Email: recwalk@aol.com

OR

The Reconciliation Walk (SL), PO Box 61, HARPENDEN, Hertfordshire, AL5 4JJ

Tel/Fax: 01582 766019 Email: Reconciliation@compuserve.com

The Good HMO

First Resort founder Shari Plunkett wondered how to reach unhappily pregnant women. Answer: Work with HMOs.

What have HMOs to do with reducing the number of abortions in a given community? Plenty, says Shari Plunkett. She has begun a chain of pregnancy-help centers (called First Resort) in the San Francisco Bay area that operate under a special arrangement with one of the largest HMOs in the country: When the health-care providers of this health maintenance organization have patients who are ambivalent or negative about their pregnancies, they refer them to First Resort for counseling. More than 40 percent of First Resort's clients come from those referrals, says Plunkett. "We're a medical and counseling service for women who are at the point of making a decision about carrying to term or having an abortion. About 70 percent of our patients fall into that category, while for most pregnancy care services, it's 20 to 35 percent." Plunkett spoke with CT columnist Frederica Mathewes-Green about this "mainstream medical" approach to abortion intervention—a model Plunkett hopes will be used across the country. (Plunkett may be reached at sp1rst@dnai.com)

How did you arrive at this "mainstream medicine" model?

It grew out of my frustration in trying to reach women contemplating abortion. It's not like they're all listening to the same radio station or reading the same newspaper. Two years ago I worked with an ad agency to put together radio spots targeting this group of women, and I learned two things. First, that we were trying to reach half a percent of the population. Second, that a four-month series of ads would cost almost as much as my whole budget for the year. It didn't make sense.

One of my donors said, "You need to have a big HMO to refer all their patients to you." I realized that that is where pregnant women are congregating, and we needed to reach them there. We began talking to physicians, asking if this was a service they would be interested in. One of the first we talked to, a pro-choice physician, said, "Absolutely, because I see women like that all the time. I can spend 20 minutes with them, but I can do nothing in comparison with what you do."

How did you describe the service you were offering?

We told doctors, "We know that you regularly see women who are pregnant and don't want to be, and who are struggling with what to do. We know that you'd love to educate them on their options and hold their hands as they struggle through all their thoughts and fears and circumstances. We also know you don't have that kind of time—but we do. We'd like you to see us as specialists and refer those patients to us. We will provide them unbiased, compassionate, nonjudgmental pregnancy consulting. As soon as that woman makes her decision, whether to carry to term or to terminate the pregnancy, she's coming back to you."

Shari Plunkett:
"I think every woman's heart is telling her to carry to term, because God has placed truth in her heart."

How does your relationship work with the HMO?

Twenty-four hours after a patient drops off her urine sample, she phones the advice nurse who tells her if the test is positive. Then the nurse asks, "Is that good news or bad news?" If it's good news, the nurse tells her how to establish prenatal care. If she says "bad news" or that she's not sure, the nurse says, "Let me give you the phone number of the agency we use to do our pregnancy consulting." If the woman says, "I'm having an abortion," the nurse tells her that we will provide preabortion counseling for her. All we're doing is spending time with them at the point of their decision, and our hope is that ultimately they will make a decision to carry to term.

NEIL HANSHAW

How did you get the HMO to agree to this?

This HMO did a study of women having repeat abortions and found that the rate declined if women received counseling. One of our volunteer RNs works at this HMO office, and she knew that there was frustration over women having abortion after abortion. It was wearing the staff down. She told them about our organization, and they invited us to do a presentation. At the end I asked, "If you were to refer patients to us, which would you refer?" I expected they would say the ones that were confused or ambivalent, and that's what one nurse said right away. But as soon as she said that, the chief of obstetrics said, "But what about the ones that are having abortions? Do they really know what they're doing?"

From that point on, we prayed for the whole enchilada. We didn't want just the undecided women, but every single one, including the ones that wanted abortions.

Why do you think they agreed to this? If the woman chooses childbirth, it costs an HMO a lot more than an abortion would.

Absolutely. When they refer out their first-trimester abortions, it's going to cost $250 or less; for those who carry to term, the HMO has to pay for prenatal care, labor, and delivery, and maybe 18 years of pediatrics. So this is not a decision based on money, and that is what gives me hope. I sensed that these health-care providers really wanted their patients to take more time to think through their decisions. They have a real sense that abortion is not a good thing, and if women could make other choices, it would be good for them.

Do the doctors accept that your orientation is pro-life?

We've been very honest that our goal is to build the Bay Area into an abortion-free community. One of the first questions people ask us is, "Where do you stand on the issue?" I tell them, "I'm not going to jump into one of the two boxes, because they are political boxes loaded with stereotypes, and I don't know what your stereotypes are." Then I say, "Every day we go to work to reduce the desire for abortion in our community." The minute we say that, they know where we stand, but I've been careful to frame it in a way they've never heard before, and that has made all the difference.

"Some women go into an ultrasound talking about abortion and come out saying, 'I'd better start thinking about names.'"

They know, too, that we're a Christian organization. I tell physicians that this is a decision of life and death, and that often when women are making such decisions they want to look at it from a spiritual perspective. Because we are a Christian organization we can say, "Let's talk about this based on your faith background." I can show doctors the evaluations that patients have made of our counselors, stating that the counselors were compassionate and non-judgmental. In everything we do we are exhibiting Christian principles.

What would a woman walking into your clinic receive?

Like other crisis-pregnancy staffs, we talk with her about the circumstances in her life, what pressures cause her to be contemplating abortion, who in her life is heading her in that direction, and who is supportive of carrying to term. We ask her, apart from these circumstances, what does her heart tell her to do?

I think every woman's heart is telling her to carry to term, because God has placed truth in her heart, and the truth is that abortion is never the right answer. So our job is to help a woman to see that, during a time of crisis, there's a lot of pressure to make a decision that doesn't align with her values and principles. We try to provide the support structure for her to carry to term.

Besides our screening and referrals from mainstream medicine, we have a full-time registered nurse who can offer ultrasound and has the same training in it as an ob-gyn. It's amazing to me, but virtually 100 percent of women want to have an ultrasound, even if they plan on abortion. We're very clear with them about what they can expect to see, and tell them they don't have to look at the screen. We let them know that having an ultrasound will merely give them more information, and information is power. It also tells us what her due date is, whether the pregnancy is in the uterus or ectopic, and whether the pregnancy is viable or demised. In the process, the patient confronts the reality of another human being that exists.

What are the results?

Sixty percent of the women we work with who were seriously contemplating abortion decide to carry to term. Ultrasound plays a big part in this. Some women go into the procedure talking about having an abortion and come out saying, "I'd better start thinking about names."

Over the 14 years I've been doing this, we've seen 15,000 to 20,000 women, and I've never seen one come back and say, "I'm so angry that you helped me carry this baby to term." We've seen fathers and husbands that were pressuring very hard for an abortion. I remember one who said, "You have to have an abortion because I have a car payment to make"—when the baby was born he brought it back in as proud as he could be. If we can only get women to slow down and listen to what their hearts are telling them, and then empower and support them during that time, miracles can take place.

Is Hell Forever?

Q: What is the teaching that says the unsaved will be annihilated rather than suffer eternally in hell? Do any evangelical theologians believe this?

—Linda Piepenbrink
Glendale Heights, Illinois

Annihilationists anticipate one ultimate destiny for the wicked, an undifferentiated nonexistence.

A: The traditional teaching of the church—that the lost will suffer unending conscious torment in hell—has repeatedly been challenged by “universalists” since the third century. They believe that in the end, all will be saved. After the Reformation, a third viewpoint, “annihilationism” emerged as a minority position—for example, in the 1660 confession of the General Baptists, and among the Seventh-day Adventists and several other evangelical groups in the nineteenth century. Since 1960, several prominent British evangelicals, as well as Canadian theologian Clark Pinnock, have embraced this view. John Stott has likewise expressed sympathy for annihilationism while choosing to remain “agnostic” on the question.

One key difference between universalists and annihilationists is that annihilationists agree with traditionalists that many will indeed be lost eternally. By this, however, they mean that the unsaved will cease to exist for all eternity. They argue that because eternal torment serves no remedial purpose, the traditional concept of hell paints a portrait of God as a vindictive despot incompatible with the loving Father revealed in Jesus. Further, they claim that the presence of people in hell throughout eternity contradicts the Christian truth that Christ has conquered every evil foe and God will reconcile all things in Christ.

Some annihilationists who are better described as holding to “conditional immortality” claim the idea of eternal conscious punishment depends on the Greek concept of the immortality of the soul, which they say is wrongly read back into the Bible. The Bible teaches, they argue, that we are dependent on God for life, so only through participation in Christ’s resurrection are the saved given immortality.

Annihilationists believe the Bible teaches that the end of the wicked is destruction, not eternal torment. Building from the Old Testament (Ps. 37; Mal. 4), they point to how Jesus declared that the wicked will be cast into the smoldering garbage heap of Gehenna (Matt. 5:30), where they will be burned up (Matt. 3:10–12) and destroyed in both body and soul (Matt. 10:28). Similarly, Paul spoke of the fate of the lost as death (Rom. 6:23) and destruction (1 Cor. 3:17).

Peter also used such language (2 Peter 2), likening the destruction of the ungodly to the burning of Sodom and Gomorrah. And John anticipated the wicked being consumed in the lake of fire, which he called “the second death” (Rev. 20:14–15).

Whatever its appeal, the annihilationist position contains substantive problems. One is the biblical assertions that the wicked will suffer an “eternal” fate. Annihilationists argue that the word eternal refers to the permanence of the results of judgment and not to the duration of the act of punishment. Many Scripture passages, however, say more than this. Biblical writers use the word eternal to refer not only to the punishment of the lost but also to the bliss of the righteous (Matt. 25:46), suggesting a parallel that goes beyond the permanence of the pronounced judgment. The unending joy of the redeemed stands in contrast to the unending torment of the reprobate.

Also, several New Testament texts indicate that the lost will suffer varying degrees of punishment. Jesus declared that those who have received greater opportunities for belief will suffer more severe condemnation (Matt. 10:15; 11:20–24; Luke 12:47–48). While many annihilationists believe in different degrees of torment before extinction, they anticipate only one ultimate destiny for all the wicked, an undifferentiated nonexistence. But can a righteous Judge pronounce the same sentence of destiny upon the most despicable villain of human history as upon the seemingly moral pagan? Also, doesn’t passing out of existence trivialize the seriousness of the choices we make in life and the importance of our response to God’s loving offer of community?

In sum, yes, some evangelical theologians affirm annihilationism, but it is important to keep in mind that annihilationists affirm several aspects of the traditional view. This issue, therefore, should not be lumped in with the more substantial debate over universalism, which denies a final judgment altogether. The debate raised by annihilationists reminds us of the difficulties that arise whenever we attempt to pinpoint the eternal situation of the lost. Just as we cannot envision what conscious bliss will mean to the saved in their resurrection bodies, so also we do not know exactly what eternal punishment will be like. Finally, the controversy surrounding the nature of eternal damnation will serve a positive purpose if it leads us to realize that we ought never to speak about the fate of the lost without tears in our eyes. CT

By Stanley J. Grenz, professor of theology at Carey/Regent College in Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada, and at Northern Baptist Theological Seminary in Illinois.

Impacting The World.

...one person at a time.

...e the expanding ripples from one drop
...water, one person eventually influences
...ousands. Motivated ethical leaders spread
...n standards of character and motivation
...over widening circles.

...roducing The Donald G. Soderquist

...nter for Business Leadership and

...ics... preparing leaders through

...cutive leadership training seminars

...d conferences, undergraduate and

...duate degrees, and a resource

...ter for information and research.

Ethics

Integrity

Character

Leadership

The Donald G. Soderquist Center
for Business Leadership and Ethics

JOHN BROWN UNIVERSITY

Siloam Springs, Arkansas

For more information
call 1-877-JBU-INFO

Donald G. Soderquist
Vice Chairman & COO
Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.

The Center is a recognition of
Dr. Donald G. Soderquist.
...example, dedication and integrity
...model the Center's purpose to this
...iversity and the greater worldwide
...business community.

The Homeless Church of Myanmar

Please come with me to one of the most beautiful parts of the world. Holiday brochures promote package deals in fliers with dramatic pictures of high mountains, lush jungles, and ancient monuments.

We are headed for Thailand and will pass through countryside where the mountains soaring above the dense, green jungle are far more dramatic than anything the travel brochures can portray.

But be warned! We are about to leave the tourist trail and travel overland to Mae Sot, near the Thai border with Myanmar (Burma)*. We are headed for refugee camps where tens of thousands of innocent Karen and Karenni civilians—people groups from Myanmar, many of whom are Christian—have fled to save themselves from the ethnic cleansing being carried out by the brutal military junta.

In 1990, after decades of cruel military regimes, democratic elections were held in Myanmar, and the National League for Democracy party won with over 80 percent of the vote. The military ignored the election results, seized control, and has set up the illegitimate

(and wrongly named) State Peace and Development Council (SPDC) government. Since the overturned elections, the SPDC and units from the Democratic Kayan Buddhist Army (DKBA) have systematically brutalized millions within their own country (over 2 million remain internally displaced), forcing them to seek refuge across the border in Thailand.

The SPDC has been systematically attacking villages of the Karen and Karenni people, rounding them up for forced labor and for use as human mine sweepers, killing those who do not comply or who are too weak to serve. Others are sent to relocation camps, which are little better than death camps. They believe death is inevitable from disease (there is no medical care), or from contaminated food (they claim that the Burmese authorities mix sand with the meager rice rations).

On our journey we will meet some of these people who have fled for their lives from Myanmar and now live in camps inside Thailand. You will hear how they suffered in their homelands at the hands of the SPDC and suffer still in the camps they presently inhabit.

For example, in the blackened and charred embers of what is left of their home in the Wangkha camp, you might see a group of Karen children playing, seemingly with hardly a care in the world. Around them lies a scene of devastation, dust, ash, the partial remains of broken crockery, a solitary eating bowl, and plastic bags blowing in the breeze.

On March 11, about two hundred armed men from the SPDC and DKBA attacked the camp at 1:00 A.M. A 34-year-old pregnant woman, a 7-year-old boy, and a 15-year-old girl were killed by shells fired from the military units as they ran through the camp shooting randomly and shouting that if residents failed to return to Myanmar they would be in for worse treatment in the future. Sixty people were injured in the attack, thirty of them seriously.

During another of the raids, 38-year-old MaSu was injured by shrapnel, which also destroyed her fragile home. Her neighbors in nearby homes were killed. "I don't want any more fighting, and I want to leave here and move somewhere safe with my family," she said.

The recent brutal attacks on these camps in Thailand have left thousands of Karen and Karenni civilians terrified and homeless. About 12,000 people are estimated to be living out in the jungle, having fled from their villages and/or from relocation camps. If they are caught by government troops, they believe they will be tortured and killed.

Just when we feel as devastated as the landscape, we will have one of those amazing, redeeming experiences that so often occur during visits to our suffering brothers and sisters. Displaced from their homes and living in poverty and fear in exile, we will meet many gentle, gracious people who are enduring their suffering without complaining, without bitterness, without any trace of hatred toward those who inflict such pain on them.

MaSu said, when we asked if she had any bitterness towards the perpetrators of this outrage, "I have no hate for them. I love them because I am a Christian. The Bible tells us to love our enemies, and I forgive the soldier who injured me."

When our journey is over, we will return to the comfort and security of our homes, deeply humbled and inspired, I hope, to remember Saint Paul's letter to the church at Corinth: "When one part of the body of Christ suffers, we all suffer." CI

The Baroness Cox is president of Christian Solidarity Worldwide, Surrey, England.

Military units ran through the camp shooting randomly and shouting that if residents failed to return to Myanmar they would be in for worse treatment.

*Myanmar is the name adopted by the present government. Many retain the more common designation of Burma.

Church Chair Industries, Inc.

Cathedral Stacker

Now Only
$25.25
100+

Free Chair Test Compare
(100+)

Plush, tall backs over 1/2" plywood.

Free Lumbar Back Support

Royal Stacker

Now Only
$26.25
100+

Design Stacker #1

Plush 4 & 5" deep foam seats over 1/2" plywood.

Call 1-800-331-5411
For Free Catalog & Steel
Frame Sample Chair

GREAT PEW LIKE CHAIRS OAK OR STEEL FRAMES
LOCKS TOGETHER TO FORM A CONTINUOUS BENCH

Oak Pew Chair

DESIGN PATENT NO.
DES. 333,7333

OPTIONS

Arms
Kneelers
Book & Card Pockets

The Cambridge Companion to Christian Doctrine
Edited by Colin E. Gunton

Theology for the Rest of Us

The church needs to recover doctrine from its academic captivity.

By the Renewing of Your Minds: The Pastoral Function of Christian Doctrine, by Ellen Charry (Oxford University Press, 264 pp.; $45, hardcover). Reviewed by Douglas A. Sweeney, assistant professor of church history and the history of Christian thought at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School.

W e seminary teachers complain a lot. We bemoan the theological ignorance of even our healthiest congregations, the widespread co-optation of Christian minds by secular learning, the way pop psychology informs more sermons than does the Bible, the frequency with which church meetings are conducted like those in corporate boardrooms. In short, we worry about the ways in which many secular modes of "discourse" have usurped the roles of Scripture and Christian doctrine in helping us come to terms with reality. And we hope and pray that it is not too late to shape the way Christians think by building bridges between the seminaries and the churches. That is our job: to relate theological scholarship to the practical work of ministry.

As Ellen Charry of Princeton Seminary explains in By the Renewing of Your Minds, however, such concerns of theologians are misguided. The very effort to bridge the gap between our theory and our practice suggests that something has gone quite wrong in the way we approach theological study. As Charry argues, the best theologians (or at least her favorite theologians) throughout the history of the church have always viewed theology itself as a fundamentally practical field of study. It is only since theology has been professionalized within the walls of the academy that it has become so esoteric, unapproachable, and often impractical.

More important, in the early years of the development of Christian thought, theologians taught that theological study was supposed to be salutary—for all of us. The knowledge of God was supposed to be good for us. It was supposed to enhance our well-being. Christian doctrine was even supposed to make us happy. (Try telling that to a seminarian who is preparing for final exams!)

The idea was that God has created us for right relation with himself, and that this relationship cannot be maintained without theological in-formation. As we learn more about the One from whom we take our very being, we grow closer (both in proximity and in character) to the source of life, love, and happiness. We stop seeking endlessly for fulfillment in things like sex, money, and power, and we actually find fulfillment in the God who created our longings and desires. In the words of the church fathers, the study of theology actually enables us to participate in the very life of God.

Clearly, this vision for theological study no longer captivates many minds. Theology has become academic, ever more technical and abstract. As theological knowledge has been purveyed by "ivory-tower" intellectuals, it has been viewed as disconnected from life on the streets and in the pews. This result was not intended. Most scholastic theologians have been committed to Christ and his church. Nor has this proven entirely bad. Indeed, theological studies are now pursued with a great deal of rigor and sophistication. But it has meant that the best and brightest theologians are now professional academics who do their most important work within the confines of the schools. They converse primarily with other scholars, write their books for other scholars, and advance professionally among other scholars. Is it any wonder, then, that the laity have largely ignored them?

Charry wastes no time on nostalgic yearning for the past. Nor does she suggest that theologians abdicate their place within the academy; she herself is an academic, with no taste for the pap spooned by those who would dumb theology down. But she is earnest about her efforts to promote grassroots theological formation. She has a heart for helping everyday people come to know and love the Lord.

According to Charry, all of us—not least the theologians—should live our lives in ways that are thoroughly theological. We should recognize the ways in which Christian doctrine is aretegenic (a word Charry has coined, meaning "conducive to virtue"). And we should pursue the knowledge of God so that by getting to know him we might grow more like him.

What could possibly be more practical? In studying God, we come to know the One who made us for himself. In the process, we learn from him to live "the good life" (for Charry, as for many of the ancients, truth, goodness, and beauty hang together in the mind of God and are enjoyed together by his creatures the more their minds are conformed to his).

Charry unpacks her case for the "real world" relevance of Christian doctrine in a largely historical manner. After describing the New Testament foundations of what she likes to call aretology (particularly in the teachings of Jesus and Paul), she discusses the development of this kind of theology in three church fathers (Athanasius, Basil of Caesarea, and Augustine), three medievals (Anselm, Aquinas, and Julian of Norwich), and John Calvin. She argues throughout that Christian doctrine has proven the most conducive to virtue when it has depicted salvation ontologically, or in terms of participation in God's Trinitarian life—particularly in terms of our reunion with the Father, in and through the Son, by the power of the Holy Spirit—rather than functionally, or forensically, in terms of our legal release from the guilt of sin.

In the medieval period, she contends, our doctrine moved off the aretological track when the system of penance (from whose Latin root we get the English word penitentiary) was developed to deal with the problem of postbaptismal sin. God came to be viewed as an angry judge who was upset over human failure. And salvation came to be seen as a kind of parole that came at the end of a great deal of shameful and fearful punishment—a very forensic way indeed to view our relationship with the Lord.

During the Reformation, things changed for the better when Protestants challenged this view of salvation, recovering the doctrine of God's free grace that comes to us in spite of our many sins. But insofar as Protestants continued to encourage faith as a legal means of escaping the wrath of God, Charry argues, they too tended to truncate the earlier ontological view of salvation.

If this were not bad enough, Charry says that we moderns have ruined theology. For in the wake of the Enlightenment, "theology came to be thought of as the intellectual justification of the faith, apart from the practice of the Christian life." Consequently, Charry explains, "the wisdom of God has ceased to function in the church as the foundation of the good life. Theology is no longer expected to be a practical discipline, burdened as it is in the modern period with the awkwardness of speaking of God at all."

A dismal history indeed.

There are a few things that might be said by way of criticism of Charry's argument, one of which is that she has oversimplified much of the history of Christian thought. In her effort to explain the devastating effect of the penitential system on aretology, for example, she tends to treat its progenitors (especially Benedict of Nursia) as historical scapegoats.

And in her effort to convince us that doctrine is always best viewed as aretegenic, there are times when Charry belittles the historic importance of theological orthodoxy. Two examples will have to suffice. She writes, incredibly, that Paul "never thought of himself as developing a soteriology, or an ecclesiology, or a doctrine of scripture. He is always telling people what the case is, now, and how they are to understand and live in its light." Must these really be viewed as mutually exclusive alternatives?

As for Calvin, "it is not so much that a teaching is profitable because it is orthodox but that it is orthodox because it is profitable, since God only does for us that which is profitable for us." Granted, Calvin did believe that Christian orthodoxy was always profitable, but he did not believe it was orthodox because it was profitable. Further, "Calvin mentions specific doctrines only rarely, and these instances refer to what we moderns would call practices rather than doctrines." Anyone who has read Calvin's Institutes should sense that this is a misconstrual.

Charry is so intent on making God attractive to us, and on making the knowledge of God appear beneficial (or, perhaps more accurately, therapeutic) to us, that she overrepresents the softer, alluring side of God, and she underrepresents the angry, punitive side of God—a side that is clearly revealed in Scripture and that led to a genuine concern within the church regarding the danger of human sin.

This is the case throughout the book. But it becomes clearest in Charry's adulation for the medieval mystic Julian of Norwich, who held such a high view of human nature that she had to "take the need for human redemption on the faith of the church." Indeed, in contrast to other medievals obsessed with self-abasement and the fear of the Lord, Julian taught that there is no wrath in God at all. And in Charry's view, while there are still those who need to hear of God's wrath for human sin, there are others, "those of tender conscience, whose timidity and fearfulness debilitate them," who need to hear a message that sounds much more like Julian's.

In spite of these limitations, however, this remains a timely and powerful book. The weight of Charry's argument does not rest on every detail of her case. And it would be a shame to quibble so much that we miss her overriding concern. Indeed, theology is supposed to be good for us. When done well, it is good for all of us. And there are wonderful resources in the Christian tradition that can help us make it salutary again.

A Postmodern Primer to Doctrine

Glossary included.

The Cambridge Companion to Christian Doctrine, edited by Colin E. Gunton (Cambridge University Press, 307 pp; $59.95, hardcover; $18.95, paper). Reviewed by Elmer M. Colyer, assistant professor of historical theology at the University of Dubuque Theological Seminary.

The Cambridge Companion to Christian Doctrine is the first book in the series Cambridge Companions to Religion. Colin Gunton, one of the most important theologians in the United Kingdom today, has assembled an impressive array of essays by an equally significant cadre of authors. Gunton notes in the preface that it is a propitious moment for this volume, since Christian doctrine is no longer in the "doldrums," marginalized by the "apparent victory" of modernity. Indeed, it is no coincidence that the term postmodern and its variants are sprinkled throughout the book, signaling the massive cultural shift that has made the particularity of the Christian tradition a persuasive point of departure.

The two-pronged aim of the book is to "develop the promise inherent" in this "changed intellectual situation . . . and at the same time to provide an introduction for students and others of some of the central topics of theology." The tension between these two intents, however, tends to cast the book somewhat at cross purposes and undermines its conceptual and organizational clarity. The new reader or nonspecialist would be well advised to shift the order of the essays and, after reading Gunton's excellent introduction to Historical and Systematic Theology (chap. 1), turn immediately to the more introductory chapters of part 2 on the Content of Christian Doctrine. Within part 2, Geoffrey Wainwright's elegant essay on the Holy Spirit should be read before Robert Jenson's chapter on the Church and the Sacraments.

Each of the eight chapters in part 2 addresses a major topic within traditional Christian doctrine. Following the essays by Wainwright and Jenson, the reader might take up Ralph Del Colle's essay on the Triune God, a splendid overview of the biblical foundations, patristic development, medieval consolidation, and modern conversation concerning this doctrine.

Some of the essays in part 2 are lengthy and constructive. Kevin Vanhoozer's essay summarizes classic Christian anthropology, modern and postmodern alternatives, the anthropologies of Rahner, Barth, Panenberg, and recent relational (Trinitarian) perspectives, all before developing Vanhoozer's own constructive proposal, which centers on human beings as "communicative agent[s] in a web of communicative relationships with others."

Other essays in part 2 are concise summaries. Trevor Hart's essay on Redemption and Fall discusses biblical metaphors before outlining three main theories or models for redemption (deification, satisfaction, self-realization) in the history of the church. In discussing leading representatives of each model, Hart briefly considers the extent to which social location may have influenced the theories' expression of this doctrine.

Kathryn Tanner's essay on Jesus Christ (chap. 13) summarizes the entire history of Christology in a page and a half. The body of the essay is a sophisticated critique (beyond the level of beginners) of modern theology's unself-critical and habitual transposition of Christology into modern epistemological idioms. All of this is supposed to serve Tanner's agenda of pushing Christology "in a new, postmodern direction," but the constructive element never gets off the ground in this essay.

Other chapters in part 2 deal with Creation (Colin Gunton) and Eschatology (David Fergusson). Both present the biblical backgrounds of the respective doctrines, trace their trajectories through the history of Christian thought, and identify current issues that require further attention.

After completing part 2, the theological novice can return to part 1 and make better sense of the other generally more difficult essays found there. Gunton's essay on Historical and Systematic Theology delineates these disciplines in relation to one another and discusses several questions related to theological method, including the relation between theology and culture (Irenaeus/Origen), faith and reason (Anselm/Aquinas), and content and method (Schleiermacher/Barth). Gunton is clear in his preference for Irenaeus, Anselm, and Barth as providing the most fruitful way forward for Christian theology in the aftermath of the postmodern criticism of criticism.

Stanley Hauerwas's essay on Doctrine and Ethics is not an introduction at all, but rather a clever apologetic (beyond most beginners). Hauerwas offers a carefully constructed and scintillating genealogy of the relation between doctrine and ethics, showing what led to their divorce in the modern period and calling for their reunion.

Gerald Loughlin's fine essay (again not for beginners) on the Basis and Authority of Doctrine acknowledges the postmodern context of current work in theology but rejects dogmatic postmodern pluralism. Loughlin calls for an understanding of doctrine as "the grammar and rule, the stage-direction, of a traditioned performance of the story that alone calls it into being: the life, death and resurrection of Jesus Christ."

The remaining three essays of part 1 include Francis Watson on the Scope of Hermeneutics, Bruce D. Marshall on the Jewish People and Christian Theology, and Jeremy Begbie on Christianity and the Arts. All three present outstanding constructive proposals.

The fragmentation that remains after the collapse of modernity's pretensions to universality is somewhat exemplified in the multiple visions encoded in these essays. The postconservative, postliberal centrist perspective that holds the collection loosely together repeatedly comes into tension with the multiple philosophical commitments, ecclesial traditions, and university communities of the various authors.

Make no mistake—this is a stunning collection, one that I will include on the collateral reading list for my course on Christian doctrine; but I fear that what makes this Cambridge Companion a complex and intriguing friend for a seminary professor like myself creates a companion with a rather complicated personality that may well bewilder the new reader or nonspecialist. Then again, maybe this complexity is what makes this text an ideal initiation into Christian doctrine in the postmodern context: though fruitfully diverse, it is in danger of being frustratingly plural.

FEATURING
BEST SELLING
AUTHORS BRINGING INSIGHT INTO BIBLICAL
ISRAEL SITES
ON LOCATION

THE TEN DAYS OF ISRAEL THAT WILL LAST A LIFETIME...

• Jim Reimann (Streams In The Desert
& My Utmost For His Highest updated editions)

• Ray Vander Laan
(That the World
May Know)

• Grant Jeffrey
(The Handwriting of God)

• Larry Grubb
(Connecting)

• Sigmund Brouwer
(The Weeping Chamber)

• David Arkman
(Great Souls)
• And more!

THE STREAMS IN THE DESERT TOUR

presented by

FAMILY
CHRISTIAN STORES

ISRAEL

THE SEVEN RESTORATION OF THE MIDDLE EAST

EL VAL 7N 2

It's not just a word, it's a plan.

DON'T MISS THIS TOUR
10 DAY ISRAEL TOUR
APRIL 26 - MAY 5, 1999

PRICE $1999 PER PERSON
(FROM NEW YORK, NEWARK, CHICAGO)
DEPARTURE FROM OTHER CITIES AVAILABLE

YOUR TRIP INCLUDES:

- Visit major Bible sites
- Round trip coach airfare from point of departure
- First class beautiful hotels
- 2 meals each day
- Entrance fees to sites
- Water baptism in the River Jordan
- Comprehensive tour
- English speaking Israeli guides
- Transfer and portage to/from Tel Aviv

SPECIAL EVENTS

- Promenade Program Jerusalem
- Lighting of the Sabbath candles
- Mount of Beatitudes special program
- Bar Shean Evening Music Concert
Featuring Contemporary Christian Artists
- Caesarea by the Sea Evening Music Concert
- Masada included
- David's Citadel Evening Concert

1.888.321.3629

PLEASE CALL FOR INFORMATION WHILE SEATS ARE STILL AVAILABLE!
AUTHORS, ARTISTS AND SITES SUBJECT TO CHANGE WITHOUT NOTICE

VISIT THE FOLLOWING SITES
Temple Mount,
Via Dolorosa,

Upper Room,

Qumran,

Dead Sea, Ein

Gedi,

Shepherds

Field,

Berhlehem,

Mt. of Olives,

Garden of Gethsemane,

David's Citadel, Pools of

Bethesda, Garden Tomb,

Yad

Vashem,

Western

Wall,

King David's Tomb,

• Gordon's Calvary,

Church of All Nations,

Harod, Megiddo, Mt.

Carmel,

Capernaum,

Tahgha,

Boat Ride

on the Sea of Galilee,

Jordan Valley, Herod's

Palace,

Valley of the Shadow,

Jericho,

Jerusalem

ALSO FEATURING
THE INTERNATIONAL
PREMIER
LIVE CONCERT
OF STREAMS
IN THE DESERT
FEATURING
CONTEMPORARY CHRISTIAN MUSIC'S
FINEST ARTISTS

• Point Of Grace

• Jaci Velasquez
• And many more!

ASTORS, PLEASE ASK ABOUT A VERY SPECIAL OPPORTUNITY FOR YOU

PREPARE FOR IMPACT.

You've got the desire.
The devotion. The determination to do whatever God calls
you to do. All you need

But more important, you need to develop the spiritual character that comes from applying what you learn to your life.
And by being held accountable to a body of believers through personal discipleship

now is the right place to prepare.

You need dedicated professors who will push you academically, lead you spiritually and give you a rock-solid grounding in God's Word.

You need to polish practical ministry skills that will work everywhere from the Amazon to the asphalt jungle.

You need to be challenged and enriched by the viewpoints of fellow students from dozens of denominations, 37 states and 21 countries.

and the highest standards of conduct.

So if you want to have an impact in the world, choose the seminary that can have the greatest impact on you. Call Columbia Biblical Seminary today
at 1-800-777-2227.

Columbia Biblical Seminary & Graduate School of Missions

A division of Columbia International University

7435 Monticello Rd. • P.O. Box 3122 • Columbia, SC 29230-3122

803.754.4100 • Toll Free 1.800.777.2227 • www.ciu.edu

Preparing World Christians To Know Him And To Make Him Known

CALL FOR OUR EXTENSION CATALOG

A T L A N T I C

GRADUATE THEOLOGICAL EDUCATION:

Who PAYS the BILL$?

Those responsible for the financial health at theological graduate schools have had to change with the times.

Virtually every day, men and women throughout the U.S. and around the world hear God calling them to specialized Christian ministry, ministry that either requires—or could greatly benefit from—higher theological education.

But one of the biggest reasons people hesitate to respond to that call is money. Many feel they do not have sufficient financial resources to pay for graduate education. Some are already saddled with debt from their undergraduate school days and hesitant to borrow more money because they know that a career as an overseas missionary or small-town pastor will probably not enable them to pay it back anytime soon.

Fortunately, theological seminaries and Christian graduate schools do not operate like businesses—opening their doors only to those who can clearly afford the price—but rather as ministries, trying to find ways to help people financially. By and large, these Christian institutions believe a lack of financial resources should not be enough reason to prevent a person from pursuing God's call to ministry.

This does not, of course, mean that someone who wants to attend seminary or graduate school should ignore the financial realities. Rather, such persons will likely have to make personal financial sacrifices and step out in faith. But they should do so realizing that there are people at the institutions they want to attend who will do all they can to help them fulfill their vision for a ministry career.

Bridging the gaps

Statistics available from the Association of Theological Schools (ATS) readily reveal the extent to which institutions go to help students financially. According to the 1997–98 ATS Fact Book, full-time students from member institutions paid an average of about $6,200 in tuition and fees during the 1996–97 academic year. At the same time, the actual annual cost of educating a single student was over $24,500. Thus, ATS schools on average charged students only about one-fourth the real cost of a seminary or graduate school education.

The remaining three-fourths of the cost comes from a variety of sources, ranging from gifts from alumni to churches to foundations to individuals who care about and recognize the importance of graduate theological education. These fundraising efforts are coordinated by the development (sometimes called “advancement”) offices at each institution. The gap between tuition income and what it costs to educate students is bridged by donations, typically referred to by each institution as its “annual fund.”

How well are seminaries and graduate institutions doing in the effort to raise funds? According to one

(Continued on page 102)

ROOTED
IN GRACE
FOR A LIFETIME
OF
MINISTRY

COVENANT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

and the Francis Schaeffer Institute

1-800-264-8064

12330 Conway Rd. • St. Louis, MO 63141

Website: www.covenantseminary.edu

E-mail: admissions@covenantseminary.edu

Graduate Theological Education: Who Pays the Bills?

(from page 101)

SPECIAL ADVERTISING SECTION

figure from the ATS Fact Book, they are doing extremely well. As noted above, while the average expenditure per full-time student amounted to $24,500, the total average revenue per student was over $38,000.

Does this mean that seminaries and theological graduate schools have arrived on easy street? Not by a long shot—at least, not according to ATS official Matt Zyniewicz. Zyniewicz says the $38,000 figure is distorted by the handful of institutions that have huge endowment income and thus, for the most part, never have to worry about finances. According to Zyniewicz, however, a solid majority of seminaries and graduate institutions must work hard to balance their budgets each year if they are to succeed at keeping the cost to students as low as possible.

This becomes a particular challenge in light of the rising costs of education generally. The case could be made that the technological revolution of recent years has created a unique era of rising costs. For example, virtually all seminaries now have their own Web sites. Graduate schools and seminaries have worked hard not to be left behind, updating classrooms to accommodate the latest technology and equipping dormitory rooms and study areas with computer ports.

Specific sources and percentages of revenue vary from institution to institution.

"To stay up to date from a technological perspective takes money," observes Ann McKusick, vice president for institutional advancement at Fuller Theological Seminary. "I think most would agree that we cannot expect students to pay for it." Perhaps this helps

(Continued on page 114)

GRACE UNIVERSITY

MASTER OF ARTS • COUNSELING

Grace University's Masters of Arts in Counseling is Biblically based and designed to meet the standards of the National Board of Certified Counselors (NBCC), and prepare the student for their licensure exam. Grace University also offers Masters of Arts degrees in Biblical Studies, and Educational Ministries.

GRACE
UNIVERSITY

Academic Excellence & Life Change

1311 South 9th Street • Omaha, NE 68108

1-800-383-1422

<http://www.graceu.edu>

WE PRACTICE WHAT WE TEACH

FULLER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

An unchanging focus for an ever-changing world

135 NORTH OAKLAND AVENUE, PASADENA, CA 91182

1-800-AFULLER HTTP://WWW.FULLER.EDU

Pasadena Seattle Sacramento Menlo Park Irvine Phoenix Colorado Springs

From the day Fuller Theological Seminary opened its doors half a century ago, our faculty and students have shared a dual commitment: to outstanding biblical scholarship and to the ministry of Christ.

That same focus remains central to the Fuller mission today. Our professors not only excel in the classroom, but they are out in the world, pastoring churches, engaging in mission, practicing psychology. Just as founding faculty member Carl F. H. Henry used to witness between theology classes, so New Testament scholar Isaac Canales serves as minister of a 1,300-member church and volunteer chaplain to a high school football team. Judith Tiersma Watson lives and works among the poor in Los Angeles as part of InnerChange, when she's not teaching classes in urban mission. And they are joined by scores of Fuller colleagues who are equally active on campus and in the community.

The reason for their dedication is simple: Teaching and preaching are the best ways we know to nurture keen minds and compassionate hearts.

Still faithful.
Still Fuller.

Churches Can Help Seminaries and Graduate Schools

When local church leaders consider how they will distribute dollars earmarked for missions, they typically think first of overseas ministries. Or perhaps they have in mind a local food bank or an outreach to the homeless. Whatever the case, for some churches, giving to a seminary or graduate school seems to fall outside the definition of missions giving.

This is not true for all churches, of course. Yet, to the extent it is true, it is unfortunate. For the reality is that neither the institutional church nor the collective missionary enterprise could long survive without the educational and spiritual anchors provided by theological seminaries and graduate schools.

The value of graduate theological training

The overwhelming majority of pastors who are serving faithfully in local congregations got their training from a theological seminary. Their ability to teach sound doctrine came from their study of biblical languages and the Old and New Testaments. Homiletics classes enabled them to hone their preaching skills. Their faith and spirituality have been enriched by their understanding of biblical cultures and church history. Their understanding of how to deal with the problems and challenges of ministry was most likely enhanced by the field experiences they had while pursuing a seminary degree. At seminary, they learned how to help people overcome their personal problems or to refer those people to others who are better able to help.

True, no one can learn all he or she needs to know about ministry in just three years of seminary. But without having attended seminary, many pastors would not even know where to begin. Many typical churchgoers take seminaries for granted. They know that a seminary is a school where people go to prepare for pastoral ministry, but somehow they do not always make the connection between the vigorous work, pain, and prayer that characterize the seminary experience and the fruit of effective ministry. Any church that takes

(Continued on page 106)

At Beeson, Pastors Matter.

YOUR COMMITMENT AS A PASTOR IS TO MINISTER FOR A LIFETIME.
AT BEESON, IT'S OUR MISSION TO PREPARE AND SUPPORT PERSONS LIKE YOU.

BEESON'S DOCTOR OF MINISTRY DEGREE (D.MIN.) is designed to enrich ministry and seeks to advance practical skills. With minimal on-campus study (two-week seminars in July and January each year), the D.Min. degree program is practical for ministers who are "in the trenches." Our commitment to be explicitly evangelical in an ecumenical setting on a university campus enhances our ability to provide you with ongoing opportunities to learn and grow.

Candidates for the program are admitted each July. The deadline for admission is March 1. For specific information, write or call Danny Blair, Director of Admissions and Recruitment, at 1-800-888-8266.

SAMFORD UNIVERSITY
Birmingham, Alabama 35229-22
1-800-888-8266
<http://beeson.samford.edu>

Beeson is affiliated with the National Association of Evangelicals and is accredited by The Association of Theological Schools in the United States and Canada. Samford University is an Equal Opportunity Institution and welcomes applications for employment and educational programs from all individuals regardless of race, color, sex, disability or national or ethnic origin.

Scholarship Committed

The academic reputation of Wheaton College Graduate School is no accident. Distinguished faculty, outstanding graduates, and renowned authors have made it what it is today—an educational experience that challenges students to integrate personal faith with academic discipline.

What you may not know is that Wheaton College Graduate School is dedicated to providing students with the knowledge and skills to help build the church, confront social problems, and bring a Christian perspective to any endeavor, anywhere in the world. This vision for Christian ministry is not only shared in the classroom, but lived out in the lives of our professors.

We believe that academic theory—like Christian faith—is meaningless without practical application. For more information about the graduate programs at Wheaton College please call, 1-800-888-0141 or e-mail usadgradadm@wheaton.edu. Check out our website at: www.wheaton.edu.

GRADUATE SCHOOL

WHEATON, ILLINOIS

to Servanthood.

Wheaton College Graduate School has programs designed to prepare students for responsible service and effective leadership. Call 1-800-888-0141 for specific details about any one of them.

Master of Arts degree in • Biblical Archaeology
• Biblical and Theological Studies • Teaching
• Clinical Psychology • Educational Ministries
• Evangelism • Interdisciplinary Studies
• Missions and Intercultural Studies

Doctoral degree in Clinical Psychology (PsyD)

Certificate programs in • Advanced Biblical Studies
• Leadership and Camp Ministry
• Teaching English as a Second Language

seminaries for granted is almost certainly unaware of how central a role these institutions play in preparing people for pastoral ministry.

This same line of reasoning applies to Christian graduate schools, which provide the theological bases out of which the church operates and which, in many cases, train those who will be taking the gospel to other cultures and lands around the world. It is at graduate school where future missionaries grapple with the dynamics and implications of cross-cultural ministry. It is here that they learn about the customs and beliefs of the people to whom they will be going. It is here that they solidify their own understanding of the Christian faith and develop the spiritual and emotional resources necessary to sustain them over the long journey ahead.

Any church that recognizes the relationship between sound theology and effective ministry—as well as the relationship between thorough preparation and successful mission outreach—should be among the most ardent supporters of graduate theological institutions.

To put it another way, when churches consider how to divide their missions budgets, they should not think of giving to seminaries and graduate schools as an alternative to giving to missions, for the truth is the two cannot be separated. Any church that channels a portion of its giving to a seminary or graduate school is in effect really supporting missions in a very significant and important way.

Churches should not make the mistake of thinking that supporting seminaries and graduate schools has been and continues to be someone else's duty. Some seminaries are calling on churches to do more than they have in the past because of rising costs and because some traditional sources of funds, such as money from a denomination, are drying up.

Ways churches can contribute

Some churches with a high regard for higher theological education may be hesitant to provide general financial support to just any seminary or graduate school. Such churches may want to give based on some personal connection to a seminary or graduate school. Perhaps a church—out of a commitment to overseas missions—could help underwrite the educational costs of a student who is coming from another country who plans to return to his or her country as a more effective ambassador for Christ.

Certainly churches who have within their membership men and women who

(Continued on page 108)

Have You Heard the News?

Master of Divinity Degree Now available at Moody!

In the Moody Bible Institute tradition, the new Master of Divinity degree (MDiv) is practical and solidly positioned on Bible and theology. This degree offers you the chance to:

- study Greek and Hebrew
- earn field experience
- and • it's affordable!

All classes are taught by conscientious faculty who are committed to ministry. Many classes will be on a modular schedule, allowing you to remain in ministry while pursuing your degree. If you are a Bible college graduate, you may already have advanced standing credit.

The MDiv will officially be offered in Fall '99, but you can start now by calling 1-800-967-4MBL.

Moody Bible Institute
820 N. La Salle Blvd.
Chicago, IL 60610

Visit our Web site at www.moody.edu for more information about Moody's Graduate School!

START A "CHANGE REACTION" IN YOUR CHURCH

This is a living, breathing, working degree. You may hang it on your wall, but it will live in your heart.

When you're ready for this bold move, this change reaction, give us a call—we will introduce you to Richard Foster. You may know him as the acclaimed speaker or the prolific author. But he is much more. Here, at the Haggard Graduate School, he leads an unequaled group of godly professors committed to their call.

DR. RICHARD FOSTER

He literally wrote the book on spiritual formation and is ready to work with you toward a deeper, more intense ministry.

The program, in essence, also seems to live. By design, it allows for new ideas and perspectives. It takes into consideration how very individualized ministry can be. Passionate, in-depth discussions erupt regularly both one-on-one and in the classroom. Growth and learning at the Haggard Graduate School of Theology are always reciprocal—rooted in a solid scriptural foundation, tirelessly seeking truth and understanding.

It could revive your ministry, your parishioners, . . . YOU. It's worth looking into.

Call APU's Haggard Graduate School of Theology at (626) 812-3049 and cause a Change Reaction.

OUR DOCTOR OF MINISTRY TEAM

DR. EARL GRANT

DR. KENNETH GANGEL

DR. JOHN MAXWELL

DR. JESSE MIRANDA

DR. JIM GARLOW

DR. KEVIN MANNOIA

DR. JOHN TIMOTHY KAUFFMAN

FOR MORE INFORMATION, CALL
DR. EARL GRANT AT (626) 812-3049.

AZUSA PACIFIC
UNIVERSITY

Haggard Graduate School of Theology

901 E. Alosta Ave., PO Box 7000, Azusa, CA 91702-7000
(626) 812-3049 • FAX (626) 815-3809 • <http://www.apu.edu>

have been called to ministries that require graduate theological preparation can support their own students and perhaps, through them, establish a relationship of support with the institution.

Churches pleased with the work their own pastor is doing can assume that seminary had something to do with it and can support their pastor's alma mater financially. Sometimes it may be difficult for a pastor to ask a congregation to support his or her seminary. For a congregation to take the initiative is an expression of high praise, as if saying to the pastor, "We affirm you in what you are doing, and we want to do our part to make sure that the church of Christ has more people like you in positions of pastoral leadership." Some churches may even want to launch or contribute to a scholarship fund or academic chair—or build and furnish a new classroom—in their pastor's name.

No church should ever think that a financial gift is too small to be worth giving. Virtually any development officer at a seminary or graduate school would say that if all churches and individuals declined to give because they thought their gift was too small, their institutions would be in big trouble.

Money is not the only way churches can support theological education.

Even a small gift to a seminary can go a long way, based not on its size, but rather on what it communicates. For example, more and more seminaries are looking toward philanthropic foundations in order to launch new educational programs or building projects. Some of these foundations base their decisions not on the depth, but on the breadth of support for a particular institution. Participation in donor campaigns by alumni, friends, and faculty and staff is sometimes viewed as a barometer of an institution's commitment to communicating its message and to serving its various constituencies.

Thus, sometimes to give a small gift can communicate more about caring than by giving a big one. The more churches who demonstrate that they care enough about a school to give a small gift, the better the chances that school has of being deemed worthy by a foundation to receive significant financial support. The widow was not ashamed to give her mite. Nor should churches be.

Churches—once or twice a year—might consider inviting a representative from a theological seminary or graduate school to host a seminar or preach. Such an event could include a freewill offering taken on (Continued on page 110)

Knowledge on Fire

Our purpose, for the last 25 years has been to train men and women to fulfill the Great Commission.

Combining academic excellence with Pentecostal fervor, AGTS graduate programs are designed to propel graduates into powerful, life-changing ministry. Our goal is to set knowledge on fire.

Each faculty and staff member is committed to a Spirit-filled life and ministry. Biblical and theological studies, counseling principles, pastoral training, educational methodology, and missiological strategies are all taught within the Pentecostal tradition.

You want an accredited seminary with a good reputation...and one that is affordable. Give us a call at 1-800-467-AGTS.

Change your world with knowledge on fire!

Receive your:

- Doctor of Ministry
- Master of Divinity
- M.A. in Missiology
- M.A. in Theological Studies
- M.A. in Counseling
- M.A. in Christian Ministries

New

ASSEMBLIES OF GOD
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

1435 N. GLENSTONE AVENUE
SPRINGFIELD, MISSOURI 65802
(417) 268-1000 • 1-800-467-AGTS
EMAIL: AGTSADMISS.AG.ORG •
WWW.AGTS.EDU

M

MATTHEW

E

MARK

E

LUKE

T

JOHN

At Dallas Seminary you'd expect to study the writings of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John in the pages of the Bible—and you will. DTS offers the finest biblical training anywhere. You'll also learn how to put God's Word to work as you study with fellow students and alumni like Matthew Blackwell, Mark Irving, Luke Pak, and John Dodd.

They are just a few of the more than 1,500 students and over 8,500 alumni of Dallas Seminary who are taking the Word to a hurting world. You can choose from ten fully accredited master's or doctoral degree programs with emphases in areas like pastoral ministries, cross-cultural ministries, Christian education, theological studies, and much, much more.

For more information on how you can study with Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, call, write, or check out our Website. Dallas Seminary has been standing strong for the truth for almost 75 years.

3909 Swiss Avenue
Dallas, Texas 75204
(800) 992-0998
www.dts.edu

"We will teach you the Bible and how to communicate it effectively."

Chuck Swindoll,
President

DALLAS
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

behalf of the institution. This gives the institution an opportunity to raise awareness about what it is doing.

Beyond money

Support for seminaries and theological graduate schools need not be limited to money. Among the best ways churches can support seminaries, for example, is by recommending students. Church leaders, including pastors, can be on the lookout for young men and women (or even older persons looking for a career change) who possess the qualities necessary to succeed in ministry. After all, sometimes God calls through other people in the community, especially the church community.

Churches can identify potential institutional board members who have an interest in graduate theological education and can make a contribution in terms of organizational leadership. A businessperson, for example, may not be able to contribute a great deal financially, but the administrative or investment advice he or she provides as a board member could save the institution thousands of dollars annually.

Those churches that are within an hour's drive of an institution can support it by providing volunteers, perhaps to serve in the library or to stuff envelopes for a mailing. Faithful and dependable volunteers can help institutions save thousands of dollars over the long run. And it sometimes happens that when volunteers visit a campus, they get excited about what is happening there and are transformed into goodwill ambassadors for the school.

Churches—near or far—can also open their doors to student interns. Seminaries especially are constantly in search of more options for students to do field education. This benefits the church by adding to its pastoral staff. It benefits seminary students for obvious reasons. It also benefits the seminary to have the chance to raise awareness of its mission through its students, who are among its best representatives.

Those involved in development work recognize the close relationship that exists between raising awareness of a school's mission and acquiring the financial support needed to fulfill that mission. Generally, people do not give to institutions. But they do give in response to worthy visions and to stories of worthy people who need help to continue on their ministry paths.

Churches would do well to explore the many options open to them when it comes to helping seminaries and graduate schools tell their stories and spread their vision. Of course, if in addition a church wants to consider giving to a seminary or graduate school as part of its missions budget, no development officer will attempt to intervene.

—KLR

REFORMED EPISCOPAL

Since 1887

Philadelphia Theological Seminary

Committed to training capable pastors, effective missionaries and competent lay-workers.

Since 1887 we have been training Christ's people for Christ's ministry in Christ's way. If you are looking for a Seminary with a rock-solid commitment to the Bible as the Word of God, a faculty of scholar-pastors, fidelity to "the faith once delivered to the saints," and a seminary experience packed full of practical pastoral experience and training in preaching the Word of God, PTS may well be the Seminary for you.

Ask about our one-third scholarships for resident M.Div. Students

or

Talk to us about beginning with Seminary At A Distance.

We are Biblical, Episcopal, Liturgical, Evangelical and Reformed.

For more information call or write:

Philadelphia Theological Seminary
7372 Henry Avenue
Philadelphia, PA 19128-1401

1-800-899-5158
Associate Member of
The Association of Theological Schools

Explicitly evangelical

*what we mean
by what we say*

Explicitly evangelical. From the founding of Samford University's Beeson Divinity School in 1988, we have used these words to describe what we believe, under God, our school is about.

THEOLOGICAL INTEGRITY. In an age of relativism and secularism, we do not declare theological neutrality. We affirm without reservation the total truthfulness of Holy Scripture and the great principles of historic Christian orthodoxy. On these central values of the gospel we cannot and we will not compromise. We believe that theology is best done in a community of love and trust, so we pledge to nurture one another toward full maturity in Christ.

MISSIONS AND EVANGELISM. Evangelicals are "Great Commission" Christians who are determined to share the good news of Jesus Christ. At Beeson we believe this missionary mandate should inform every aspect of a theological education. We also know that we cannot share what we have not received, and so we commit ourselves to a pattern of theological training which emphasizes the disciplines of the Christian faith, a life of prayer and worship, witness and discipleship, and social compassion with justice and peace.

CHRISTIAN UNITY. Although our school is related in a special way to the Baptist tradition, we belong to a wider community of Bible-believing Christians, a fellowship in Christ which transcends the boundaries of denominational divergence. It is imperative for Christians who believe the gospel to stand and work together in the name of the one Lord whom we worship and serve.

May God help us to be faithful to these marks of evangelical identity as we seek to build the kind of school which will honor the Lord Jesus Christ and serve the upbuilding of His church.

Soli Deo Gloria!

Timothy George

Dean

SAMFORD UNIVERSITY
Birmingham, Alabama

FOR INFORMATION ABOUT BEESON DIVINITY SCHOOL CALL 1-800-888-8266

Beeson is affiliated with the National Association of Evangelicals and is accredited by The Association of Theological Schools in the United States and Canada. Samford University is an Equal Opportunity Institution and welcomes applications for employment and educational programs from all individuals regardless of race, color, sex, disability, or national or ethnic origin.

COLORADO CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY

Master of Arts in Counseling

CCU's Master of Arts in Counseling program offers a distinctive approach to counseling. In its seventeenth year, the program emphasizes biblical/theological knowledge as a framework for understanding personal difficulties.

BIBLICAL COUNSELING TRACK

A foundational one-year program designed to build and improve counseling and/or relational skills.

PROFESSIONAL COUNSELING TRACK

A two-year program designed to meet requirements for those seeking careers as Licensed Professional Counselors (LPC).

An approach to counseling that emphasizes character over technique, that promotes maturity over relief, that values loving wisdom over theory.

—Larry Crabb

Professor and Distinguished Scholar in Residence at Colorado Christian University,

Author of Inside Out Finding God, Connecting

3 0 3 - 2 0 2 - 0 1 0 0

w w w . c c u . e d u

Accredited by North Central Association

North Park Theological Seminary helped David Kersten improve his preaching skills through the Doctor of Ministry in Preaching, a program of the Association of Chicago Theological Schools.

"The Doctor of Ministry in Preaching at North Park Theological Seminary is a wonderfully practical approach to growth in preaching. The preaching faculty at North Park give you direct input and clear guidance to growth and greater impact through the ministry of preaching."

David Kersten, D. Min. '97
Senior Pastor, First Covenant Church
St. Paul, Minnesota

David Kersten Knows Preaching is Central to Ministry

This three-year summer residency program involves review of videotaped sermons preached in your own church, and a final thesis in Preaching Ministry. Peer interaction and direct work with small groups in your context of ministry keep the program grounded in the realities of ministry.

Participating seminaries include: Chicago Theological Seminary, Lutheran School of Theology at Chicago, McCormick Theological Seminary, Northern Baptist Theological Seminary, and Seabury-Western Theological Seminary.

A limited number of students are accepted each year. For more information contact North Park Theological Seminary's Admissions Office at (773) 244-5530 or (800) 964-0101, or the ACTS D.Min. in Preaching Program Office at (773) 947-6270.

NORTH PARK
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

3225 West Foster Avenue Chicago, Illinois 60625-4895
773.244.5530 or 800.964.0101 Fax 773.244.6244
email: semadmissions@northpark.edu website: www.northpark.edu/sem/

CONTENTS

Essays

- The Rest of the Story Doug Frank 9
 America as Noise, the Self as Silence Jon Wallace 21
 Spots of Time Max Heine 27

Studies

- Facing Evil as a Crime Victim Dan B. Allender 35
 Passionate Love Mary Blt House 53

The Mars Hill Interview

- The Death of the Church
 A Conversation with Michael B. Regele
Dan B. Allender, Kim Hutchins, and Stuart Hancock 65

Reminders of God

The Writing Life

- Fiction*
 I Don't Read Rilke Anymore Leif Peterson 89
Nonfiction
 It's Not Fear of Commitment... Really
 The Radio James A. Sperrill 98
Kevin Heath 103

Poetry

- "We Know This to Start With" Laci Shaw 108
 "Daddy" Laci Shaw 109
 "Last Thoughts, Going to Sleep" Wilmer Mills 112
 "A Codes for Killing" Wilmer Mills 114
 "Jonestown Koolaid" Judith Terry McCune 117
 "Getting Well" Paul Willis 118
 "Gifts" Katherine Kellogg Towler 119
 "Secrets" Catherine O'Neill Thorn 120

Views and Reviews

- Music*
 Essay: When We Were Good Douglas Thorpe 121
 Reviews: Anthology of American Folk Music Douglas Thorpe 127
Global Divas Douglas Thorpe 130
Music Also Reviewed Douglas Thorpe 133

Books

- Reviews: Mahler: A Biography Jonathan Carr James Vescevi 135
Where Trucks Sleep Clyde Edgerton, David W. Fraser 138
To Timbuktu: A Journey Down the Niger Mark Jenkins James Vescevi 140 Books Also Reviewed Sheryl Cornett 143

Film

- Essays: Fiction into Film Sheryl Cornett 144
 Seeing Red: The Pattern Emerges Nancy Tilly 148
 Films Also Reviewed Sheryl Cornett 153

Rivoli

- Timeless graffiti Compiled by James Vescevi 154

In Memoriam: Brent L. Curtis

Dan B. Allender 157

1-800-990-MARS
 www.marshillforum.org in association with
 WESTERN SEMINARY SEATTLE

TOTAL GIVING TO ALL MEMBER SCHOOLS BY SOURCE, 1996-97

Category	OPERATIONAL GIFTS		CAPITAL GIFTS
	Amount ($000)	% of Total	Amount ($000)	% of Total
Individuals
Alumni/ae	$15,772.2	5.9	$12,442.0	9.8
Others	85,692.1	32.2	81,433.1	64.1
Subtotals	101,464.4	38.2	93,875.1	73.9
Organizations
Foundations	$29,178.6	11.0	$18,171.7	14.3
Corporations	11,114.0	4.2	4,074.8	3.2
Religious Organizations	112,709.7	42.4	9,162.6	7.2
Consortia	3,017.7	1.1	581.8	0.5
Other	8,471.4	3.2	1,182.2	0.9
Subtotals	164,491.4	61.8	33,173.2	26.1
Total	$265,955.7		$127,048.3

Number of Respondents: 217

Figures are reported in U.S. dollars. Canadian dollars have been converted at a rate of $0.72 U.S.

Based on the 1997-98 ATS Fact Book on Theological Education

Real Ministry for REAL LIFE

Dr. John J. Davis, Professor of Old Testament

Grace Theological Seminary offers
 M.A. and M.Div. programs in four tracks:
Pastoral Ministries • Intercultural Ministries
Counseling • Youth and Family Ministries

D.Min. programs are offered in two tracks:
Pastoral Ministries • Intercultural Ministries

Call Don Johnston today for more information.

At Grace Theological Seminary, we place a high value on ministry. Whether you're planning to pastor a local church, counsel troubled families, minister to inner-city youth, or plant churches in the Middle East, we have the programs and the faculty help make your calling a reality.

Dr. Ronald T. Clutter's History of Doctrine Class

1-800-54-GRACE

200 Seminary Drive • Winona Lake, IN 46590
 www.grace.edu • gtsrec@grace.edu

GRACE
 THEOLOGICAL
 SEMINARY

explain why, according to ATS, tuition increased by 4 percent during the 1995-96 academic year, while the expenditures per full-time student increased by over twice that amount.

Nevertheless, says ATS's Zyniewicz, the last few years have, in general, been healthy financial years for seminaries and graduate schools. "The numbers that were coming in to us last year were so good," he says, "that in some cases we went back to the institutions to check if their figures were accurate." They were.

A variety of revenue streams

For the most part, all seminaries draw revenue from alumni, churches, foundations, and individuals committed to graduate theological education. In addition, some draw significant percentages of revenue from investment interest or church denominations, though the specific sources and percentages of revenue vary greatly from institution to institution.

It would seem apparent that a $10 contribution to a seminary or graduate school would not go very far. But thousands of $5 and $10 contributions can go a long way indeed. By and large, that is how Moody Graduate School (of Moody Bible Institute) is able to offer an education at a tuition rate that is about one-third the average for similar schools.

Moody has no endowment and no desire to begin one. Bud Hopkins, Moody's dean of graduate programs, says, "Our goal each year is to give the students the opportunity to get a quality education for as little as possible. We encourage them to apply for whatever money is available, and we distribute it till it's gone."

The same kind of approach applies when the institution wants to expand, either in terms of buildings or programs. Says Hopkins, "We spend only what we have. We don't build a new building until it's already paid for."

To some, it may seem impossible to imagine a school being able to survive year after year in this fashion. Yet Moody not only survives; it thrives. It

(Continued on page 116)

22833 Bothell Everett Hwy
Suite 1122
Bothell WA 98021 9365
1-888-WSS-2002
www.marshallforum.org

READING IS FUNDAMENTAL. And at Western Seminary Seattle, we teach our students to "read" on three levels. That's because, to effectively engage our postmodern culture with the hope of the gospel, one must become a master reader of three "texts"... the Bible, the human soul and today's culture.

We're strategically positioned in this world-leading city to train you with 21st century approaches to ministry. We seek thoughtful, reflective students captured by a timeless mandate to reveal Christ in today's post-Christian culture. Our accredited degree programs are led by author and psychologist Dr. Dan Allender and a team of noted theologians and counselors.

So schedule some time and come read with us. For more information about our Master of Spiritual Nurture (with Counseling and Youth Ministry majors) and Master of Divinity offerings, 1-888-WSS-2002 please call us toll free.

To order a copy of our journal the Mars Hill Review please call 1-800-990-MARS. WSS is part of the Western Seminary System of Portland OR.

"like st. windows" oils, by Kevin Short

WESTERN SEMINARY
SEATTLE

Complete your degree... from home!

Learn more about Western's on-line bachelor's degree program in Management and Communications with a Christian world-view.

1-800-764-1383

Mention this ad and the $100 class reservation fee will be waived at the time of enrollment!

WESTERN
A CHRISTIAN LIBERAL ARTS COLLEGE

Adult Studies Office
Western Baptist College
5000 Deer Park Dr. SE
Salem, Oregon 97301

E-mail:
rtaylor@wbc.edu
or visit our site:
www.wbc.edu

Accredited by the Northwest
Association of Schools and Colleges

The Measure of an MBA

"ACU's MBA program was an invaluable opportunity for me to benefit from professors with high credentials. ACU has a friendly learning environment where teachers share theoretical and practical experiences in small classes with students from all continents."

ALDO DEL RIO (MBA '96)
Manager Consultant, Ernst and Young Santiago, Chile

MASTER OF BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

- Five concentrations
- 360 years of faculty business experience
- International emphasis
- State-of-the-art technology
- Christian ethics integrated into diverse curriculum

College of Business Administration
Web: www.acu.edu/academics/mba/
Email: ct@mba.acu.edu

Ask about our NEW Master of Accountancy degree program!

ACU Box 29140, Abilene, Texas 79699-9140 • 800-395-4723 • Fax 915-674-6717

SPECIAL ADVERTISING SECTION

Graduate Theological Education: Who Pays the Bills
(from page 115)

is able to do so largely because of the trusted reputation it has established for over a century, not just in the U.S., but across the globe. Hopkins notes, "One out of every sixteen Protestant missionaries around the world has gone through Moody."

Communicating a vision and raising financial support are related.

Moody's ability to communicate its vision, its activities, and its financial needs is enhanced by an extensive radio network, a book-publishing arm (Moody Press), and a well-known monthly magazine. The organization also has 24 field workers around the U.S. to help coordinate its fundraising efforts. No better example can be found of the relationship between communicating a vision and raising the necessary financial support to carry out that vision. To be sure, Moody gets support from a few donors who contribute several thousand dollars a year. But according to Hopkins, it's the small contributions more akin to the widow's mite that account for Moody's financial stability: "There are an awful lot of people out there who have a great and deep love for Moody and who support us faithfully."

"The point of the development spear"

Recent years at Fuller Theological Seminary also testify to the relationship between communicating a vision and raising financial support. The school's celebration of its fiftieth anniversary included eight regional events at which school officials were able to reconnect with many of the school's alumni. Advancement VP McKusick says, "We take advantage of events such as these to reassure people of the sense of continuity. We want our graduates and supporters to know that we are still doing faithfully."

(Continued on page 120)

GROW

AS A PERSON

AS A PROFESSIONAL

AT GEORGE FOX UNIVERSITY

GRADUATE PROGRAMS - GEORGE FOX UNIVERSITY

Master of Business Administration

Master of Arts in Teaching

Master of Education

Doctor of Clinical Psychology

GRADUATE PROGRAMS

WESTERN EVANGELICAL SEMINARY

Master of Arts in Counseling

Master of Arts in Marriage and Family Therapy

Master of Divinity

Master of Arts, Theological Studies

Master of Arts in Church Ministries

GEORGE FOX UNIVERSITY

Newberg, Oregon 97132 503-538-8383 • 1-800-765-4369

George Fox University

REGENT UNIVERSITY

AMERICA'S PREMIER CHRISTIAN GRADUATE SCHOOL

RSVP NOW
FOR PREVIEW WEEKEND
Nov. 12-14

Whether you're called to pursue ministry leadership like Todd Hunter, or leadership in the professional marketplace, Regent University can help you develop your place in the Body of Christ.

Regent University gives you the opportunity to integrate your faith with the study of Government, Law, Business,

Divinity, Communication, Counseling, Education, and Organizational Leadership.

In addition to our 22 graduate degrees offered in Virginia Beach,

we now offer degree programs at our Northern Virginia satellite extension.

We even have 15 graduate programs designed for the busiest pastor, parent or professional through Distance Education.

Financial aid is available. Call Regent today or e-mail for more information.

Call (800) 373-5504

E-mail to: admissions@regent.edu

Internet: www.regent.edu

REGENT UNIVERSITY®

1000 Regent University Drive, Virginia Beach, VA 23464-9800

Regent University is accredited by the Commission on Colleges of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools (1866 Southern Lane, Decatur, Georgia 30033-4907; Telephone number 404-697-4501) to award the master's and doctor's degrees. Regent University admits students of any disability, race, color, gender, and national or ethnic origin.

Todd Hunter
International Director of the Association of Vineyard Churches
Regent University School of Divinity
Class of '98

Regent University
Virginia Beach Campus

The next great leap

for the next generation of leaders is ready to step back.

Back to the way Jesus himself
equipped and trained the 12.

Smelly fishing boats. Dusty streets. Windblown hillsides. Not much of a campus! But the student body of 12 sure learned the secrets of effective ministry. At Denver Seminary, we're following the example of the Master Professor with an emphasis on hands-on learning directed by experienced mentors. Learn more about the seminary education with an innovative approach to knowing, being and doing. We borrowed it from the best!

Take the leap.

DENVER SEMINARY

1-800-922-3040 Ext. 278
P.O. Box 10,000

e-mail: admit@densem.edu
Denver, CO 80250

www.gospelcom.net/densem/

Graduate Theological Education: Who Pays the Bills?

(from page 116)

what we have always said we were going to do."

According to McKusick, both the percentage of alumni supporters and the size of their gifts have increased significantly over the past few years. She attributes this in part to solid enrollment figures at Fuller during the decade of the eighties. Many who attended during those years have reached a point in their careers and in their lives where they are willing and able to begin giving back.

Development officers have to work ever harder to earn support from alumni.

The situation at Fuller appears to reflect the development adage, often repeated at fundraising workshops and seminars, that alumni and board members represent "the point of the development spear." But that is not the case at Westminster Theological Seminary, according to its vice president for development, Bob Anderson.

Anderson says the school learned long ago that it could not build a fundraising program around its alumni, because such a development spear would be very dull indeed. The reason, somewhat unique to Westminster, is the school's historically high percentage of students, and therefore alumni, who come from overseas. Last year, for example, 250 of Westminster's 680 students (well over one-third) were born overseas, and a solid majority of those students will return to their home countries.

But attempting to raise financial support from overseas alumni, according to Anderson, is likely to bear little fruit. For one thing, few—if any—countries have traditions of philanthropy as deeply rooted as they are in the U.S. Furthermore, most countries have regulations limiting the amount of money in charitable contributions that may leave the country.

Westminster has a very modest endowment. And since it is not

(Continued on page 122)

Practice where you'll preach.

Fulfilling your call to the ordained ministry requires an in-depth understanding of the Christian faith and practical experience in the ministry.

Perkins School of Theology offers several degree programs to prepare you for effective Christian leadership. Each combines the strong academic resources of Southern Methodist University with the challenge of practical experience, giving you the skills to put your faith to work. As a part of your classroom studies, you will have the opportunity to take part in a supervised internship designed especially for you. Full-time or concurrent placements are available in local congregations, institutional chaplaincies, or special ministries within church agencies.

The Perkins experience is a period of intense engagement and critical reflection. You will grow spiritually and gain valuable insights into the traditions and practice of the Christian faith.

For more information about Perkins degree programs, contact the office of admissions.

SMU PERKINS
SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY

PO Box 750133, Dallas, Texas 75275-0133

214-768-2293 • 1-800-982-5933 • E-mail: theoadms@smu.edu • Web: www.smu.edu/~theology

SMU does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, national or ethnic origin, sex, age, or disability. © 1998 Southern Methodist University

David Horn

ON

Distance Learning

It can be easy for you to take the first few steps toward an M.Div., since many seminaries offer correspondence classes.

But do you end up taking a few random classes, or do you enter into a structured program that leads to your ultimate goal?

This concern is why we created a new way to begin studying for an M.Div.

Semlink is our commitment to make distance learning more productive. We determined that "at a distance" would no longer mean "at a disadvantage."

That's why we actually reshaped our entire M.Div. curriculum. We lowered the barriers you have to hurdle to get started, without lowering our degree's high spiritual and academic quality.

We made sure that each class was as good as it could be, and that all of the classes worked together in a logical progression toward your degree.

With Semlink, you can take ten courses, a full one-third of your M.Div., before moving on campus.

The program is "high tech," with audio

"If you're going to study at a distance, make sure that every step counts."

cassette lectures complemented by the emerging use of video, CD-ROM, and internet resources.

But it is also "high touch." You will have a faculty mentor for each course, to assist you via phone, fax, mail, or e-mail.

You will also have a faculty advisor to help you with your overall program.

The Semlink program is responsive to your schedule. Once accepted, you can begin courses at any time during the year! And you can study at your own pace.

It's even more affordable! With Semlink, tuition costs are reduced 50%. That's just one more way to make every step count!

David Horn is Director of the Shoemaker Center for Church Renewal at Gordon-Conwell. He also directs the Semlink program, as part of our efforts to make the Seminary more responsive and accessible to the church, clergy and laity alike.

You can register online at www.gcts.edu.

Or call, toll-free: 877-SEMLINK.

736-5465

SOUTH HAMILTON
Massachusetts

BOSTON
Massachusetts

CHARLOTTE
North Carolina
(800) 600-1212

Gordon-Conwell
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

(800) 428-7329

www.gcts.edu

International School of Theology

Mentoring at the Graduate Level

At International School of Theology mentoring is a lifestyle. As a student at International, you will be personally mentored by faculty like Dr. Alan Scholes. Whether he is teaching at International's residence campus in California, at one of our sister campuses around the globe or utilizing distance education technologies, Alan spends most of his time working with individual students. Helping students apply what they are learning to their own intimate relationship to God as well as their current and future ministries has been a passion of Alan's throughout his career.

Dr. Scholes continues to pioneer new ways of mentoring at the graduate level such as International's Accelerated Part-time Program and graduate Biblical training via the internet. Alan is not unique at International. Faculty with doctorates from Cambridge, Claremont, Dallas, Fuller and USC are all dedicated to merging the highest quality academic instruction with personalized, practical ministry training.

If you are interested in learning more, visit us on the web at <http://www.leaderu.com/isot>
Or contact us at (800) 727-ISOT.

International School of Theology
24600 Arrowhead Springs Road
San Bernardino, CA 92414

Graduate Theological Education: Who Pays the Bill?

(from page 120)

affiliated with any denomination, it obviously receives no denominational funding. So what is the point of the development spear at Westminster? "There is none," says Anderson. "Or perhaps you could say we have several spears, none of which is sharper than the others."

Although it draws some support from its alumni, Westminster largely depends on financial support from the churches where alumni are serving. It also receives support from people who, in one way or another, come into contact with the school and want to advance its mission. Sometimes this happens through a book a faculty member has written or a sermon some representative of the school has preached at a local church.

Second-career students don't fit the struggling-student stereotype

Ironically, the person one would think should worry most about Westminster's sources of financial support (Anderson) appears to be among those least worried. He says, "Our development efforts begin with the understanding that it is the providence of the Lord that keeps us here. So our primary goal is to be faithful to the Bible. God will take care of the rest."

Changing times

Unlike Westminster and Moody, 20-year-old Regent University (begun by Pat Robertson) has a very substantial endowment that resulted from the sale of stock in the International Family Entertainment Network. Says Kerry Park, director of marketing for the school's eight graduate programs, "Our endowment is in the top 25, not just of Christian universities, but of all universities."

Interest earned from the school's endowment is applied toward the school's operating costs. Thus, according to Park, the lion's share of

(Continued on page 130)

THE BEESON PASTOR FELLOWSHIP

(A one-year study program toward a full-scholarship D.Min. degree)

The Best in Biblical Preaching and Church Leadership

Breakthrough

To stronger biblical preaching

To greater effectiveness as a leader

To new levels of culturally relevant ministry

Call today for a FREE
brief video overview

Imagine being able to experience a year designed:

- To improve your preaching under the tutelage of world-class preachers.
- To visit and learn from more than a dozen breakthrough churches such as Willow Creek, Saddleback, Ginghamburg, Crystal Cathedral, and Frazer Memorial.
- To be mentored and coached by people like Dale Galloway, founder of the 6400-member New Hope Community Church and a pioneer in developing need-meeting ministries led by laypeople.

This prestigious, full-scholarship opportunity is available annually to a select group of pastors. If you (or someone you know) has demonstrated leadership and preaching ability, with an eagerness to gain greater skills and vision toward building an outreach-focused, growing congregation, prayerfully request an information package.

Be prepared to break through the status quo to new paradigms of ministry effectiveness!

ASBURY
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

204 N. Lexington Avenue • Wilmore, KY 40390-1199

www.ats.wilmore.ky.us

1-800-2-ASBURY

Dr. Dale Galloway
Dean of the Beeson Center

The Capital Campaign

Financial management at a theological institution in many ways parallels the way a family budget is run. Many families can manage the normal monthly expenses such as groceries, house payments, electric bills. Then an expense comes along that is both extraordinary and unexpected, and the family must adjust financially.

The same is true at institutions. Many have no problem handling regular expenses—meeting payroll or buying equipment and supplies or carrying out routine upkeep on the buildings—until something happens that throws the financial picture out of whack.

For the record, a school usually needs money over and above what it normally receives not because something has gone wrong, but because something has been going right. Perhaps it is growing and needs a new building to accommodate more students. Perhaps it wants to add new programs or emphases to expand its academic offerings, and this requires adding faculty and staff. Perhaps it wants to invest in faculty-development programs or take its library to a new level.

Sometimes it is necessary to spend money just to stay current, as has been the case with the technological revolution of recent years. Schools have made their campuses “user friendly” in terms of personal and portable computers in the dormitories and in classrooms. Many have built or transformed their buildings to accommodate distance learning or multimedia approaches to teaching.

Whatever the reason for the need, many seminaries and graduate institutions are regularly placed in the position of having to come up with money over and above what they regularly receive from donors. One of their options is to turn to foundations. Not long ago, for example, Fuller Seminary received a $200,000 foundation gift to be applied toward equipping its classrooms with new technology.

Calling on alumni and friends

Another option many institutions exercise on a regular basis is the capital campaign, which essentially consists of a concentrated effort to reach a specified financial goal over a designated period, typically three

(Continued on page 126)

Mission:

“We need to learn that we don’t define the mission of the church for the world.

It isn’t our mission.

It’s God’s mission.”

—The Rev. Philip L. Wickeri, Ph.D.
Flora Lamson Hewlett Professor of Evangelism and Mission

1-800-447-8820
admissions@sfts.edu
www.sfts.edu

SAN FRANCISCO THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Winclair Ferguson knew at the age of 16 that he would enter the Christian ministry. He earned a Ph.D. from the University of Aberdeen, and became a world-renowned author and theologian. As a student," he says, "the contemporary books that influenced Master one Word.

the most were written by Westminster faculty." In 1982, Dr. Ferguson joined the faculty as Professor of Systematic Theology. Now I have the opportunity to work among scholars committed to spreading the Gospel."

The Word of God is the foundation of a Westminster education. If you're interested in an excellent education stirred by the love of God, Westminster Theological Seminary is the place for you.
Phone: 800-626-8599, Fax: 215-887-5404, E-mail: <http://www.wts.edu> Training specialists in the Bible.

WESTMINSTER
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

or four years. Though some capital campaigns include the goal of strengthening the school's endowment, most are geared toward capital improvements—such as a new dormitory for students or new classrooms equipped with state-of-the-art technology. Some capital campaigns focus on student scholarship programs or enhancing the library.

Figures available from the Association for Theological Schools (ATS) suggest that the capital campaign is a time for individuals—alumni and friends—to shine. ATS distinguishes between “operational gifts” and “capital gifts.” In the 1996–97 academic year, individuals accounted for 38.2 percent of institutions’ operational gifts, with foundations, corporations, and religious organizations accounting for most of the rest. When it comes to capital gifts, however, individuals accounted for nearly 74 percent of institutional giving.

The capital campaign approach testifies to the fact that people are more likely to give to specific causes. Many donors, for example, might never give to support a particular missionary in Africa. But if that missionary lets it be known that he could use a bicycle to ride around the village, he is likely to get dozens of offers.

The same principle applies to institutional fundraising. If a particular need or needs can be identified and highlighted, many people will come forth with financial support. They know exactly how the dollars they contribute will be used.

Communicating the mission

In addition to raising money, the capital campaign presents an opportunity for an institution to communicate its vision and mission.

Typically, a theme for a capital campaign is chosen and communicated in various publications and in personal meetings with potential donors. In some instances, the occasion of the capital campaign opens the door to meet with people who have never given previously to the school.

Finally, the capital campaign presents the opportunity for institutions to inspire its traditional supporters to new levels of commitment, including financial commitment. The excitement generated around a capital campaign is designed in part to inspire alumni to renew their love and support for their alma mater. Perhaps they will raise the level of their giving for the period of the capital campaign and then keep it there permanently. Thus, the benefits of a capital campaign often live on well after the campaign itself has ended.

—KLR

Study in Israel

it can make all the difference!

- MASTER OF ARTS DEGREES • GRADUATE OR UNDERGRADUATE SEMESTER ABROAD
- SHORT-TERM ACADEMIC STUDY TOURS • CREDITS TRANSFERABLE

Jerusalem University College

an evangelical Christian institution of higher learning celebrating 40 years in Jerusalem

formerly: INSTITUTE OF HOLY LAND STUDIES

For literature and free video: 1-800-891-9408
or (815)229-5900 in North America, all others 972-2-671-8628

BOLDLY EVANGELICAL!

Since 1913

So what exactly does it mean to be "boldly evangelical"? At Northern Seminary it means balancing the authority of scripture and salvation through Christ alone with a concern for people and a serious commitment to evangelism and missions. It means balancing truth and love.

BOLDLY EVANGELICAL!

It's who we are.

Call us today!

800-YES-NBTS (800-937-6287)

Our evangelical commitment directs everything we do at Northern—from the hearts of faculty and staff, to what is taught in the classroom, to our plans for the future.

Explore whether God is leading you to Northern Seminary!

NORTHERN

baptist theological seminary

660 E. Butterfield Rd. • Lombard, Illinois 60148
630-620-2100 • Fax 630-620-2194
e-mail: admissions@northern.seminary.edu

Master of Arts • Master of Divinity • Master of Christian Ministries • Doctor of Ministry

The MacArthur Study Bible didn't happen by accident.
Neither will your effectiveness in ministry.

A young seminary student once asked me what the secret is to a great sermon. My answer wasn't what he expected.

"Stay in your chair until the hard work is done."

I stand by that. There's nothing magical about being an effective student and communicator of the Bible. It's a skill you learn, cultivate, then put to work. God's Word deserves nothing less. God's people need nothing more.

It was that commitment to helping God's people understand His Word that prompted me to create The MacArthur Study Bible.

And that same commitment is what you'll find at The Master's Seminary. Wherever God is leading you to minister, you'll find we're committed to giving you the skills you need to minister God's Word to God's people, God's way.

Effective ministry doesn't happen by accident. It takes hard work.

Pull up a chair and we'll show you how.

The Master's Seminary

1/800/CALL/TMS

www.mastersem.edu

13248 Roscoe Blvd., Sun Valley, CA 91352

NEW
Youth Leadership
TRACK

We asked youth ministers how we could help them reach their educational objectives. You said being able to complete a youth work M.Div. without having to move to seminary would be a nice start. So be it. Announcing our new M.Div program for those already in youth ministry. Now you can complete your degree without relocating and disrupting your present youth ministry. Call (800) 255-8706 ext. 6288 today for details.

What you hear could affect your vision.

BETHEL SEMINARY

SAINT PAUL • SAN DIEGO

www.bethel.edu AOL: keyword BETHEL

Where is the church that's waiting for you?

For information about admission to one of Princeton's five degree programs, write to:

Office of Admissions and Financial Aid
Princeton Theological Seminary
P.O. Box 821
Princeton, NJ 08542-0803
or call 1-800-622-6767 ext. 7805
Fax: 609-497-7870
Web site: www.ptsem.edu

Princeton
Theological Seminary

Princeton Theological Seminary is a theological institution of the Presbyterian Church (USA).

Earn an

ORU Degree at Home!

Are your sights on an Oral Roberts University education, but impossible to relocate to Tulsa? ORU's School of LifeLong Education is your opportunity to:

- Earn a fully accredited bachelor's degree.
- Enhance your ministry & vocational skills.
- Make a career change to fulfill growth potential.
- Pursue personal educational goals & interests.

ORU's External Degree Program offers you... the convenience and flexibility of at-home study... Tuition cost savings and financial assistance... the same high standards that have given ORU its reputation for academic excellence... and the same charismatic, whole person emphasis to equip you to make a difference in a hurting world.

For more information,
call direct to:
The Adult Learning Service Center
1-888-900-4678

Let ORU come home to you!

AMOUNT OF REVENUE AND EXPENDITURES PER FULL-TIME EQUIVALENT

Category	1995-96		1996-97
	N Schools	Average	N Schools	Average
Revenue
Tuition and Fees	213	$5,834	222	$6,209
Govt. Grants, Contracts	72	1,039	67	1,048
Gifts & Grants from Religious Org.	180	4,258	184	4,713
Gifts & Grants from Individuals	207	7,663	214	8,448
Value of Contributed Services	53	3,113	52	3,507
Endowment/Investment Income	199	4,072	209	4,694
Auxiliary/Ancillary Enterprises	176	3,058	181	3,202
Net Realized Gains	116	9,112	115	8,870
Net Unrealized Appreciation	78	9,712	96	13,533
Total Revenue	214	$33,835	222	$38,120
Expenditures
Instruction	211	$6,727	219	$7,477
Research	41	791	38	1,038
Public Service	55	786	54	552
Library	193	1,527	204	1,626
Academic Support	152	1,431	155	1,567
Student Services	182	968	186	1,042
Admissions	144	643	155	684
Inst. Support/Admin. & General	209	5,315	215	5,600
Op. & Maintenance of Plant	204	2,857	206	3,246
Scholarships & Fellowships	179	2,272	189	2,313
Subtotal: Education & General	213	20,550	221	22,134
Auxiliary/Ancillary Enterprises	165	2,821	177	2,975
Total Expenditures	213	$22,736	221	$24,516

The data reflect the average revenue and expenditure that member schools reported on a per-student (full-time equivalent) basis in specific categories. Not every school reported data in each category. For each year the full-time equivalent divisor is calculated from the previous year's data. All figures are reported in U.S. dollars. Canadian dollars were converted at a rate of $0.72 U.S.

Based on the 1997-98 ATS Fact Book on Theological Education.

the school's fundraising efforts can be geared toward student scholarships. "Some schools are in the position of having to raise tuition. Our goal is to lower tuition so that students attend here with as little financial burden as possible."

One of the secrets to fundraising success at Regent, says Park, is that virtually everyone feels responsible. "Each of the deans of the eight graduate schools, as well as the upper administration, views it as their responsibility to raise money. It's a commun-

(Continued on page 138)

Me, in Seminary?

Yeah, right.

You can still hardly believe it. Why would God call you into ministry? It really never crossed your mind until recently. Can this be right?

It might seem awkward at first, but through prayer, confiding honestly with people who are closest to you, and taking small steps of faith, God will be there for you and he will guide you through the decision-making process.

We can help too. Just give us a call and we will answer any questions you may have. After all, you're not the first person who has had questions—and you won't be the last.

Calvin Seminary offers the following degrees:

M.Div. The Master of Divinity program is designed for people who want to prepare themselves for ordained ministry.

M.A. The Master of Arts program is a two-year program specializing in educational ministry, leadership, and missions and church growth.

M.T.S. The Master of Theological Studies program is for those who do not seek ordination but desire a deeper knowledge of one of the theological disciplines.

Th.M. The Master of Theological Studies program is designed for people who are looking for theological education in support of various vocational objectives.

Ph.D. The Doctor of Philosophy program is designed to equip scholars for teaching and research in colleges, theological seminaries, and universities for general ecclesiastical leadership.

For more information, contact us at

Calvin Theological Seminary
3233 Burton Street SE
Grand Rapids, Michigan 49546-4387
616-957-6036 • 800-388-6034
www.calvin.edu/seminary

In Search of a Better Image

Some are called to serve as missionaries in foreign lands. Some are called to pastor local churches. Some are called to serve the poor in inner cities. And some are called to raise money. Raise money? Does that calling really deserve to be on the same list as those other callings, which are often perceived as more noble and sacrificial? Unfortunately, many think not.

The reality, however, is that ministry does not take place magically and at no expense. For missionaries to travel and live overseas takes money. For pastors to get the education they need to be effective in ministry takes money. For many ministries, money—or the lack of money—is a problem. Thankfully, many a seminary and graduate school development officer (fundraiser, to the uninitiated) believes he or she has been called by God to solve this problem.

Used-car salesmen?

For the record, the development offices at graduate institutions are sometimes not the most popular offices on campus. Development officials are sometimes viewed in much the same category as used-car salesmen. This may disappoint development officers, but it does not deter them, for by and large they view their work not as a job, but as a calling, one that is foundational to the success of virtually any ministry.

Yes, there may be some who look askance at the whole fundraising venture. But there are others who in some way view development officers as heroes. Imagine, for example, a theological student from Africa who has been studying in the U.S. for two years, during which time he has not been able to see his wife and children. A development officer tells his story to one of the school's benefactors, who in turn pays the airfare for the man's family to come to the U.S.

Or imagine a faculty member who has developed an interest in some specific area of ministry. Perhaps he has a vision for a new approach to urban ministry and wants to test his theories through a major research project. He has the time and he has the energy, but he does not have the money. A development officer identifies a foundation whose humanitarian or ministry interests are similar to the professor's. Suddenly, money is no longer a hurdle, and the professor can help his students,

(Continued on page 134)

Spiritual Formation

Scripture

At the Core of ATS

Academic Excellence

Community

e-mail: ats@ashland.edu
http: //www.ashland.edu/seminary.html

A S H L A N D

Theological Seminary

910 Center Street

Ashland, Ohio 44805

419-289-5161

Fax: 419-289-5969

Jack W.
Hayford
President and Founder

Jack Hayford invites you to attend

THE KING'S SEMINARY

A GRADUATE
PROFESSIONAL SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY

Enrollment is available throughout the year

Preparing—

Spiritually vibrant, biblically strong, theologically-balanced, culturally sensitive, Spirit-empowered, ministry-minded Leaders for the 21st Century

- Located on the 24 acre campus of
The Church On The Way
Van Nuys, California
- An evangelical, Spirit-filled faculty with earned doctorates
- Library resources approaching 100,000 units
- Multi-denominational
- Courses offered:
 - In 10 week Quarters
 - In One-week intensives
 - On-Line

Paul G. Chappell, Ph.D.
Chief Academic Officer

For information, call Toll-Free:

1-888-779-8040

e-mail: tki@earthlink.net

website: www.kingsseminary.edu

THE KING'S
SEMINARY

the school, urban communities, and the church are all better for it.

Institutional lifelines

The truth is that fundraisers constitute the lifeline of most charitable institutions, including seminaries and graduate schools. More than most, presidents and governing boards are acutely aware of this fact. It has been said that a seminary president's best friend is a good development officer. The last thing a seminary or university president wants to worry about is money.

Eastern Baptist Theological Seminary President R. Scott Rodin seeks to provide a new and refreshing biblical perspective on these matters in a book scheduled to be released next spring by InterVarsity Press. The book examines biblical stewardship within a framework of Christian ethics. Says

Rodin, "I'm attempting to call the church to be directly involved in raising up godly stewards and to help the church confront directly those things in our lives that come against the principles of biblical stewardship."

Westminster Theological Seminary vice president for development Bob Anderson believes that those who hold a negative view of fundraisers probably do not know much about the values or the methods that drive Christian fundraising. "It's important to view the development efforts at seminaries within a context of a concern for stewardship, Anderson says. "It's not about some wheeling and dealing business school technique. It's about people and the desire to be obedient to God."

Anderson says he worries as much about bringing in too much money as he does about not bringing in enough. "I believe that it's important for any ministry to be accountable on a regular basis to God's people," he believes, if a ministry has access to funding sources sufficient to free the ministry from dependence on those who care about it the most. "To count on people financially," he observes, "is one way to insure accountability."

Rodin hopes his book will help transform the negative views pastors and churches have toward fundraising into positive views of faithful biblical stewardship. "My goal is that those who read the book will be called, convicted, and inspired to take a new look at what it means to be a steward of God's kingdom. That will translate into new conclusions about how we give, how much we give, and also how we view those of us who consider raising money calling from God." —KLE

The Scholars teach here.

Most seminaries will have you read good books. But at Southern Seminary, you'll sit in classes taught by the authors.

That's because professors in our School of Theology are writing the texts that are setting the pace in theological education. Robert Stein (New Testament), Daniel Block (Old Testament), R. Albert Mohler Jr. (Christian Theology), Tom Nettles (Church History), and David Cook (Christian Ethics) are some of Southern's professors who bring their scholarship to the classroom.

If you'd like to study with scholars of evangelical conviction, Southern Seminary is the obvious choice.

The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary

2825 Lexington Road
Louisville, Kentucky 40280
1 800 626-5525, ext. 4058
Visit us on the web: www.sbps.edu

Interested in a Bible Education?

Over 6,000 students earning degree in Bible fields such as Theology and Ministry.

CALL TODAY FOR A FREE
CATALOG & EVALUATION:

1-800-525-1611

Andersonville Baptist Seminary
P.O. Box 545
54 S. Butler St.
Camilla, GA 31730

Phone: 1-800-525-1611

Fax: 1-912-336-7000

Internet:

www.andersonvilleseminary.com

ANDERSONVILLE BAPTIST SEMINARY

Even though as Christians we are required to study our Bibles, Bible study can seem at times to be a difficult task. But Andersonville Baptist Seminary can help give your studies guidance and purpose. All ABS students are working towards earning their degrees in fields such as Theology, Ministry, or Christian Counseling. Some are enjoying courses such as Galatians, Romans, and Ephesians verse-by-verse, while others are involved in Homiletics, Grief Counseling, Missions, and Ministry Preparation. ABS has been training Bible students for over 16 years, and we are waiting for you...

Join thousands today and earn your degree!

- Monthly Payment Plans
- Preacher's Discounts
- NCCA Christian Counseling Program
- Fundamental & Conservative
- Lifetime Credit
- Transfer Credit Accepted
- Associate Through Doctorate Degrees

ANDERSONVILLE
BAPTIST SEMINARY

Wesley Institute for Ministry & the Arts

Study in the South Pacific for a fraction of the cost of a US education

Photograph by K...

Studying in one of the most beautiful cities in the world is not everything - but it helps

Accredited degrees in Theology, Music,
Drama, Dance & Graphic Design.
Post Graduate studies in Education,
Counselling and Dance Therapy.

- World-class professional training in every field.
- Practical professional training in a classroom environment.
- Accreditation with the Australian Federal and State Governments.

- Awards recognised nationally and internationally by all colleges and universities.
- Creative and quality education in a multi-denominational and multi-cultural setting.

Campus located 15 minutes from the Olympic stadium for Sydney Olympics 2000!

Summer Schools January 1999. Fall Semester begins February 1999.

APPLY NOW!

For more immediate information, check out our web site on: www.wmi.edu.au/home.html or write/fax/email us all

P.O. BOX 497 HILCOMBOYNE NSW 2243 • PHONE: (61) 2 4379 1114
FAX: (61) 2 4379 1114 • EMAIL: info@wmi.edu.au
DR DAVID H. JENNINGS, PRESIDENT
WESLEY INSTITUTE IS A MEMBER OF WESLEY HOUSE (AUSTRALIA)
100-110 LINDSEY STREET, SYDNEY NSW 2000

Our New Campus May Be Built on Sand, but Our Foundation Is Solid as a Rock

Asbury Theological Seminary Announces Its New Florida Campus; Classes to Begin Fall 1999

*...yet it did not fall, because it had its foundation on the rock.
—Matt. 7:25*

Asbury Theological Seminary will function as a single seminary, with one president, (Maxie D. Dunnam [right]) and a unified faculty, delivering theological education and the Asbury experience on two campuses. Dr. J. Steven Harpet (left), an Asbury Seminary faculty member from 1980-93, serves as the vice president/dean of Asbury Theological Seminary—Florida.

For 75 years Asbury Theological Seminary has been standing firm on the foundation of classical Christianity, yet moving forward with innovative creativity and evangelical passion. Asbury Theological Seminary—Florida is the latest expression of this mission.

Our bedrock convictions are unchanging: a commitment to Wesleyan theology, scriptural scholarship, spiritual vitality and church renewal. Yet our new campus in Orlando will expand our mission in fresh ways, creating opportunities to engage pressing multicultural, ethnic and urban issues in one of the nation's most dynamic and accessible markets.

So call 1-800-2-ASBURY today to learn more about Asbury Theological Seminary—Florida. Because in a world of shifting sand, your ministry needs a firm foundation.

ASBURY
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

STANDING FIRM  MOVING FORWARD

tywide mission." Despite its financial health, Regent places a great emphasis on fundraising because of its desire for continued growth. And with Moody, the worldwide reputation of Pat Robertson and the Christian Broadcasting Network go a long way toward raising financial support.

But Moody and Regent do not represent the status quo when it comes to fundraising. Most schools do not have access to television airwaves or high-volume publications. Yet they press on in their own ways toward the same goal. According to R. Scott Rodin, the former vice president for advancement at Eastern Baptist Theological Seminary who was recently appointed president of the school, development officers today have to work ever-more harder to earn the support from alumni. This is the case at Eastern Seminary—and no doubt at many other places—because fewer and fewer students attend seminary full-time or live on campus.

Those responsible for the financial health of theological institutions must change with the times but stay true to their visions.

Says Rodin, "There was a time when virtually all Eastern Seminary students studied full-time and lived on campus for three years. They formed incredibly close relationships with other students and with faculty and staff. When students attend part-time and commute from home, it's more difficult to develop those emotional ties."

Also in "olden days," the overwhelming majority of Eastern Seminary's students were American Baptists and were able to receive significant financial support from the denomination (American Baptist Churches, or ABC). But for all intents and purposes, while still affiliated with the ABC, Eastern Seminary has

(Continued on page 131)

DOCTOR OF MINISTRY

Building People Through Discipleship The Pastor As Leader

At the University of Dubuque Theological Seminary, we equip pastors to lead in congregational renewal. Led by Dr. James Tozer and Dr. Charles Denison, our D.Min. program draws from the depths of our biblical faith and theological heritage, considering the best contemporary practices. Discover spiritual strength and build each other for effective leadership in congregations.

For information about our D.Min.
M.Div. or M.A.R. programs, call 800-369-8387.

Grounded in Tradition, growing in Christ.

UNIVERSITY OF DUBUQUE
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

We Bring the University to You!

From your study or home, complete your BA, MA, MTS, MDiv, DMin, THD or PhD through quality distance learning, mentorship studies, audio/video courses and/or electronic media.

LOUISIANA BAPTIST UNIVERSITY and THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

2835 Hollywood Avenue
Shreveport, LA 71108

For free information:
1-800-639-7133

LBU E-MAIL: lbu@mnss.com
www.mnss.com/lbu • www.lbu.edu

318-635-5110
Fax 318-635-5126

Why choose LBU/LBTS?

- ✓ LBU has over 25 years experience as a proven leader in non-traditional education.
- ✓ LBU has 40 adjunct and full-time professors holding doctorates in their fields.
- ✓ LBU offers an interest free payment plan that is affordable.
- ✓ LBU puts the Learner/Student first.

Complete your degree in:

- ☐ Biblical Studies
- ☐ Theology
- ☐ Christian Education
- ☐ Business Administration
- ☐ Counseling
- ☐ Christian Education

Fast-Track Masters. Long-Term Results.

Busy professional

Simpson's modular MA

Spiritual enrichment

Practical experience

Be a more effective professional

If you want to earn an MA, but can't find the time, Simpson Graduate School has the answer. It's the MA in a modular format—one-week sessions spaced over three years (a total of nine weeks). Or, simply sign up for individual sessions that suit your needs.

For pastors, worship leaders, counselors, missionary candidates, church education staff, church planters, evangelists, administrators, and lay persons, these programs emphasize practical experience and spiritual enrichment. They're taught by Simpson faculty and visiting professors with expertise in all these areas.

If you're on the fast track and can't find time to earn an MA, Simpson's programs in a modular format could be the answer.

For a brochure, call 800-598-2493.

MA in Christian Ministry

Church Education

Church Planting & Growth

Diversified Ministry

Pastoral Counseling

Pastoral Ministry

Preaching

Worship Ministry

Youth Ministry

MA in Missiology

Graduate School

2211 College View Drive, Redding, California 96003

800-598-2493 530-224-5606 Fax: 530-224-5627

email: admissions@simpsonca.edu

www.simpsonca.edu

Stuffy, ivory-tower culture.

"Real ministry"
only occurs behind the pulpit.

Classes available during day hours only.

Professors accessible only during class hours.

Irrelevant to today's postmodern culture.

Graduate education that is accessible, affordable and convenient for you.

Small, interactive classes with professors who are proactive in your personal and professional development.

Unique mentoring for your partner (spouse) in ministry.

Relevant to today's ministry needs.

Practical, hands-on experience.

Develop marketplace leaders like for ministry around the globe.

Preparation and nurturing of student spouses is ignored.

Old Thinking

New Thinking

Changing the way you think about seminary.

WESTERN
SEMINARY

PORTLAND

SAN JOSE

SACRAMENTO

SEATTLE

800.547.4546 503.233.8561 FAX 503.239.4216 WWW.WESTERNSEMINARY.EDU

Graduate Theological Education: Who Pays the Bills?

(from page 138)

become interdenominational, signified by the fact that Rodin is Presbyterian. Fewer than half of Eastern Seminary's students today are Baptists of any kind, let alone American Baptist. The school boasts high percentages of students from United Methodist, Presbyterian, and African Methodist Episcopal traditions, as well as students with no denominational ties. It should come as no surprise that it is difficult for students to get support from their denomination when they are, in essence, attending a non-denominational school.

Yet, according to Rodin, there is a positive financial side to the fact that many schools have become predominantly commuter institutions. As schools such as Eastern Seminary have made adjustments to accommodate older, second-career students, they have discovered that many of these students come with the financial means to pay for their own education and even to continue supporting the school when they leave. Students have come to Eastern Seminary in recent years after serving as doctors or attorneys or in business. Though they have experienced the same call to ministry, they do not fit the stereotype of the struggling student who isn't sure where his next meal will come from.

Times have changed, and they will continue to change. New technologies and student demographics have registered their impact on how seminaries and graduate schools are funded. Those responsible for the financial health of these institutions have had to change with the times, while remaining true to the various visions out of which they were born. The fact that so many of these institutions have grown while remaining on sound financial footing is a testimony both to the faithfulness of God and to the faith, ingenuity, and hard work of those who have been called to ensure that graduate theological training not only survives, but flourishes.

By L. Katherine Robbin, a freelance writer in Philadelphia, PA.

PH.D. IN CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

Retool your Educational LEADERSHIP

- Take courses related to:
 - Spirituality and Christian Formation
 - Philosophy and Theology of Christian Education
 - Educational Process
 - Educational Leadership

- Develop your grasp of educational leadership theory and practice within a robust Christian worldview
- Study in a seminary and university environment
- Scholarships are available

BIOLA
UNIVERSITY

TALBOT SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY
13800-BIOLA AVENUE
LA MIRADA, CA 90639

WRITE OR CALL:

800.992.4652

FAX: 562.903.4851

E-MAIL: admissions@biola.edu

www.talbot.edu

Preparing educational leaders for the next millennium since 1984

8334

"Our experienced faculty provides unique insight and reflects the diverse, multicultural world in which we live."

McCormick Theological Seminary has 28 full-time faculty members who teach courses in our four fields of study: Bible, theology and ethics, history, and ministry. Our faculty members, many of whom are bilingual, represent different genders, national origins and denominations. They advise students, serve on governing boards, belong to professional societies and publish in top academic journals. The faculty creates a stimulating learning environment charged with lively discussion and fresh ideas.

Homer Ashby

Acting Dean of the Faculty and Vice President of Academic Affairs, McCormick Theological Seminary

McCormick

McCORMICK
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

A seminary of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.).

For more information, please call the Admissions Office at 1-800-228-4687 or write to McCormick Theological Seminary, 5555 South Woodlawn Avenue, Chicago, Illinois 60637.

Fax: 773-947-6273 Internet address: mccormick.seminary@pcusa.org

MASTER OR DIVINITY • MASTER OF ARTS IN THEOLOGICAL STUDIES • DOCTOR OF MINISTRY • EPHRAIMITE IN THEOLOGICAL STUDIES

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

THE • U N S E M I N A R Y

Who's he?

He's John G. Stackhouse, Jr., listed in Canadian Who's Who as an award-winning historian, theologian, and journalist. But here at Regent, he's "the new guy" who teaches Christianity and contemporary culture.

Come study with our new Sangwoo Youtong Chee Professor of Theology, John Stackhouse, who is equally at ease writing theology and speaking on a talk show. When it comes to Christ and culture, he knows what's what.

Admissions Dept. C-1088

5800 University Blvd., Vancouver, BC, Canada V6T 2E4

☎ (604) 224-3245 Fax 224-3097 Toll free 1-800-663-8064

Website: www.regent-college.edu

Admissions e-mail: admissions@regent-college.edu

Regent
College

AN INTERNATIONAL
GRADUATE SCHOOL
OF CHRISTIAN STUDIES

A Graduate School with
M. Phil, F. and Ph. D. 's
in these areas:

*Philosophical Theology
History of Philosophy
Philosophy of Science
Aesthetics
Political Theory
Systematic Theology
Biblical Studies
Systematic Philosophy*
One-year master's in Worldview/Education.

For more info contact

Institute for Christian Studies

229 College Street

Toronto, Ontario, Canada M5T 1R4
(416) 979-2331

A Change For the Better!

Geneva College announces a revision of its longstanding M.A. in Psychology. This new 60-hour Counseling Masters will help students as they apply for licensure as professional counselors in most states.

The quality remains unchanged, as does the integration of theory and practice within a Christian worldview.

Come and prepare to counsel from a Christian perspective.

Geneva College

Masters in Counseling

For information:
Geneva College
Beaver Falls, PA 15010
1-800-847-8295
724-847-6571
rjw@geneva.edu

Cranmer Theological House Shreveport, Louisiana

An Anglican School of Ministry in Tradition of the English Reformation

For more information, call
1-800/732-0910

An EARN-WHILE-YOU-LEARN program open to incoming students in the 1998-1999 academic year

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

CHAFER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Orange, CA
Dr. George Meisinger, Dean

Free Grace

Sufficiency of Scripture
Literal in Hermeneutics

Emphasis on Greek & Hebrew Exegesis

Correspondence Courses

1(800)68-GRACE

"A superior education without the towering costs"

E-mail us at cts@school.com www.bible.org, "other sites"

The Love of Learning,

The Desire for God

Duke University Divinity School

Office of Admissions, Box 90965

Durham, NC 27708-0965

919-660-3436

e-Mail: divinity-info@mail.duke.edu

Web: www.divinity.duke.edu

Duke University Divinity

School seeks to cultivate

"a love of learning and a desire for God" as it prepares men and women for the diverse ministries of the church. Come to

Duke Divinity School for your theological education.

Degree programs:

Master of Divinity

Master in Church Ministries

Master of Theological Studies

Master of Theology

Doctor of Philosophy in Religion

(jointly with the Graduate School of Arts & Science)

DO YOU BELIEVE

A MESSAGE STILL
NEEDS TO BE POSTED
ON CHURCH DOORS? ON THE
WORLD'S DOORS? IF SO...

FAITH SEMINARY IS FOR YOU.

Offering the MDiv and the MCM
with concentrations in Christian Counseling,
Theology, Biblical Studies, or Missiology.

RESIDENT OR EXTERNAL STUDY

www.FaithSeminary.edu

1-888-777-7675

Faith Seminary

1504 N. Pearl St.

FAX (253) 759-1790

Admissions Office

Tacoma, WA 98407

Concentrations include:

Cross-cultural Ministries

Church Ministries

Urban Ministries

Chinese Bi-cultural Ministries

Korean Bi-cultural Ministries

Youth Ministries

Christian Formation and Discipleship

Counseling

Self-designed

Come Grow with Us!

At Alliance Theological Seminary, students focus on three areas of development. The Person Phase causes students to establish skills in understanding the biblical text and authentically apply it to their lives. The Church Phase gives students a clearer picture of the nature and mission of the church they are called to serve. The Ministry Phase allows students to apply these new perspectives to specific issues and needs in ministry.

Degree Programs: Master of Divinity, Master of Professional Studies and Master of Arts.

ALLIANCE
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

350 N. HIGHLAND AVE.

NYACK, NY 10960

(914) 353-2020 • 1-800-541-6891

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

Two Distinctives That Characterize Our Masters Degree In Organizational Leadership.

Some leaders lead like lions, focusing on efficiency and productivity. Some lead like lambs, focusing on compassion and community. The Organizational Leadership program at PCB Graduate School emphasizes the development of professionally effective and relationally healthy Christian leaders and organizations in church, parachurch and business settings. This values-driven program provides Christian professionals with a flexible learning environment that merges organizational theory and practice. If you desire training in balanced Christian leadership, contact Jay R. Desko, Ph.D., at jdesko@pcb.edu or 800.5.PCB.GRAD.

Philadelphia College Of Bible
Graduate School

Winebrenner Theological Seminary

Students appreciate Winebrenner

- biblical theology
- quality faculty
- practical emphasis

Outstanding programs include:

- Master of Divinity
- MA in Theological Studies
- MA in Christian Education
- Doctor of Ministry
- BA in Religious Studies

Your pathway to serving Christ, the church and the community

For further information, please call or write
1-800-992-4WTS or FAX 1-419-422-3392
1-419-422-4824 www.winebrenner.edu
701 E. Melrose Ave. • P.O. Box 478 • Findlay, OH 45830

GREENVILLE COLLEGE

A TRADITION OF MINISTERIAL EDUCATION SINCE 1892

Master of Arts Leadership And Ministry Program

Your word is a LAMP to my feet and a light for my path.
Psalm 119:105

- 39 hours of course work in Christian Ministry, Biblical Literature, and Theological Studies
- Includes research/practicum in applied ministry
- Biblical in origin; Wesleyan in perspective
- Collaborative
- Convenient, with one-week modular courses taught in August and January
- Practically oriented
- Theologically sound
- Spiritually centered

For program information:
Greenville College
Office of Adult and Graduate Studies

P.O. Box 159, 315 E. College, Greenville, Illinois 62246-0159
Email: holver@greenville.edu (toll free) 888.818.4625

Canadian
Theological
Seminary

400 FOURTH AVE., REGINA, SASK. S4S 0A1

Preparing persons to minister in a culturally complex world.

Programs

MDiv, MRE, MAR, MAMiss, DM
DipMiss, DipCS

ADMISSIONS OFFICE:

TOLL FREE 1-800-461-1222

E-MAIL admissions@cbcts.sk.ca

WEB SITE www.cbcts.sk.ca

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

The NEXT GREAT LEAP
for equipping church leaders is really
a STEP BACK.

Back to the way Jesus himself
equipped and trained the 12. At DENVER
SEMINARY, we're following the example of the Master Professor with an emphasis on hands-on learning directed by EXPERIENCED MENTORS. Learn more about the seminary education with an innovative approach to knowing, being and doing. We borrowed it from the best!

1-800-922-3040 Ext. 278
e-mail: admit@densem.edu
www.gospelcom.net/densem/

DENVER SEMINARY

P.O. Box 10,000 • Denver, CO 80250

We're training servant leaders.

Interested?

1-800-467-AGTS

ASSEMBLIES OF GOD
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
1435 N. Glenstone Ave.
Springfield, MO 65803
417-268-1000 • www.agts.edu

The Psychology Department of Wheaton College is pleased to announce that the Doctoral Program in Clinical Psychology is now accredited by the American Psychological Association

GRADUATE SCHOOL

Scholarship Committed to Servanthood

Can you separate your faith from your profession? We don't. The Wheaton College Graduate School offers a distinctive, yet holistic Christian approach to the study of Clinical Psychology with M.A. and Psy.D. programs. For more information, please call 1-800-888-0141.

THE INSTITUTE OF SACRED MUSIC AT YALE UNIVERSITY

*A Cross-Disciplinary Center for Music, Liturgy and the Related Arts
"Common ground for musicians and ministers, for scholars and practitioners"*

Degrees Offered through the Yale School of Music

Master of Music ↔ Artist Diploma

Master of Musical Arts ↔ Doctor of Musical Arts

Degrees Offered through Yale Divinity School

Master of Arts in Religion ↔ Master of Divinity

Master of Sacred Theology

Joint Degrees and Double Majors also are offered through the two schools. Scholarship awards are based on need and merit. Prizes in Organ Performance and Choral Conducting are available for qualified applicants.

Address inquiries to: Office of Admissions, Yale Institute of Sacred Music
409 Prospect Street, New Haven, CT 06511
PHONE 203-432-5180 FAX 203-432-5296
E-MAIL ruth.lackstrom@yale.edu
WEBSITE <http://www.yale.edu/ism>

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

CAPITAL BIBLE SEMINARY

—Changing the World from the Nation's Capital
—Training the Leaders of the 21st Century

- ATS ACCREDITED
- COMMITTED TO THE INERRANCY OF GOD'S WORD
- EMPHASIS ON ORIGINAL SOURCES
- 40 YEARS OF TRAINING PEOPLE WHO MAKE A DIFFERENCE
- M.A.—M.Div.—Th.M.

6511 Princess Garden Parkway
Lanham, Maryland 20785

301-552-1400, ext. 293
1-800-787-0256

M.A.C.E.

Christian Education

If you are called to help believe, move from spiritual infancy to maturity.

Christ, call on RTS. Our Master of Arts Program in Christian Education provides with the necessary tools and knowledge to build a comprehensive educational program for the church. It's more than just Sunday school. It's a full-course feast that can nurture and transform Christians of all ages.

In Jackson 800-843-2708
In Orlando 800-752-4382
In Charlotte 800-755-2439
RTS@rts.edu

REFORMED THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
Make It Count

Eastern Baptist Theological Seminary

P H I L A D E L P H I A

Providing a high view of scripture and evangelism with values that affirm women and promote ethnic, international and denominational diversity.

Degree Programs offered:

- Master of Divinity
- Master of Theological Studies
- Dual Degree Programs: M.Div./M.B.A.; M.Div./M.S.; M.Div./M.S.W.
- Doctor of Ministry in Ministry to Marriage and Family
- Doctor of Ministry in the Renewal of the Church for Mission

And, certificate and diploma programs in Christian Ministry.

Eastern Seminary, for 73 years, offering "The Whole Gospel to the Whole World through Whole Persons."

1-800-220-3287
<http://www.ebts.edu>

6 Lancaster Avenue
Wynnewood, PA 19096

The World Is
Our Campus

Luther
Rice
Seminary

*The Most Recognized
Name in Christian
Distance Education*

- Bachelor
- Master
- Doctor of Ministry

Luther Rice Seminary
3038 Evans Mill Road
Lithonia, GA 30038
1-770-484-1204
1-800-442-1577

E-mail: lrs@lrs.edu
Web Page: www.lrs.edu

Serving Since 1962

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

Obey His Call

Focus on the inerrant
Word for a lifetime
of ministry

Master of Divinity
Master of Arts

...and a whole lot more!

WESTMINSTER
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY IN CALIFORNIA

1725 Bear Valley Parkway, Escondido, CA 92027-4128
(760) 480-8474 • www.wtsca.edu

- Balancing academic and practical training
- Mentoring of students
- Partnering with the local church

PHOENIX SEMINARY

Scholarship with a Shepherd's Heart

- Contact our offices in Phoenix at (888) 443-1020, or find us on the web at www.phoenixseminary.edu

Global Connection

Off Campus and On Line

Without disrupting your family or leaving your present Ministry, you can complete your degree program. With Bethany, you can study off campus and on line via the World Wide Web. At your computer, in your home or office, or whether you use the mail, you can have a dialogue with Bethany's faculty, students, or alumni. Bethany will not take second place when it comes to providing nontraditional education. Bethany...A Seminary of Distinction.

The Bethany Degree Program...
Bachelor's, Master's and Doctorate
Degrees in the following areas:

Biblical Studies
Theology, Missions
Pastoral Ministry
Religious Education
Christian Counseling

Bethany is an Independent, Conservative, Baptist College with a trans-denominational student body. Bethany is designed for educating Pastors, Missionaries, and Evangelists. Bethany creates the excitement and inspiration of the Word of God.

Advanced standing is given for college transfer credit and prior Learning Assessment for life experiences. Monthly tuition arrangements are possible.

Bethany Worldwide

BETHANY WORLD COLLEGE AND THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

2573 Hodgesville Road / P.O. Box 1944 / Dothan, AL 36302

Ph: (334) 793-3189 • Fax: (334) 793-4344

E-mail: bethanybc@ala.net

Carolina University of Theology

EARN YOUR DEGREE AT HOME

YOU ALREADY LIVE ON CAMPUS!

Going to seminary or graduate school once meant packing up the family station wagon and the rental truck so you could move to a strange city, get a minimum wage job, and go in debt. Those days are over! Through Carolina University you can complete an accredited Bachelors of Arts, Masters, or Doctorate degree without leaving your home, your ministry, or your job.

TUITION FINANCING AVAILABLE

AREAS OF STUDY INCLUDE:

*Biblical StudiesMinistryChristian Education
TheologyChristian Counseling Psychology*

FOR MORE INFORMATION WRITE OR CALL

Carolina University of Theology
505-B Woodlawn Street
Belmont, NC 28012

(704) 827-1740 (704) 827-1802 FAX

E-Mail CUT@TNTIE.COM

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

BIBLICAL

PREPARING LEADERS FOR LIFE

BIBLICAL'S MISSION:

to serve the church by preparing leaders
who accurately interpret
the bible, live out its truth,
and communicate its
message to the world.

BIBLICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

200 North Main Street • Hatfield, Pennsylvania 19440
800-235-4021 or 215-368-5000
admissions@biblical.edu • home page www.biblical.edu

Fall 1998

Prospective Student Day: evening only October 14
all day Oct. 27 & Nov. 6

A United Methodist seminary in the Nation's capital
witnessing to the Gospel:
personal devotion to Christ and engagement in the world

Master of Divinity Tracks:

•Preparation for Ministry & Mission
•Student Pastor •Urban Ministries

Master of Theological Studies

Center for the Arts and Religion

Master of Arts & Special Programs for UMC Diaconals & Deacons

call or write for details

202-885-8659 or 1-800-882-4988

Wesley Theological Seminary

4500 Massachusetts Avenue, NW

Washington DC 20016-6590

<http://www.WesleySem.org>

Educating for EXCELLENCE in Christian Ministry

- Master of Divinity and Master of Arts Programs
- Part-time Certificate Program for ordained and lay church leaders

- evangelical and ecumenical
- high professor-to-student ratio
- situated in the beautiful SF Bay area

American Baptist Seminary of the West

2606 Dwight Way • Berkeley, CA 94704-3029
510.841-1905 (phone) 510.841-2446 (fax)
For information, contact David L. Schirer, Recruitment Director at the above numbers or e-mail: dschirer@absww.edu

Knox Is Here For You!

"Apply your heart to instruction"
(Proverbs 23.2)

Knox is here with solid
Reformation theology to equip you to change the world for Christ.

•Doctor of Ministry
•Master of Divinity
•Biblical and Theological Studies
•Certificate in Biblical Studies

1-800-344-5669

E-mail: knox@crpc.org

KNOX
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Fort Lauderdale, Florida

D. James Kennedy, Chancellor

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

Master of Science Marriage and Family Therapy

OKLAHOMA BAPTIST UNIVERSITY

In affiliation with the Christian Family Institute of Tulsa, Okla.

Christian Perspective

Approaches marriage and family therapy from a Christian perspective.
Emphasizes Christian values.

Professional Approach

Leads to professional credentialing in Marriage and Family Therapy.

Convenient

Designed to meet the needs of both traditional and non-traditional/working students.

Director of Graduate Studies in MFT
DBU Box 61702 • 500 W. University
Shawnee, OK 74804
405-878-2225

e-mail: Oscar_Jeske@mail.okbu.edu
Website: <http://www.okbu.edu>

MASTER OF ARTS

*Educating leaders who are Authentically
Christian and Culturally Sensitive*

Call today
1-800-697-1133

• Academic Degrees:

Old Testament
New Testament
Systematic Theology
Historical Theology

• Ministry Degrees:

Christian Education
Cross-Cultural Studies
Biblical Counseling

GRAND RAPIDS
BAPTIST SEMINARY

1001 E. Beltline NE • Grand Rapids, MI 49525

Study in Israel

Jerusalem Campus

Biblical History • New Testament
Backgrounds • Middle Eastern Studies • Hebrew Language

- M.A. programs
- graduate & undergraduate semester abroad
- 2 and 3 week programs
- credits transferable

JERUSALEM UNIVERSITY COLLEGE

1-800-891-9408

formerly: Institute of Holy Land Studies
4249 East State St., Suite 203, Rockford, IL 61108

EXPLORATORY WEEKENDS NOV. 6-8, 1998 & MAR. 5-7, 1999

BUILDING UP THE BODY OF CHRIST

Is This Your Calling?

Is God calling you to ministry or leading you toward further education in your current ministry? Louisville Presbyterian Theological Seminary may be the right place for you.

- The Master of Divinity Degree is a three-year program for students seeking ordination.
- The Doctor of Ministry Degree meets the needs of practicing ministers who are seeking to change, expand, or deepen their ministry.

We also offer the following degrees:

- Master of Arts in Marriage & Family Therapy
- Master of Arts in Religion
- Master of Arts in Christian Education
- Master of Theology

Nearly 150 years old, Louisville Seminary is one of 10 theological schools of the Presbyterian Church (USA), is approved for educating United Methodist, Christian Methodist Episcopal, and African Methodist Episcopal pastors, and welcomes the wider ecumenical community. At Louisville Seminary you will find a diverse campus community devoted to building up the body of Christ. Come visit!

Louisville Seminary—Is this where God is calling you?

Call us at 1-800-264-1839 or visit us at www.lpts.edu

LOUISVILLE

SEMINARY

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

Master of Social Work

Two-year Program or Advanced Standing Program

C S W E Accredited

The only nationally accredited program in the Coalition of Christian Colleges & Universities

Roberts Wesleyan College

2301 Westside Drive
Rochester, New York 14624-1997
(716) 594-6600 or 1-800-777-4RWC

*Christian Perspective
Serving the Church, Community, and World*

TOCCOA FALLS COLLEGE

GRADUATE STUDIES DIVISION

Distinctively DIFFERENT

FLEXIBLE - PRACTICAL

All graduate classes are offered in modular scheduling.
A period of 15 weeks of on-campus
residency course work taken at your leisure completes an accredited and affordable M.A.

Christian
Education

Intercultural Studies

Pastoral Ministry

Toccoa Falls College
Graduate Studies Division
Toccoa Falls, GA 30598

800-868-3257 Ext. 54

E-mail: gradstud@toccoafalls.edu
website: www.toccoafalls.edu

TYNDALE Theological Seminary Announces the Inauguration of Its School of World Evangelization

Tyndale has a heart for world missions. To that end, the Seminary has launched the School of World Evangelization, directed by Dr. Cecil Stalnaker. The School exists to train people who will contribute to the evangelization of all peoples.

If you are interested in ministry in Europe, we encourage you to study with us. Come and be part of a seminary focusing on Europe, but reaching out to the whole world.

Tyndale is an interdenominational, multi-national, evangelical seminary. It is located near Amsterdam, the Netherlands.

Programs: MA, MDiv, ThM, emphasis in World Evangelization

Egelantierstraat 1
1171 JM Badhoevedorp
The Netherlands
Tel: 011-31-20-659-64-55
Fax: 011-31-20-659-83-03
E-mail: Tyndale@CompuServe.com
Web site: www.tyndale-europe.edu

Arthur P. Johnston, Ph.D.
President and Professor Of World Evangelization

UNION
PSCE

10 Graduate Degree Programs
To Prepare Leaders for Pastoral and Educational Ministries

UNION THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY & PRESBYTERIAN SCHOOL OF
CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

3401 Brook Road • Richmond, VA 23226
800.229.2990 • www.utsva.edu

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

27 years of training leaders in Christian Counseling

One Tradition, two paths...

MS in Professional Counseling

from Georgia State University

The PSI/GSU program offers extensive training in counseling, theology, and the integration of psychology and Christian faith.

MA in Professional Counseling

from Psychological Studies Institute

Beginning Fall 1998 PSI will initiate a "stand alone" Masters program.

Psychological Studies Institute

2055 Mount Paran Rd., NW Bldg. 2
Atlanta, Georgia 30327

Telephone: 404-233-3949; 1-888-92GOPSI

Internet: www.psi-atl.edu

Beginning a third century of service

SINCE 1794

Preparing men and women for pastoral ministry and lay leadership in all phases of the Church's outreach

Pittsburgh
Theological Seminary

www.pts.edu

1-800-451-4194

616 N. Highland Ave.

Pittsburgh, PA 15213

WHERE WILL YOU LEAVE YOUR Print?

Leave your unique print on the Kingdom.

At North American

Baptist Seminary,

You will discover,

In a deeper way,

who you are,

who God is,

and what

God can do

through you.

NORTH AMERICAN
BAPTIST SEMINARY

Sioux Falls, SD 57105

1-800-440-NABS

E-mail: train@NABS.edu

www.NABS.edu

TRULY A BIBLICAL ALTERNATIVE THE REFORMED EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Church Growth Office
211 Byrne, Houston, TX 77009

For over 122 years, the Reformed Episcopal Church has remained faithful to the inerrant word of God, powerfully proclaiming the unchanging Gospel of Jesus Christ and worshipping Him in Spirit and Truth using the biblical and time-honored Book of Common Prayer,

The Reformed Episcopal Church is rapidly expanding her witness throughout the United States and the whole world.

FOR INFORMATION CALL:
1-800-REC-3433

Multnomah Biblical Seminary

MISSION: Ministry

DR. BRUCE FONG: MBS faculty; Promise Keeper's keynote speaker and co-founder of Clear Creek Community Church.

DR. PAMELA REEVE: MBS Women's Ministry program adviser; pioneered the first women's ministry program in the U.S. at Multnomah.

MULTNOMAH BIBLICAL SEMINARY is the perfect "mission headquarters" for you, with experienced instructors, tested programs, agency partners (Mission Portland Networking; International Renewal Ministries), and an urban mission field at your doorstep. If you want to join a faith-building community and put solid Biblical training to work in a vital ministry internship, then you must explore Multnomah Biblical Seminary. There may be no better place to prepare for the mission God has for you.

KEVIN MOUNT:

MBS Grad Class of '93; Director of Education and Career Services at the Portland Rescue Mission.

MULTNOMAH BIBLICAL SEMINARY
"Where Ministry is the Word"

Mail: 8435 N.E. Glisan St.
Portland, Oregon 97220
Toll Free: 1-800-275-4672
Internet: www.multnomah.edu
Email: admiss@multnomah.edu

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

CONCORDIA SEMINARY

GRADUATE SCHOOL

Addressing Contemporary Issues with the Historic Christian Faith

M.A. (Master of Arts in Theology)
S.T.M. (Master of Sacred Theology)

Ph.D. in Biblical Studies
Doctrinal Theology
Confessional Studies
Reformation Studies

801 De Mun Avenue
St. Louis, Missouri 63105
314.505.7103
314.505.7003 Fax

IS THERE A CALL OF GOD ON YOUR LIFE? DO YOU WANT TO BECOME A MIN., PASTORAL CNSLR, SOCIAL SER. WKR,
BIBLE TCHER? EARN AN ASSO,
BACH., MASTER OR DOC. DEG.
THERE IN YOUR HOME OR OFF.

LAEL CNSLG. CENTER TEACHES:
"PSYCHOLOGY KNOWS ALL THE PROBLEMS, JESUS KNOWS ALL THE ANSWERS."

"LAEL" is a Hebrew word means
"Belonging to GOD." LAEL is a conservative, interdenomin.
evangelical school, believing the inerrancy of the Bible.

CALL TODAY FOR A CATALOG.
TRANS. IN COLLEGE CREDITS

LAEL COL. & GRAD. SCHOOL
3721 St. Bridget Ln, St. Louis,
MO 63074 + 314-426-7000 --
1-800-321-LAEL

Western Theological Seminary
Holland, Michigan

Leanne VanDyk
associate professor of Reformed theology

WESTERN WTS SEMINARY

Western Theological Seminary is an evangelical and ecumenical community of faith and learning in the Reformed tradition

For more information contact Sally Via at 1.800.392.8554 or e-mail: sally@westernsema.edu

PREPARE FOR IMPACT.

If you want to have an impact on the world, choose the seminary that can have the greatest impact on
you. At Columbia, we focus first and foremost on your spiritual life, then challenge you to academic excellence
and give you practical ministry skills.
Our customized degree programs offer
the flexibility you need to build on your past as you prepare for the future.

Become a world Christian who serves God with excellence. Call
Columbia today at 1-800-777-2227.

Columbia Biblical Seminary
& Graduate School of Missions

A Division of Columbia International University
9435 Monticello Rd. • P.O. Box 112244, Columbia, SC 29210-1122
803 / 544-4100 • Toll Free 1-800-777-2227 • www.cis.edu
Preparing World Citizens To Know Him And To Make Him Known
CALL FOR OUR EXTENSION CATALOG

INTERNATIONAL
BIBLE COLLEGE
& SEMINARY

Since 1973

- Individualized Faculty-Directed Home Study
- Accredited Ministerial Degree Programs
- Low Tuition Interest Free Financing
- Transfer Credits For: Ministerial Service, Previous College Credit, Teaching Experience

- ASSOCIATE DEGREE
- BACHELOR'S DEGREE
- MASTER'S DEGREE
- DOCTORAL DEGREE
- CHRISTIAN COUNSELING

Our 26th Year

FREE CATALOG

CALL TOLL FREE 1-800-369-0009
In Missouri Call (816) 461-3633

ENROLL NOW

Call 800-488-2528

Quality Christian education

A.A., B.A., M.A., M.Div., and D.M. degree programs available through Distance Learning, o-week sessions, Learning Centers and Campus classes. Financial Aid available to those who qualify.

AMERICAN BIBLICAL COLLEGE and SEMINARY

7045 NW 16th, Bethany, OK 73008
Web site: abcs.edu
E-Mail: Webmaster@abcs.edu

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

VISIT OUR WEB SITE
www.mbts.edu

Preparing God-called men and women to reach America's Heartland for Christ

Offering affordable master's and diploma level studies

$65 per credit hour for Southern Baptists

$130 per credit hour for non-Southern Baptists

1-800-944-6287

Midwestern Baptist Theological Seminary
5001 N. Oak Trfy.
Kansas City, MO 64118-4697

Columbia Evangelical Seminary

Formerly Faraston Theological Seminary

offers Distance Learning Programs through Mentorship Studies
Earn your degree at home

1-800-768-3997

To request information 24 hours a day

- ▶ Majors in Apologetics, Bible, Theology, Philosophy, Ministry, more.
- ▶ Work one-on-one with one of our more than 80 scholars throughout your entire degree program.
- ▶ You may bring an outside Mentor to your program.

To talk, call 1-360-577-8039

Faraston@tdn.com
<http://www.Faraston.edu>
Columbia Evangelical Seminary
P.O. Box 847, Longview, WA 98632

SERVE YOUR COUNTRY WHILE STILL IN SEMINARY.

The Army needs ministers and seminary students to meet the spiritual needs of America's soldiers and their families.

The Army and Army Reserve have even developed a special program for seminary students that won't interfere with your studies. It's called the Army Chaplain Candidate program. And it enables you to use your summer vacation to minister to the diverse needs of America's troops here in the U.S. or overseas.

The need is great, but the rewards are even greater. For specific information call 1 800 USA ARMY or visit the Army Chaplain website at www.goarmy.com

ARMY CHAPLAIN CORPS
BE ALL YOU CAN BE

Here's the Central difference:

- Ecumenical in outlook and approach — serving both Baptists and persons of similar heritages.
- A practical and progressive curriculum — aimed at helping you meet the ministry challenges of the 21st century.
- A relationship-centered seminary — where lifelong friendships are fostered.
- A worldwide ministry vision—with our alumni/ae serving on more than 60 mission fields around the world.
- A legacy of Christian service and ministry training since 1901.

How may we assist you?
Call or write us at:

Central

BAPTIST THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

741 N. 31st St., Kansas City, KS 66102-3964
913-371-5313 or 800-677-CBTS
Fax: 913-371-8110 E-Mail: central@cbts.edu

Learn to minister in a clinical setting.

Expand your knowledge and enrich your clinical experience for the spiritual care of people in your community and church who face medical crises.

Loma Linda University offers two master's programs designed to assist ministers and other professionals in providing effective spiritual care in clinical settings.

■■■

M.A. in Clinical Ministry*

M.A. in Biomedical and Clinical Ethics

■■■

*Distance learning option available soon!

Loma Linda University
Coleman Pavilion, Suite 1112IS
Loma Linda, CA 92350
(909) 558-4956
(909) 558-0336 (fax)

Web sites:
<http://ministry.llu.edu>
<http://ethics.llu.edu>

if you're looking for the word with edge from people with spirit, if you're in ministry and want an MTh that will allow you to step back and think deeply in an area of personal or professional interest...

if you're a graduate and would like an MA in Biblical Interpretation that will develop interpretative, research and writing skills, and encourage you to apply them to poverty and postmodernism, nihilism and nationalism – and a host of other contemporary issues and 'isms'...

if you want to lay strong foundations for future research or for a career in theological education, if you'd like to hone your mind in an evangelical college that won't dictate how you should think...

Think Again

if you're in overseas mission and want an opportunity to reflect and study and upgrade your skills...

if you'd like to gain field experience in a city with almost endless training opportunities, if you want to grow in a supportive, worshipping, transdenominational community with fees that are probably less than you'll pay in the US...

Think about London. Think about LBC. LBC is Western Europe's largest interdenominational seminary with an outstanding international faculty, the Donald Guthrie Centre for Biblical & Theological Research, the unique Centre for Islamic Studies, a superb library, a full range of University validated undergraduate and postgraduate programmes and a long history of preparing men and women for service all over the world. For a catalogue or more information, contact Jane Smith, Postgraduate Administrator, LBC, Green Lane, Northwood, Middlesex, HA6 2UW, UK. Tel: (+44) (0) 1923 826061 Fax: (+44) (0) 1923 836530 E-mail: postgrad.cti@londonbiblecollege.ac.uk

MA · MTh · MPhil · PhD in London
Theology at LBC
CENTRE FOR UNDERGRADUATE & POSTGRADUATE THEOLOGICAL STUDIES

THE MARKETPLACE

Cost: 46 cents per character (each space & punctuation counts as a character); avg. 45 characters per line. Min. $39.10 (85 characters). CT blind box number available at $6 each insertion; checkmark box [✓] $14 each insertion. Supply permanent street address and phone number. Ads set display style: $276/column inch. Combination package available for CHRISTIANITY TODAY, CHRISTIAN READER, & YOUR CHURCH: 2 magazines—44 cents per character per insertion; 3 magazines—42 cents per character per insertion. Display style: 2 magazines—$263 per insertion; 3 magazines—$252 per insertion. All classified ads will now be automatically placed on CHRISTIANITY ONLINE at no additional charge. IMPORTANT: Prepayment & written confirmation required to process ads. Visa, MasterCard, or personal check accepted; fax (630) 260-9401. Employment ads are given priority. All other ads will be placed in first available issue. Deadline for reservation or cancellation is seven weeks prior to actual issue date. Address correspondence to: Classified Advertising, Christianity Today, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

ROBERTS WESLEYAN COLLEGE in Rochester, New York, anticipates the following faculty openings for the 1999-2000 school year: Business Management; Graphic Design; Philosophy; Old Testament; Teacher Education. Each will be ongoing tenure-track positions. A terminal degree is expected. Send vita to Dr. Burton Jones, Dean of Faculty, Roberts Wesleyan College, 2301 Westside Drive, Rochester, NY 14624-1997.

TYNDALE HOUSE PUBLISHERS, a leading Christian publishing firm, is seeking a senior book editor. Will edit content and style of adult Christian fiction and general trade books; review manuscripts and determine editing strategy; develop and maintain author relations. CBA market and 3-4 years editorial experience preferred. Please send résumé to: Tyndale House Publishers, Attn: HR, P.O. Box 30, Wheaton, IL 60189; fax: (630) 668-9092. visit our Web site at www.tyndale.com. EOE.

VICE PRESIDENT FOR SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

San Francisco Theological Seminary seeks a person to direct its educational mission in Southern California. Based in Claremont, this program offers nonresidential courses of study leading to M.Div. and MATS degrees. It serves mature church persons of this ethnically and culturally diverse region. The position carries both faculty and administrative status. Responsibilities include teaching, administration of staff, development of programs, implementation of culturally specific initiatives, and representation to the larger church. Preference will be given to candidates of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) and to those who have an earned doctorate or its equivalent, academic and administrative experience, and knowledge of Southern California. AAEE standards will be applied. Send résumé to Dr. Donald W. McCullough, President, San Francisco Theological Seminary, 2 Kensington Road, San Anselmo, CA 94960-2905.

SENIOR PASTOR

located on the north side of Chicago, First Evangelical Free Church is seeking a dynamic full-time senior pastor with a minimum of 5 years experience as a senior pastor preferably in an urban, multicultural setting. In addition to preaching and teaching, strengths must include shepherding and equipping, vision-casting, and an ability to lead a small team of associate pastors and large group of lay leaders. M.Div. required. Our church emphasizes discipleship of believers through a small-group ministry and caring for our community through a major outreach program to the homeless, children, and youth. Our worship style is contemporary, and our 500-person congregation is predominantly young (both singles and families) and diverse. Qualified individuals should send résumé and cover letter to: Pastoral Search Committee, First Evangelical Free Church, 5249 N. Ashland, Chicago, IL 60640.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

DO YOU NOW, or have you in the past, sold institutional organs at the retail level? A major manufacturer of electronic institutional organs is seeking to fill an entry-level marketing position to work educating a nationwide group of dealers in proper demonstration techniques and modern marketing strategies. The following skills are vital to be considered for our selection process:

- A musical background in organ studies is required. The ideal candidate will be able to perform a variety of music, including contemporary Christian, gospel, and classical.
- Knowledge of MIDI and its applications would be a plus.
- Extensive travel is required.
- Relocation may be necessary.

Please send your résumé in confidence to: CT Classified Ads Box 217, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188.

DIRECTOR OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION/ ASSOCIATE PASTOR FOR DISCIPLESHIP Vital, evangelical, Reformed, 900-member North Avenue Presbyterian Church in Atlanta, GA, seeks vibrant, committed Christian educator to become Director of Christian Education/ Associate Pastor for Discipleship. Developing disciples through a creative adult education program (covering all post-college ages) to equip God's people from entry level to maturity is high priority, along with reaching large single-adult population in adjoining areas. Position will oversee children's ministry director. M.A. in Christian Education and a heart for and experience in urban ministry desired. Send inquiries/résumés to: Betty Henderson, Chair, Director of Christian Education Search Committee, 4192 Lawhon Court, Tucker, GA 30084.

DIRECTOR OF YOUTH: 1,100-member PCUSA located in historic district. Minister to 6th-12th graders. Salary $25,000-$35,000 plus benefits. Send résumé, statement of faith and cover letter to: Matt Fowler, Chair, Director of Youth Search Committee, First Presbyterian Church, 307 Gates Avenue, Huntsville, AL 35801-3102.

IS GOD CALLING YOU to a ministry as an associate pastor for congregational care and fellowship in the San Francisco Bay area? The First Presbyterian Church of Hayward, with a membership of over 900, seeks a full-time associate pastor for a ministry team. Primary duties include:

- Home and hospital visitations
 - Equipping deacons and Stephen ministers
 - Planning and organizing congregational life for adults and family units
 - Nurturing the spiritual development of members through adult education activities
- An ordained Presbyterian minister who has three to five years experience is desired, or a person of related experience who is eligible for ordination. Send dossier to APNC First Presbyterian Church of Hayward, 2490 Grove Way, Castro Valley, CA 94546.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH (ABC), Amherst, MA (college/univ. town), seeks flexible, experienced pastor with a deep personal relationship with God. Our two services with diverse worship styles need leadership with particular skill in preaching, interpreting the faith, evangelism, counseling, and nurturing and developing spiritual leadership in the body. Send résumé to Gerald Gates, 123 River Rd., So. Deerfield, MA 01373.

DIRECTOR OF MUSIC MINISTRIES PCUSA evangelical congregation seeks full-time dedicated individual desiring Spirit-empowered music ministry that glorifies God throughout the covenant life of the 1,000-member Fletcher Hills Presbyterian Church in beautiful San Diego area. Two worship services: one contemporary, one traditional. Please send to: Dr. R. Geoffrey Brown, 455 Church Way, El Cajon, CA 92020.

WRITER

Communications firm serving Christian ministries seeks a writer who believes in the power of words and knows how to use them—both to gain attention and get a response. Minimum two years experience in direct mail fundraising (or proof that you qualify without that experience). Good salary and benefits. Great place to live. Outstanding clients. Send résumé to: Creative Director, 19265 Power Hill Place NE, Poulsbo, WA 98370.

CENTER CITY PHILADELPHIA Messianic Jewish Ministry is seeking exec. dir./pastor. This unique evangelistic outreach ministry under PC (USA) has been in existence for over 50 years. We prefer a Hebrew-Christian Minister to fill this position; however, all résumés are welcome. Submit résumé and letter of introduction to C.C.A.J., 1907 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, PA 19103, or call (215) 568-1030.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES: Advent Group Ministries, a Christian social service agency located in San Jose, CA, seeks resident counselors, night counselors, summer interns for adolescent residential treatment programs. Competitive salary, benefits. Residential positions provide room & board. Contact Carol Fryer: (408) 281-0708; (1-800) 98ADVENT; fax: (408) 281-2658.

INDEPENDENT RESTORATION MOVEMENT CHURCH seeks a senior pastor who can help us grow our people. We are a church of about 150 in a community experiencing an influx of white-collar professionals because of our schools and proximity to Chicago jobs. This man, who will be considered an elder, should have an established record of solid teaching and leadership in a healthy, Bible-based church. Responsibilities will include preaching, teaching, and coaching. Send résumé and statement of beliefs to Lincolnway Christian Church, Attn: Ron Burnam, 141 S Schoolhouse Rd., New Lenox, IL 60451.

FULLER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY
ASSOCIATE DEAN FOR EXTENSION, ADMINISTRATIVE FACULTY

Fuller Seminary, one of the largest and most diverse evangelical seminaries with students from over 120 denominations and 80 countries, seeks creative and energetic leadership. Fuller has been a leader in extension education for over 25 years with major extension centers currently serving over 1,200 part-time students in Phoenix, Colorado Springs, Seattle, and Northern and Southern CA. In addition to wholehearted agreement with Fuller's statement of faith, the candidates should have an earned doctorate in a relevant field, preferably in pastoral theology, pastoral counseling, New Testament, or preaching/communication. They must also have interest in and experience with newer modes of delivering theological education and have superb administrative skills, experience in curriculum development and program evaluation, and a team-oriented leadership style. Research and teaching experience in graduate theological education is necessary and publication record desirable. For application and position descriptions, send letter of interest and résumé/curriculum vitae to Dr. Robert Freeman, Associate Provost for Continuing and Extended Education, Fuller Theological Seminary, 135 North Oakland Ave., Pasadena, CA 91182. Position will be open until filled.

ASSOCIATE PASTOR needed at an international, interdenominational church in Athens, Greece, who will assist the senior pastor in all areas of church ministry. Job description to be tailored to our present needs as well as his spiritual gifts. Must be willing to raise half support. If interested, contact Patti None-maker, Romilias 20, Kastri 14671 GREECE; gnone@hol.gr

YOUTH PASTOR for a growing suburban church in Medway, Massachusetts. We are evangelical and Calvinistic. Morning attendance 450. Call Pastor Stewart (508) 533-7032.

UNIVERSITY PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (PCUSA), a 3,800+ congregation in Seattle, Washington, is seeking two positions to lead the Department of Urban and Global Mission. Senior Director/Associate Pastor of Urban and Global Mission should have a minimum of 10 years cross-cultural experience as an individual contributor and leader in urban and global mission ministry. This person will be senior member, communicator, leader, and pastor of the department. (This position will be selected first.) Assistant Director/Associate Pastor of Urban and Global Mission should have a minimum of 5 years of similar experience and will have an urban or global focus area that complements the Senior Director. Both candidates should have the following qualifications: deep personal love for Jesus Christ; ability to lead a department with a staff of 12, over 400 volunteers and a substantial budget that supports over 70 career missionaries; proven team-building and pastoral skills with staff, missionaries and local, national and international partners; ability to articulate a vision of mission to equip, encourage, and work alongside lay volunteers and career missionaries; effective preacher and teacher of the Scriptures and biblical mission mandate; personal, hands-on, cross-cultural field and administrative ministry experience. Please submit résumé and references to: University Presbyterian Church, Attn: Christi Scovill, 4540 15th Ave. NE, Seattle, WA 98105; (206) 524-7300 or e-mail to: christis@upc.org. Web page: www.upc.org

NORTH PALM BEACH, FLORIDA

A small, active community in North Palm Beach, Florida, is seeking a minister for an ecumenical Protestant chapel. Services are held each Sunday from mid-October until mid-May. The chapel, which just celebrated its 20th anniversary, is well established and serves the needs of the 300-member congregation. Activities include a library, a religious-study program, and benevolence activities. We offer a beautiful chapel with excellent facilities and a well educated, caring congregation. Please send your personal information to: Search Committee, Lost Tree Chapel, 11149 Turtle Beach Road, North Palm Beach, FL 33408.

ASSOCIATE PASTOR

Growing, active evangelical church of 600+ members in suburban York, PA, seeks full-time associate pastor (new position) for strengthening programs in Christian education and youth ministry. Will also assist senior pastor in providing spiritual and administrative leadership. Candidate should be evangelical in faith, have strong teaching and leadership skills and the passion to encourage and enable believers to do God's will. Ideal candidate has graduate-level ministry training and a track record of effective ministry. Excellent salary and benefits. Send pastoral profiles/résumés to: Dr. Karen Elizabeth King, Penn Central Conference, United Church of Christ, 900 S. Arlington Ave., Suite 126, Harrisburg, PA 17109; phone/fax: (717) 560-0268; e-mail: revkeking@worldnet.att.net

VICE PRESIDENT OF DEVELOPMENT

The Baptist General Conference is seeking a Vice President of Development to serve as a key member of the executive ministry team of this denomination of 900 churches headquartered in Arlington Heights, Illinois. The candidate should be a spiritually motivated individual with a world-view of ministry who possesses excellent verbal and written communication skills. An individual with a strong church leadership background, lay or pastoral, is desired. This position requires strong relational skills blended with the ability to lead, motivate, and hold accountable a field staff of regional representatives. Applicants should have several years of resource-development ministry experience and have the ability to work nationally and regionally. The position also requires strategic and planning skills and experience in providing stewardship-education experiences. Inquiries should be directed to: Don Goehner, President, Goehner Resource Group, 4125 Blackford Ave., #205, San Jose, CA 95117-1705; office: (408) 246-6002; fax: (408) 246-6083; e-mail: Don GRG@aol.com

MINISTRY PLACEMENT for pastors & associates or churches. Call (503) 357-7830 or Believer's Dynamics, POB 596, Forest Grove, OR 97116. Since 1977.

DUE TO GROWTH AND EXPANSION, Belhaven College seeks those faculty who are excited to serve in the following areas at a college which prepares students to serve Christ Jesus in their occupation, relationships, and in the world of ideas.

- History Faculty (Fall 1999, PhD required)
- Mathematics Department Chair (PhD required)
- Sports Medicine Faculty (PhD & Athletic Training Certification required)
- Theatre Department Chair (MFA required)

Send vita to Daniel C. Fredericks, Provost, 1500 Peachtree St., Jackson, MS 39202. Minorities are encouraged to apply.

DIRECTOR OF MUSIC

Dedicated Christian to direct music program for growing 1,300-member church with tradition of outstanding choral and handbell groups. Duties: administering and directing music ministry and assisting in worship planning. Music degree or equivalent experience required with background in traditional and contemporary music. Keyboard experience desirable. Send résumé and salary requirements to: First Presbyterian Church, 2300 West Avenue, Sioux Falls, SD 57105, Attn: T. Barlow, by 10/15/98.

INVEST YOUR SKILLS, vocation, an experience ministering physically and spiritually to the hurting, broken, and lost the 10/40 Window. HOW? Contact: Mission to Unreached Peoples, toll free at (1-888) 847-6950, or E-mail: mupinfo@mup.org HTTP://www.mup.org/mupinfo/

TEACH IN JAPAN: Reach Asians for Christ. Teach in English. Several K-12 & ESL teaching openings. Mission school of 400; 2-year contracts. Must raise partial support. Write to: Bob Greninger, Okinawa Christian School, P.O. Box 14250, Gainesville, FL 32604; (1-800) 446-6423.

NATIONAL CHURCH PLACEMENT SERVICE VICE Churches and Ministers are connected with CMPN, P.O. Box 1132, Barre, VT 05641 (802) 476-8902.

CALVIN COLLEGE

VICE PRESIDENT FOR STUDENT LIFE

Calvin College seeks applicants for the office of Vice President for Student Life. The Vice President for Student Life is the leader and chief administrative officer of the Student Life Division. She/he reports to the president and is responsible for the effective functioning of the Student Life Division. The vice president is responsible for the planning, execution, coordination, and evaluation of goals, programs, policies, and staff members of the Student Life Division. Calvin College is a Christian college in the Reformed tradition. The position requires a Christian commitment compatible with the mission of the college. The successful candidate will have: master's degree in an appropriate area; an earned doctorate is preferred; expertise and experience in student services and development; commitment to the development of multicultural community and experience with ethnic minority people; proven skills in human resource management and managerial leadership; Commitment to integrity of faith, learning and living in student life. Candidates should submit a résumé, including the name and telephone numbers of three references by October 31st to: Connie Bellows, Director of Human Resources, Calvin College, 310 Burton SE, Grand Rapids, MI 49546. Calvin College is an equal employment opportunity employer.

U.S. DIRECTOR

Our client is a Christian, nonprofit, international social-development organization. We are seeking a U.S.-based, experienced fundraising professional who will feel comfortable working in a variety of cultural contexts. The successful candidate will be responsible for setting strategy and implementing all fundraising activities. The position reports to the U.S. board of directors and will implement major-gift, direct-mail, special-event grant-proposal strategies. Please send résumé and current salary information in confidence to: Van Dyke Associates, 1755 South Newville Road, Suite 100, Wheaton, Illinois 60187.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

THE CHRISTIAN RESEARCH INSTITUTE (CRI) seeks an on-site assistant editor. CRI is the premier research ministry equipping Christians to respond to the cults and other challenges to faith. Duties include serving as editor to CRI's newsletter and assisting with editing its magazine, the Christian Research Journal. Editorial experience, the ability to make scholarly articles understandable to lay readers, and a graduate degree relevant to CRI's focus (e.g., theology or philosophy) are required. Send résumé and salary history to Paul Young, CRI, Box 80008, Rancho Santa Margarita, CA 92688-0008, or fax (949) 358-6123.

CHRISTIANITY TODAY, INC. is growing and is looking to fill various newly created positions. Our mission is to communicate, primarily through 13 outstanding periodicals, the depth and transforming power of the Gospel as it penetrates all spheres of life. We are looking for editors, graphic designers, direct mail marketing and circulation professionals, advertising sales people and sales manager, computer support technician, and various administrative support staff who would like to combine career with ministry. Send résumé and cover letter with salary history to: CTi, HR Dept.-CT, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188; fax: (630) 260-1144; email: CTiHRDept@aol.com

ULL-TIME YOUTH PASTOR with minimum three years experience. Interested applicants should send written résumé to First Baptist Church, 310 West Taylor Street, Kokomo, IN 6901, Attn: Pastoral Search Committee.

MIDWAY PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, a 173-member suburban church in a beautiful country setting surrounded by rapidly expanding housing developments, is seeking a person who loves Christ and wants to grow a church leading its many committed leaders to accomplish Christ's mission here. Please send IF to PNC, 3238 Midway Rd., Anderson, SC 9621, or e-mail: rm_farmer@juno.com

ROWING EVANGELICAL CHURCH of 10+ in Arlington, VA (bedroom community Wash., DC) seeks full-time SINGLES/OUT-EACH PASTOR. Experience, seminary, and vision for reaching and maturing singles in Christ required. Send résumé to Search Committee, Cherrydale Baptist Church, 3910 Orcom Lane, Arlington, VA 22207. Phone: (03) 525-8210; fax: (703) 525-8254; E-mail: cherrylee@compuserve.com

FIRST REFORMED CHURCH, Schenectady, NY, is building a faithful and creative ministry team. Two full-time positions are available. For our ministries with children and youth, we seek an experienced professional, married or single, with advanced training in education and faith development. For our ministries of pastoral care, adult education, small groups and congregational fellowship, we seek an ordained person. Ministry team includes the current senior minister and a flexible structure to make optimum use of gifts for ministry in congregation and community. First Reformed Church is a diverse, ecumenical, and progressive downtown church of 800 members and seekers. Excellent salary and benefits provided. Women, racial/ethnic minority persons and gay couples are urged to apply. Job descriptions available on request. Please include letter of introduction and résumé or minister's profile form to FRC, Search Committee, 8 N. Church Street, Schenectady, NY 12305-1607.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

TALK SHOW HOST 3-6P M-F. Our audience wants a champion. They want him to be God fearing, but fearless in everything else. They want him to talk about what they care about. They want him to help make sense of this chaotic world we live in. They want him to have a compass in his head and a magnet in his heart. We want him to be a consummate broadcast professional to whom God has loaned an abundance of talent for the purpose of articulating truth and common sense through radio in a compelling and entertaining manner. (Grumpy moralists need not apply.) If this is a description of you, we would like to fly you to Pittsburgh for an audition. Major market salary will not be a problem. Contact Bob Souer OM (rsouer@pobox.com) or Chuck Grater GM (grater@wordfm.com). WORD-FM is a Salem Communications Station, an equal opportunity employer.

MAKE A CHANGE! Teach English, business, or computers in China, Russia, Muslim Asia, or C. Europe. Call ESI at: (1-800) 895-7955. All college majors/degrees welcome.

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

HAPPINESS IN 30 DAYS OR LESS: 93-page book. Send $10 to Marc Royer, Box 575, Granger, IN 46530.

THE INTERPRETATION BUGABOO! Who's right? Interpretation can be objective; need not be subjective to suit one's bias. A book and other materials will introduce you to this revolutionary hermeneutic. Send $5 to R. C. Averitt, 7026 2nd Ave., Lino Lakes, MN 55014.

MANUSCRIPTS WANTED, ALL TYPES. Publisher with 75-year tradition. "Author's Guide to Subsidy Publishing"; (1-800) 695-9599.

JESUS DID NOT RETURN IN AD 70, a biblical refutation of preterist theology; 28 pp., $3. A Clearer View of the Rapture, premillennial; 110 pp., softcover; $6.00 postpaid. John E. Young, 6 Robert St., Rockaway, NJ 07866.

THE FALSE DOCTRINE OF SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS: An Evangelical Resource. An appeal to SDA Leadership, by Dale Ratzlaff; (800) 355-7073; www.ratzlaf.com

6,000 GOOD USED BOOKS FOR SALE. Get monthly free book list from Pastor Wayne, 3940 Winewood Ct. SE, Grand Rapids, MI 49508; E-mail: 73223.2010@compuserve.com

EVANGELISTIC MATERIAL IN ARABIC: books, tracts, cassettes. In English: The Bible and Islam ($4.95 U.S./$5.95 Canada). Write: Arabic Dept., Back to God Hour, 6555 W. College Dr., Palos Heights, IL 60463.

BAKER BOOK HOUSE buys libraries, large & small. Phone: (616) 957-3110; fax: (888) 263-7310; E-mail: used.books@bakerbooks.com. Grand Rapids, MI 49546.

SHORT-RUN BOOK PUBLISHING! We can publish your book professionally in quantities as low as 250 books for less than $1,200 U.S.! Take advantage of the Canadian dollar: For free info contact: Essence Publishing, 103B Cannifton Rd., Belleville, ON, Canada K8N 4V2; (1-800) 238-6376; fax: (613) 962-3055; www.essence.on.ca

☒ WORSHIP MUSIC RESOURCES print music and helps for the classically trained church pianist; recordings by William Phemister; phone/fax: (630) 665-9321; www.wheatonmusres.com

BOOKS, FILMS AND TAPES

200,000 USED BOOKS. Libraries purchased. Kregel Used Books, Box 2607, Grand Rapids, MI 49501; (616) 459-9444; fax: (1-888) USD-BOOK; Web: www.Kregel.com

THE LIBRARY OF SPIRITUAL CLASSICS. The greatest literature on the deeper Christian life ever penned. Free catalog. Spiritual Classics, 1275 Hwy. 16 W, Newnan, GA 30263; (770) 254-9442.

☒ FREE PAMPHLET. "Why Mormonism Is Not Christian" (1-800) 871-7120.

THE HOUSE CHURCH MOVEMENT—a catalog of books and tapes available on this fresh, new, revolutionary movement. P.O. Box 285, Sargent, GA 30275; (1-800) 645-2342.

1000's OF CHRISTIAN USED BOOKS for sale. For free monthly lists write: Corey Smallman, PO Box 9626, Chattanooga, TN 37412.

REJECTION; TURNING YOUR LEMONS INTO LEMONADE: 185-page book. Send $15 to Marc Royer, Box 575, Granger, IN 46530.

PUBLISH YOUR BOOK NOW! Your book can be produced and promoted by the leading subsidy book publisher. For free 32-page illustrated booklet TD-66, call (1-800) 821-3990 or write to: Vantage Press, 516 W. 34th St., New York, NY 10001.

COMPUTER/VIDEO PROGRAMS

CHURCH MANAGEMENT SOFTWARE: Windows, MD-DOS; contributions & membership; financial; $85 each. Free trial. Vian Corporation (908) 537-4642; http://www.vian.com.

COMPUTER SOFTWARE for church membership, contributions, and accounting. PowerChurch Plus is the most widely used church-administration software package. Call or write today for free information. F1 Software, Dept. CT, 208 Ridgefield Dr., Asheville, NC 28806; (1-800) 486-1800.

MINISTRY AIDS

☒ SERMONHELP.COM is a complete sermon preparation service based on the lectionary. Extensive Advent and Christmas materials now available. Large sermon archive will help topical preachers. Free preaching E-Zine. Visit www.sermonhelp.com

UNDERSTANDING YOUR TEENAGER parenting seminars. Find out how to schedule one at your church. Call (1-800) 561-9309 or visit our website at <http://www.uyt.com>

☒ TROUBLED YOUTH: Starting an outreach? You can avoid major obstacles we survived starting our Camp/Community ministry in 1970. Save time & pain with our Survival Guide. Call Rich at Youth Investment (612) 449-0004.

POSITION WANTED

CHRISTIAN ATTORNEY seeks position as church/ministry administrator. Contact Hugh: (727) 799-3900; fax: (727) 799-8181.

MINISTRY OPPORTUNITIES

VISIT PRISON IN AN ENVELOPE. By writing an inmate you can fulfill the Lord's command to remember those in prison. Contact Prison Fellowship Ministries (CT), P.O. Box 17500, Washington, DC 20041; (703) 478-0100, x590; <http://www.pfm.org>

MINISTRY OPPORTUNITIES

MISSIONARIES

If you need to change mission boards, consider Ripe for Harvest. We are an independent, evangelical mission agency allowing you to pursue your call to missions as God has gifted and enabled you. Call (619) 435-0432 or write P.O. Box 182184, San Diego, CA 92184.

REACHING MUSLIMS: Attention, pastors & saints! GCMi is training thousands of nationals (7,000 in 2 yrs.) thru its powerful MET Seminar! Info: fax (813) 818-9250; gcmi@ibm.net.

MINISTRY SERVICE, matching ministers/ministries. Connect with CCRS, P.O. Box 398, Sheffield, MA 01257. Phone: (413) 229-3627; e-mail: churchrectr@juno.com

PREACH CHRIST to nations via shortwave radio. (561) 697-4547; www.flinet.com/~grlmin

MISSION NANNYS. Women 50+ travel and help missionaries with domestic duties. P.O. Box 609, Edgewater, MD 21037

DRAMA

☒ CHRISTIAN DRAMA. Hundreds of plays for adults and youth. Free catalog. Eldridge Publishing: (1-800) 95-CHURCH, or <http://www.95church.com>.

RESEARCH OPPORTUNITIES

RESEARCH OPPORTUNITY

The Pew Evangelical Scholars Program announces its program of Research Fellowships for the academic year of 1999-2000. Sixteen grants of $35,000 each will be awarded to scholars pursuing research in the humanities, social sciences, and theology. Applicants must have a Ph.D. and be a Canadian or U.S. citizen or have a long-term appointment in North America. Christian scholars from all religious backgrounds are most welcome to apply. Applications are due by November 30, 1998. For further information contact: Michael S. Hamilton, Pew Evangelical Scholars Program, 810 Flanner Hall, University of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, IN 46556. Phone: (219) 631-8347; fax: (219) 631-8721; E-mail: ND.pesp.1@nd.edu

FUNDRAISING

FREE INFO. Your church etched on beveled glass suncatcher/ornaments. Low min. Wullbrandt Studio C, 1270 Hwy. 65, Hampton, IA 50441; (515) 456-3580. www.heartofiowa.com/wullbrandt/

INSURANCE

Missionaries Worldwide Health Plan

For Missionaries working overseas!

FHI Benefit Plans/Aetna Global Benefits
800-347-9547

www.rfdriver.com/fhigroup.htm

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

PART-TIME $500 AND UP MONTHLY
Marketing biblically based fitness video series to churches. Toll free: (1-888) 695-0642.

SPREAD GOD'S WORD while earning an income. Join Scriptures: (1-800) 585-5873, opt. 3. Please leave #12801 after message.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

RETIRED PASTOR/ENTREPRENEUR/LAY LEADER type. Build a lucrative business with cutting-edge technology. My average managers earn $80K/yr. and other perks: cars, travel, profit sharing, & more! Investment required, 0 interest financing for credit-worthy candidates. Sales experience a plus. North America is your territory. If you're success minded, call Doug at Action Jackson Marketing, Inc. (1-888) 426-6826.

ASSEMBLE PRODUCTS at home for best companies. Great extra income idea! (1-800) 377-6000, ext. 8290.

EDUCATION

LET'S FACE IT! A new century is upon us, and a new generation is waiting to be equipped to conquer it. ARE YOU READY? Paul said to Timothy: to diligently present yourself, unashamed to God, able to accurately handle the word of truth. ECUA's proven distance-learning degree programs in Theology, Ministry, Christian Counseling, Education, and Law can get you ready. Call for a free information packet. Evangel Christian University of America; (800) 346-4014; www.ecua.edu

THE VIRTUAL CAMPUS of Reformed Theological Seminary now offers you a world-class theological education right in your own home. Take accredited courses through Distance Education. Find out more by calling (800) 227-2013 or by e-mailing us at: distance.education@rts.edu

BEAUTIFUL CROSSES Unltd.: (1-800) 484-1419, x-6861; in Virginia (703) 660-9644; alvahb@msn.com

CALLIGRAPHY SCRIPTURE CALENDAR with your photos makes a cherished gift! Call toll free: (1-877) MY QUILL, or visit www.CalligraphyByCarol.com

BEAUTIFUL, HANDCRAFTED home altars create a peaceful and serene atmosphere for personal prayer. Write/fax for free brochure. Home altars, Box 618, Sunapee, NH 03782; fax: (603) 863-9738; www.homealtars.com

SERVICES

OUTREACH CENTER MINISTER

If you believe you are called to minister to people in small groups, the National Conservative Christian Church will provide you a course of study, coaching, and assistance to begin a cell group, home church, or an outreach center. Write the N.C.C.C. at 4460 Northgate Court, Sarasota, FL 34234, or phone (941) 365-8115.

☒ TAX-EXEMPT NONPROFIT STATUS for your mission, ministry, church. Recorded message toll-free (1-800) 268-1635.

ORDINATION. International Ministerial Fellowship, an association of evangelical churches and ministers, offers many services, including ordination, newsletters, networking, ecclesiastical endorsement, consultation in area of legal, accounting, church planting, biblical/theological training, Internet services (FREE Web site and E-mail address) and a missions sending agency. For free information, check out our Web site: www.i-m-f.org or write: P.O. Box 32366, Minneapolis, MN 55432; (612) 571-5967.

DISCOUNTS: DENTAL, VISION, PRESCRIPTIONS! 50-80% for $29.95 per year; (1-800) 268-4333 # SEA.

SERVICES

ASPIRING WRITERS

Develop your God-given writing talent. Send for FREE STARTER KIT. Christian Writing Guild, 65287 Fern, Hume Lake, CA 93666; phone: (209) 335-2333; fax: (209) 335-2700; or NVRohrer@Juno.com

DIABETICS with Medicare or insurance, your diabetic supplies at no cost. Call (1-800) 337-4144.

Moving Interstate

The Service and Thrift Relocation Service offers discounted rates and other benefits to reduce your moving cost on moves within the Continental U.S. For a free, no-obligation estimate call Lewis, CORd northAmerica

1-800-873-2673

ICC# MC 161012

 northAmerica
VAN LINES/AGENT

TRAVEL

NEAR GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, MONTANA. 3BR log cabin; secluded. Color brochure (320) 384-7739.

☒ GOLDEN RULE TRAVEL is a Christian agency specializing in wholesale bulk rate airline tickets for church and missionary travel. Our services are available to individuals as well as all mission and church organizations. We try extra hard to save you money! Mention this ad for a one-time, discount. Call toll-free (1-888) 950-3277. FARE for pricing.

JOIN THE INTERNATIONAL Christian Breakfast Network. Call (1-800) 881-1940 or write to ICBNN, 550-777 Royal Oak Dr., Victoria, BC V8X 4V1 Canada.

REAL ESTATE

MOVING? Call us to find a full time, highly recommended Realtor who
*Is committed to utmost integrity and service
*If requested, will also introduce you to a Christian community, churches and schools
A totally FREE SERVICE (USA/CA)

The EXODUS Network 1-800-395-8585

CONVENTIONS

NORTHERN NJ SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION PRESENTS THE 38TH ANNUAL CHRISTIAN EDUCATION CONVENTION

FRI & SAT OCT. 23-24, '99
HAWTHORNE GOSPEL CHURCH, NJ

144 WORKSHOPS*50 PLUS EXHIBITS

FOR 800-363-4410

INFO: 973-283-1540

(FAX: 732-776-8733)

WEB: MEMBERS.AOL.COM/NNJSS

Shatter the Silence!

Day of Prayer for Persecuted Christians – November 15, 1998

*I was enslaved, beaten, raped, starved and forced to convert to Islam. Thank you for saving me and my children.
Now we are free to be Christian again.*

Mrs. Akon Akot

*"We rejoice that CSI has brought freedom to over 2,400 Sudanese slaves. But tens of thousands of Christian slaves remain in bondage, and many more Christians are severely persecuted
elsewhere in the world.*

*They pay a heavy price for their faith in our Savior, Jesus Christ.
They look to you for help."*

Reverend Hans Stuckelberger
Founder and International President Christian Solidarity
International

Christian Solidarity International write or visit our website today.

To learn more about the enslavement and redemption of Christians in the Sudan, Christian Solidarity International (CSI), has prepared a FREE video and literature for worship, devotion and study. Also, learn how you can daily help suffering brothers and sisters in Christ throughout the world. To receive your FREE video and more information about the work of CSI, call,

Christian Solidarity International • 3334 E. Coast Hwy. #295 • Corona del Mar, CA 92625

Phone: 1-888-313-4468 • (949) 640-7885 • Fax: (949) 640-7886

E-Mail: csiusa50@aol.com • Internet: <http://www.csi-int.ch>

Evangelicals Are Not an Interest Group

As the election approaches, politically minded conservative evangelicals are discovering they are not involved in the issues so much as they are the issue. "Religious Right Shows Its Muscle" reads a headline in the Chicago Tribune. The Arizona Republic warns that "the religious right is causing near-civil war in some campaigns." The buzz on Capitol Hill is that the Religious Right is splitting conservative ranks.

But this bellicose imagery could cause real harm to evangelical political activity.

The latest round of press attention was triggered when Jim Dobson gave his celebrated speech threatening to abandon the Republican party. Worried party leaders convened a Values Summit and agreed to take action on such things as abortion and the marriage penalty.

Dobson did a noble service in jarring Congress out of its lethargy, but nothing sets off alarm bells in the press faster than political stirrings among the Religious Right. Journalists immediately warned in apocalyptic tones that religious conservatives were "marching on Washington" and "demanding their due." Articles described Christians as a powerful voting bloc that delivered 45 percent of the vote in the 1994 Republican sweep of Congress. Many alluded to Ralph Reed's phrase that Christian conservatives are demanding "their place at the table" and depicted them in the same terms used for a labor union or any other special-interest group.

Sadly, Christians have sometimes contributed to this image. Of course, we have a right to a place at the table, like any other citizen. And yes, we have political clout because millions of Americans share our moral concerns. But that can never be the basis of our political stance. We contend for certain truths in the political arena precisely because they are true, and because these transcendent truths are crucial to public justice and freedom.

Our message is not, We put you in office, now pay up; but rather, This should be done because it is right, it is a principle that undergirds any well-ordered civil society. We must be clear that the moral positions we urge are not partisan; they apply to Democrats and Republicans alike.

Our principles are derived from Scripture, but in a pluralistic society they must be translated into terms nonbelievers can understand, language that appeals to the objective moral order recognized by the ethical systems of all great civilizations—what C. S. Lewis called "the Way" or "the Tao."

For example, when we work to change abortion laws, we appeal not only to divine revelation but also to the most fundamental duty of government:

to defend the defenseless. Our nation was founded by a generation willing to fight and die for the "inalienable" right to life. Both Christian belief and Enlightenment deist agreed on the rights the government must protect.

Or consider assisted suicide and eugenics. The reason we oppose legalization is that these things are contrary to the fundamental duty of government recognized since our founding. As G. K. Chesterton wrote, eugenics "is chiefly a denial of the Declaration of Independence. It urges that so far from all men being born equal, numbers of them ought not to be born at all."

Finally, when we oppose gay marriage and domestic-partner laws, our purpose is not to punish homosexuals but to preserve the unique legal status of the heterosexual family. This is not someocratic power grab; it is asking government to recognize a fundamental social pattern that has undergirded every successful society throughout history.

In seeking limits on government, our motivations stem from a rich tradition of political philosophy rooted in the Reformation—a tradition that makes constitutional democracy possible. It rests on the recognition that every sphere of society has its own function, its own authority, which government must not usurp but rather must protect. Dutch statesman Abraham Kuyper coined the phrase "sphere sovereignty" to assert that the individual, family, church, school, and business enterprise all owe their origin to God, not government. Therefore, their proper function and structure comes from God; there are lines that government may not cross in its social-engineering schemes.

As Kuyper put it, we live "coram Deo" (before the face of God), and we are directly responsible to God in each area of life. For Christians, politics is the high calling of ensuring that government protects the proper political institutions and preserves the moral order.

This is why it is so crucial not to allow ourselves to be tucked into any party's hip pocket, or cast as just another political interest group in the ideological struggle. Our concern is on a higher level: that all spheres of society are free to fulfill their God-ordained function. At times we may represent a majority, other times only a small percentage of the vote, as in the early abolitionist movement. But our position remains the same: that there exists a natural order that government is morally obligated to respect.

Our task is to serve as society's conscience, seeing all of life from God's perspective and interpreting that vision in prudential terms for our fellow citizens. We don't seek power; we seek a society where government promotes justice in all spheres of society and protects the public good.

Our message is not,
We put you
in office,
now pay up;
but rather,
This should be done because it is right.

The President's Small Group • News: A Pre-Election Report

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

OCTOBER 26, 1998

TALES of the PRODIGAL

ANNUAL BIBLE ISSUE

The Pursuing Father • The Missing Mother • The Clumsy Embrace
The Older Son Had a Point • Rejecting the Prodigal

PROCESSED

10 10 1998

LIBRARY

74476 84052

David Horn ON Distance Learning

It can be easy for you to take the first few steps toward an M.Div., since many seminaries offer correspondence classes.

But do you end up taking a few random classes, or do you enter into a structured program that leads to your ultimate goal?

This concern is why we created a new way to begin studying for an M.Div.

Semlink is our commitment to make distance learning more productive. We determined that "at a distance" would no longer mean "at a disadvantage."

That's why we actually reshaped our entire M.Div. curriculum. We lowered the barriers you have to hurdle to get started, without lowering our degree's high spiritual and academic quality.

We made sure that each class was as good as it could be, and that all of the classes worked together in a logical progression toward your degree.

With Semlink, you can take ten courses a full one-third of your M.Div., before moving on campus.

The program is "high tech," with audio

"If you're going to study at a distance, make sure that every step counts."

cassette lectures complemented by the emerging use of video, CD-ROM, and internet resources.

But it is also "high touch." You will have a faculty mentor for each course, to assist you via phone, fax, mail, or e-mail.

You will also have a faculty advisor to help you with your overall program.

The Semlink program is responsive to your schedule. Once accepted, you can begin courses at any time during the year. And you can study at your own pace.

It's even more affordable! With Semlink, tuition costs are reduced 50%. That's just one more way to make every step count.

You can register online at www.gcts.edu

Or call, toll-free: 877-SEMLINK.
736-5465

SOUTH HAMILTON
Massachusetts

BOSTON
Massachusetts

CHARLOTTE
North Carolina
(800) 600-1212

Gordon-Conwell
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

(800) 428-7329

www.gcts.edu

GRACE, OBEDIENCE, AND A PROFOUND RESPONSE TO GOD'S LOVE

Members of Green Acres Baptist Church in Tyler, Texas, Commit $19.1 Million

This growing congregation in East Texas experienced deeper levels of spiritual renewal in a recent campaign to construct a new sanctuary and expand the church's ministry.

And RSI was privileged to be a part. We praise God that this body of believers sacrificially committed $19.1

million to His work and to affect many more lives in His name.

RESOURCE SERVICES, INC.

12770 MERIT DRIVE, SUITE 900
DALLAS, TEXAS 75251

800-527-6824
972-404-7513

www.rsi-ketchum.com

It Only Looks More Expensive

Since Bertolini began manufacturing quality stackable chairs, over 30 years ago, our name has become synonymous with superior craftsmanship and subtle elegance. Leading the industry in both durability and innovation, Bertolini is pleased to unveil our latest model: the APEX stacker™. With a wide selection of handsome fabrics, and no unsightly exposed metal frames marring the chair's unique wide back, the attractive

APEX chair enhances auditoriums and sanctuaries of all sizes. Designed to meet even the most challenging seating requirements, our chairs' unique structure allows for maximum seating capacity, while offering your congregation and assemblies extended comfort. And with the most rigorous quality standards in the industry, Bertolini chairs are guaranteed to remain comfortable and elegant, many years to come.

We invite you to have a seat.

HAVE A SEAT! FOR FREE! CALL TODAY,
AND WE'LL SEND YOU A COMPLIMENTARY BERTOLINI CHAIR.

20 Year Frame Warranty

5 Year Fabric Warranty

CHINO, CALIFORNIA • TUPELO, MISSISSIPPI

CALL US TOLL-FREE AT 1.800.647.7725

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Volume 42, No. 12
October 26, 1998

A Magazine of Evangelical Conviction

THE PARABLE OF

THE PRODIGAL

ANNUAL BIBLE ISSUE

34 The Pursuing Father

What we need to know about this often misunderstood Middle Eastern parable.

By Kenneth E. Bailey

PLUS: The End of the Great Rebellion

65 The Clumsy Embrace

Croatian Miroslav Wolf wanted to love his Serbian enemies; the Prodigal's father is showing him how.

Interview by Kevin D. Miller

70 The Other Brother Had a Point

What kind of world would this be if people were rewarded for squandering their families' inheritance?

By Barbara Brown Taylor

73 Rejecting the Prodigal

The early church debated whether apostate Christians could be forgiven. By Christopher A. Hall

76 The Missing Mother

When my prodigal son left our world, it sent me on a sojourn as well. By Wendy Murray Zoba

80 Special News Report: Wild Card Election

The Clinton factor and tensions with the GOP test the mettle of religious conservatives. By John W. Kennedy

80

92

DEPARTMENTS

- 5 Letters
- 28 Editorial: The President's Small Group
- 32 Inside CT: A Restoration Project
- 85 Matters of Opinion: Israel's Holocaust
- 86 Current Religious Thought: Abraham Kuyper: A Man for This Season
- 88 Reflections
- 90 Directions: Veils, Kisses, and Biblical Commands
- 92 Frederica Mathewes-Green: Moms in the Crossfire
- 94 Books: Stumped by Repentance
- 104 Philip Yancey: What's a Heaven For?

NEWS

- 16 National Baptists: Indicted Leader Retains Office
- 18 Canada: Gambling Grants Undermine Church Witness
- 22 Clinton Scandal: Partisan Theology in American Pulpits?
- 22 Accountability: Trio of Pastors Counsels President
- 23 Zoning: City Nixes Worship Permit at Vineyard Church
- 24 Russia: Non-Orthodox Believers Brave Sharp Restrictions
- 26 Nicaragua: Evangelicals Want Religion-Free Schools

13 North American Report

20 World Report

22

Senior Editors: George K. Brushaber, Chairman; James I. Packer, Visiting Scholar; Timothy George, Senior Adviser; R. Kent Hughes, Earl F. Palmer, Marianne Meyer Thompson, John D. Woodbridge

Editorial Director: Harold L. Myra
Executive Editor: David Neff
Managing Editor: Michael G. Maudlin
Art Director: Carla Sonheim
Associate Editors: Richard A. Kauffman, Kevin D. Miller, Timothy C. Morgan, Wendy Murray Zoba
Administrative Editor: Carol R. Thiesen
Associate News Editor: John W. Kennedy
Book Review Editor: John Wilson
Associate Designer: June M. Gunawan
Editorial Resident: Christine J. Gardner
Editor at Large: Philip Yancey
Senior Writer: Tim Stafford
Senior News Writer: Arthur D. Moore
Arts Editor: Karen L. Mulder
Editorial Coordinator: Paulette DePaul
Administrative Assistant: Lara Badalamenti

Board of Directors: Billy Graham, Chairman; B. Clayton Bell, Sr., Executive Chairman; Harold L. Myra, President; Miriam Adeney, John N. Akers, Jill P. Briscoe, Stephen W. Brown, A. Kenneth Curtis, Susan S. Eames, Robert P. Evans, Eugene B. Habecker, Ben Haden, Pete Hammond, Michael E. Haynes, Oswald C. J. Hoffmann, C. B. Hogue, John A. Huffman, Jr., Edward L. Johnson, Jay L. Kesler, Dennis F. Kinlaw, Jack Modest, Jr., William W. Pendleton, Robert E. Reccord, Paul D. Robbins, W. Fred Smith, Jr., Howard S. Williams

Billy Graham, Founder; Carl F. H. Henry, Editor 1956-68; L. Nelson Bell, Executive Editor 1956-73; Harold Lindsell, Editor 1968-78; Kenneth S. Kantzer, Editor 1978-82; V. Gilbert Beers, Editor 1982-85; George K. Brushaber, Executive Editor 1985-91; Terry C. Muck, Executive Editor 1985-90

Contributing Editors: Miriam Adeney, Nigel M. de S. Cameron, Charles W. Colson, James R. Edwards, Nathan O. Hatch, Kenneth A. Myers, Mark A. Noll, Thomas C. Oden, Ben Patterson, David Schiedermayer, David A. Seamands, Howard A. Snyder, John R. W. Stott

Consulting Editors: Paul M. Bassett, Colin Brown, Harold O. J. Brown, Robert E. Cooley, David S. Dockery, William A. Dyrness, Stanley J. Grenz, Christopher A. Hall, Walter C. Kaiser, Jr., Kenneth S. Kantzer, Donald W. McCullough, Alister E. McGrath, Richard Mouw, Roger E. Olson, Haddon W. Robinson, Stephen A. Seamands, Aida Besançon Spencer, John G. Stackhouse, Jr., Donald A. D. Thorsen, Edwin M. Yamauchi

Corresponding Editors: Tokunboh Adeyemo, V. Elving Anderson, Donald G. Bloesch, Edith L. Blumhofer, Darrell L. Bock, Calvin B. DeWitt, Samuel Escobar, C. Stephen Evans, Ajith Fernando, Richard J. Foster, Vernon Grounds, Allen C. Guelzo, Christopher D. Hancock, Alan F. Harro, Roberta Hestenes, Arthur P. Johnston, Robert K. Johnston, David Livingstone, Paul L. Maier, George M. Marsden, David L. McKenna, Stephen V. Monsma, Leon Morris, Terry C. Muck, Nancy Murphy, Bradley Nassif, Armand M. Nicholi, Jr., Roger Nicole, C. René Padilla, William E. Pannell, Eugene H. Peterson, Richard V. Pierard, Robert C. Roberts, John Rodgers, Vinay Samuel, David P. Scaer, Bruce L. Shelley, Ronald J. Sider, Russell P. Spittler, Elmer L. Towns, Grant Wacker, Robert L. Wilken, J. Rodman Williams

Advisory Editors: Leith Anderson, Myron S. Augsburger, William Bentley Ball, David B. Barrett, Paul W. Brand, Michael Cromartie, Edward G. Dobson, James Engel, George Gallup, Jr., Charles E. Hummel, Diane L. Knippers, Steven T. McFarland, Dean Merrill, Bryant L. Myers, Richard John Neuhaus, Will Norton, Jr., Michael Novak, Matthew Parker, James W. Reapsome, Beth Spring, Joseph M. Stowell, Warren W. Wiersbe

CHRISTIANITY TODAY, INC.

Harold L. Myra, President, C.E.O.
 Paul D. Robbins, Executive Vice President, C.O.O.
 Laurie Powell, Executive Assistant
 Keith Stonehocker, Senior Vice President
 Harold B. Smith, Corporate Vice President
 David Hemstreet, Vicki Howard, John C. LaRue, Jr., Kevin A. Miller, David Neff, Linda Schambach, JoAnn Selander, Marshall Shelley, Carol Thompson, Vice Presidents

Advertising: Joyce Bardin, Karen Booker, Joel Carlsen, Lee Cunningham, Kevin Flanagan, John Gray, Carol Hayes, Jenny Jorgensen, Tim Platek, Daniel Poorman, Kathryn Stephens, Joel Stombras

Circulation: Charlene Perez, Production Director; Jo Ann Rosenbaum, Fulfillment Director; Leslee Baron, Norma Bormann, Bradley Dupuy, Traci Grieser, Heidi Hall, Jody Harrington, Julie Kaminski, Sherry Kyle, Dianne Lambert, Debra Lane, Jeremy Long, Nancy Nance, Louie P. Parker, Karen Raad, Carol Schaley, Jennifer Stenzel, Elizabeth Tolentino, Bonnie Willman, Joy Windes, Philip Woods

Financial Operations: Terumi Echols, Manager, Cheri Peterson, Credit Manager, Gary Johnson, Sandra Johnson, Judy Van Zanten

Human Resources: Susan Cronk, Manager, Rebecca Bright, Kate Bryant, Bert Davidson, Philip DiCicco, Jane Hyeon, Lew Radabaugh

Internet Online Services: Judy Gill, Manager, Clayton Anderson, Kathy DePue, Sky Findlay, Wendy Harley, Michelle Hayes, Laura Hepker, Michael Herman, Todd Watermann, Aaron Welch

Market Research: Cynia Solver, Manager, Grace Ferroni, Natalia Maranduc, Douglas Zimmerman

Production: Cynthia Cronk, Manager; Technology: Les Smith, Manager, Jeff DiNanno, Ted Gysan, Kelly Johnson, Jason Olthoff, Tim Ostermiller, Theresa Phillips, Rebekah Santos, James Smeenge

Special Sales: Glenn Bushong, Manager; Becki Bustin, Michael Fister, Rodney Heckler, Jared Johnson, Lynn Long, John Ramsell

Editorial/Advertising Offices: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 630-260-6200; FAX: 630-260-0114. Advertising in CHRISTIANITY TODAY does not necessarily imply editorial endorsement.

Subscription Services: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, P.O. Box 37060, Boone, Iowa 50037-0060. Customer service: 800-999-1704.

Manuscript Policy: Unsolicited manuscripts are not accepted. A query letter must be sent first, describing a proposed manuscript (poetry is an exception). Unsolicited manuscripts sent without a self-addressed, postage-paid envelope will not be returned.

Permissions: CHRISTIANITY TODAY grants permission for any original article (not a reprint) to be photocopied for use in a local church or classroom, provided no more than 1,000 copies are made, are distributed free, and indicate the source is CHRISTIANITY TODAY.

Australian Agent: MEDIA.COM, 14 Eton Road, Keswick 5061, South Australia. United Kingdom Agent: MASTERPLAN PUBLISHING CO., 63-67 Kings Road, New Malden, Surrey KT3 3PB, phone 0181-942-9442.

Indexes: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is indexed in Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature; Christian Periodical Index; Religion Index One: Periodical Religious and Theological Abstracts; Book Review Index; and Academic Abstracts and Magazine Article Summaries. ISSN 0009-5753. © 1998 CHRISTIANITY TODAY INC.

Christianity Today (ISSN 0009-5753) is published monthly (semi-monthly in April and October), 14 issues per year. Christianity Today, Inc., 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188. Periodicals postage paid at Carol Stream, IL, and at additional mailing offices.

Postmaster: Send address changes to Christianity Today, P.O. Box 37060, Boone, IA 50037-0060. 1-800-999-9999. GST Registration Number R126028836. Canada Post Product Sales Agreement #59536. Printed in U.S.A.

Subscription Rates: Regular subscription price: one year $24.95. Outside U.S. add $8.00 postage prepaid U.S. currency. $2.50 per copy.

Subscription Renewals? Gift Subscriptions?

Address Changes? Call toll-free 1-800-999-1704

E-mail: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is available electronically on America Online (keyword: CT), E-mail: CHRISTIANITY TODAY at CTedit@aol.com. CT is also on the Web at www.christianitytoday.net. For information on how to enroll in Christianity Online, call 1-800-633-8888.

MORE FUEL FOR THE FIRE IN YOUR HEART.

Rutherford Institute founder John Whitehead believes a full-dimensional Christianity inevitably impacts culture. Here is motivation for you and your church to reclaim the Christian influence in society as the 21st century draws near.

A powerful, never-before published commentary on Romans 1-8 by the most influential Christian thinker of this century, the late Francis Schaeffer. Fresh insight and an arresting perspective on our own times.

Is the evangelical church in trouble? These essays from today's most knowledgeable voices take the pulse of evangelicalism — and show you how to promote the kind of change that leads to an uncompromised body of believers.

Encounter God's ultimate purpose in the world in John Piper's passionate exploration of Jonathan Edwards' incomparable classic, "The End for Which God Created the World." It's more powerful and relevant than ever.

CROSSWAY BOOKS

Making A Difference In People's Lives For Christ.

Available at a Christian bookstore near you.

Biblical "Myth"

■ I really enjoyed "Did the Exodus Never Happen?" [Sept. 7]. I find the assumption that history as recorded in Scripture is myth unless it can be verified by secular sources to be laughable. Anyone who has tried to follow the news stories of the past few years knows that news disseminated in the mainstream press must be seen with a critical eye. The number of retractions of inaccurate and even bogus reports and stories have been frequent and numerous. Are we to believe that records of events written hundreds and thousands of years ago are to be taken uncritically simply because they were written on papyrus or etched in stone? "Let God be true and every man a liar."

One assumes the inaccuracy or falsehood of the Bible at one's own peril. It is the wise man that begins his research with the assumption that the Scriptures are true, and other types of evidence should be judged based on that assumption. I would much prefer to meet the Lord one day and have him perhaps call me on the carpet for taking his word too literally than to have to explain why I couldn't find the Scriptures plausible until I had verified them by other, human sources.

Keven Fry
Houston, Tex.

I wish to commend Kevin D. Miller for his timely and informative article on the Exodus. It should be noted that Kenneth A. Kitchen, who is the world's leading authority on Ramesses II, the pharaoh of the Exodus, and on the later history of Egypt, has detailed his reasons for defending the Old Testament in "The Patriarchal Age: Myth or History?" Biblical Archaeology Review 21.2 (1995). I addressed some of these same issues in Faith, Tradition, and History (D. Baker, J. Hoffmeier, and A. Millard, eds.). Professor Hoffmeier's colleague Alfred Hoerth has just published an excellent survey, Archaeology & the Old Testament (Baker), and I have edited Peoples of the Old Testament World (Baker, 1994), to which Hoffmeier contributed the chapter on the Egyptians.

Prof. Edwin Yamauchi
Miami University
Oxford, Ohio

■ The article begins with a reference to my colleague Baruch Halpern, who is currently out of the country and unable to respond directly; it lists him among the so-called minimalists who deny the authenticity of large sections of the Old Testament narrative. It is misleading for you to confuse the skeptical, scholarly work of Halpern and others with the extreme minimalists like Thomson and Lemche, particularly when Halpern himself is the author of a widely read article which excoriates the minimalists for their cavalier treatment of historical evidence.

The mainstream scholarly position raises serious questions about the Exodus narrative but accepts the broad truth of the biblical account of the kingdoms attributed to David and Solomon, while the minimalists deny basically everything before the sixth century B.C. That is a basic and radical difference, and it is disturbing that your article does not make that distinction clear.

Prof. Philip Jenkins
Pennsylvania State University
University Park, Pa.

■ When I was in graduate school I would have given all I owned to read an article like this, or a book like Hoffmeier's Israel in Egypt. I had to find out for myself that some of my professors were biased and did not decide on the basis of the evidence what to believe about the Bible.

They made it clear to me that I could never be considered an intellectual unless I agreed with their biblical revisionism. In all my college teaching, I did my best to prepare students to face such professors without losing faith or courage.

Kenneth E. Jones
Louisville, Ky.

■ When I read essays on this subject, minimalist and maximalist, I often have the feeling I'm reading attacks on straw men. In reality, few conservative authors take everything in Genesis literally, and few liberal authors argue that everything is fiction.

Donald V. Etz
Dayton, Ohio

A Jewish Olive Tree

Thank you for the article explaining Messianic Judaism ["The Return of the Jewish Church," Sept. 7]. As the article pointed out, nearly every form of Protestant and Jewish expression of worship is represented within the Messianic movement. But it is not so much this diversity that causes discomfort for many outside observers. Many simply dislike the fundamental message, "Christianity is Jewish." Many Christians don't like the implication that the church is closer to Judaism than it would care to admit. And unbelieving Jews do not like the message that Christianity is in essence a Jewish olive tree growing to fruition in Messiah (with an accommodation of the Gentiles). It hits too close to home!

As a Gentile believer, I always appreciated the niche being filled in Messianic Judaism by providing a place for Jews to worship their Messiah without forsaking their cultural traditions and ethnic heritage. In fact, their Jewish heritage becomes more fulfilling and meaningful in Messiah. However, it was a bit of a let-down when I realized that Scripture suggests the real recipient of accommodation is the "wild olive branch" of the believing Gentiles. It was ten chapters into the Book of Acts before the major grafting of Gentiles was initiated, and not until the Jerusalem council that the Nazarene Jews met to decide how to accommodate the Gentiles into this new (renewed) covenant of promise with Israel. Over the

THE CALVIN EXPERIENCE

'The Synthesis of All Learning'

That's one immodest definition of philosophy. Another definition calls it a system of values by which a person lives. Still another terms it the love and pursuit of wisdom.

At Calvin College, accomplished philosophers dedicate themselves not merely to deep thinking about the way things are. They open up the minds and hearts of students to better understand the way things ought to be.

What makes a Calvin education so distinctive and life-shaping for thousands of questing students each year? The experience and excellence of Christ-centered professors who love to teach.

C. Stephen Evans

Ph.D. from Yale; author of The Historical Christ and the Jesus of Faith (Oxford University Press, 1996) and Why Believe? Reason and Mystery as Pointers to God (William B. Eerdmans, 1996), honored by Christianity Today as one of its top books of the year in 1997; internationally known scholar on the life and thought of Søren Kierkegaard; editor for Books and Culture; Calvin philosophy professor.

John E. Hare

British-born; Ph.D. from Princeton; author of The Moral Gap (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1996); former staff associate in the House of Representatives' Foreign Affairs Committee and American Philosophical Association Congressional Fellow; international reputation in Christian ethics and the morality of war and nuclear deterrence; Calvin professor of philosophy.

Del Ratzsch

Ph.D. from the University of Massachusetts; author of The Battle of Beginnings: Why Neither Side is Winning the Creation-Evolution Debate (Inter Varsity Press, 1996), named by Christianity Today as one of the top books of the year; widely known scholar in the philosophy of science and in the relationship of science and religion; professor of philosophy at Calvin.

CALVIN

Grand Rapids, Michigan 616-957-6142 www.calvin.edu

course of history, the roles have become reversed as the Gentile-dominated church has, in effect, erased its Jewish roots.

The net effect of church history has been to accomplish implicitly what the heretic Marcion tried to do explicitly in the second century as he tried to eliminate anything Jewish from the Scriptures. Gentile bias pervades today's covenant and dispensational theological frameworks as they relegate the "natural branches" irrelevant in the present age.

Messianic Judaism, by its very existence, points to the need for a new unifying theological paradigm based on the growth of the body of Messiah throughout history in which the Gentiles are grafted into a single branch grafted into the olive tree that continues to be Jewish. Ironically, such a theological framework has great potential for unifying the church and ultimately ushering in the time Paul talks about in Romans 11 when "all Israel will be saved."

Charles McGraw
Kehilat Ariel Messianic Congregation
San Diego, California

The article left the impression that, prior to 1967, "there was not a single Messianic Jewish congregation in the world." This is not accurate. One or more congregations of Yiddish-speaking Jewish believers existed in Warsaw prior to World War II. The leader of one congregation in Romania, Isaac Feinstein, was martyred by the Iron Guard. Congregations in Odessa and Kiev were established long before the Communist takeover. Jewish believers in Budapest formed their own independent Messianic movement during the 1920s.

The existence and viability of a Messianic movement, especially in Europe during the first half of our century, should be noted and explored. Some, perhaps, would have been quoted in the article, but their voices were silenced by the ultimate sacrifice as Jews who identified unto death.

Mitch Glaser, President
Chosen People Ministries
Charlotte, North Carolina

A small number of Messianic congregations (maybe four or five) were already in existence in 1966 when I first went [to Jerusalem] to study. They had been going on for some time. Furthermore, there were also four or five such congregations in the U.S., established decades earlier. They may have been called "Hebrew Christians," but they were definably Jewish congregations.

The author also states: "There are v over one million Jews in the United States who express some sort of faith in Yeshua." From his mouth to God's ears! If only that were true! The total Jewish population in the U.S. numbers a little under 6 million Jews. This would mean that one of every six Jews in the U.S. is a believer in Yeshua. That figure is simply far too exaggerated.

Third, the author claims "The MJAA [Messianic Jewish Alliance of America] wing of Messianic Judaism is not interested in any of the cultural trappings of Gentile Christianity, unless those cultural practices reflect a specific, biblically prescribed practice." Such a statement is probably true of a very small minority of Messianic congregations, but not really totally true of the MJAA movement as a whole (of which I am a member). Much of the theology and practice is directly borrowed from traditional Pentecostal theology, and other elements have been incorporated from the more recent charismatic movements of a variety of kinds. The most accurate statement is from Eliezer Maass: that "there are many different models of messianic congregations; there is a lot of diversity in this movement."

Arnold G. Fruchtenbaum, Director
Ariel Ministries
Tustin, Calif.

Your article refers to Catholic sympathy for the movement by citing Cardinal Lustiger of Paris calling himself "a Jew" (since he is a convert from Judaism). You need to be aware of the Association of Hebrew Catholics, a voluntary organization of Jewish and Gentile Catholics founded in 1979 by Elias Friedman, a convert from Judaism, now a Carmelite monk living in Israel. This association aims at ending the alienation of Catholics of Jewish origin from their historical heritage by the formation of a Hebrew Catholic community approved by the church. Jewish ethnic identity and many practices will be preserved in this community whose members will also be fully Catholic. Members are already found in many countries of the world.

Jerome F. Tracy
Highland, N.Y.

The return of the Jewish church is an enigma wrapped in a mystery. Why not make the title "Let's Go Back to the Things Paul Said Are Dead"? We who have been born again are believers in the Lord Jesus, and hyphenating ourselves is spiritual immaturity. It is noteworthy that the Book of Hebrews is not addressed to Jews or Israel, but to Hebrews.

God has declared "there is no distinction between Jew and Greek"; for "all have sinned." There are Jewish or Hebrew believers, whichever term you may prefer, but from a New Testament point of view, there are no such things as Messianic Jews, or Hebrew Christians, spiritually speaking. God is no longer offering a Messiah to the world but the Savior.

I have no desire to make Jewish believers Gentiles, but I oppose any attempt to make the Lord's redemptive work somehow incomplete for Jewish people if it does not incorporate Jewish tradition as a spiritual part.

The offense of the cross is no less today than in Paul's day. Richard Ellison
Elmwood Place, Ohio

Whether Jew or Gentile, those who profess Messiah as Lord are baptized by the Holy Spirit into one body (1 Cor. 12:13). First used in Antioch (Acts 11:26), the name Christian was given to professing believers signifying a new life under grace. That name has remained in use to this present day. Do we really need another division within the body?

Vincent G. Gustafson
Westminster, Colo.

I do not feel repulsed by "Messianic Jew." I want to be sensitive to my Jewish people as I have a witness in their lives, but the word Christian is biblical. I do not refer to myself as a Jewish Christian, but I do not shy away from that reference either. As I speak in churches throughout the year (and have for 25 years), I find that Gentile believers assume that if you are a "Messianic Jew" you automatically attend a Messianic congregation. The fact is, a large portion of Jewish believers attend mainline or independent churches. On page 68 you say that in the early seventies "some of the Jews who became believers in Jesus were 'assimilated' into Gentile churches. Others began joining Messianic congregations." You did not provide for any middle ground. I came to faith in the early seventies when I started attending the base chapel at the air force installation where I was stationed and never felt "assimilated." In fact, the beauty of being in a "regular" church all these years is that it has provided a natural springboard to the rest of the body for teaching and consulting, because other believers have felt that I am a part of who they are.

Stan Kellner
Sheresh Ministries
Colorado Springs, Colo.

To most of my extended family, almost all of whom are believers, having Jewish 46 Million have said "Yes!" to Jesus because pastors and leaders have said "Yes" to the JESUS video.

Will you?

- There is no tool more powerful in any ministry than the Word of God.
- There is no medium more powerful in our world today than film.
- The JESUS video joins the power of both. It's the straight Gospel of Luke on film.

If a picture's worth a thousand words, this one's worth 46 million. That's how many people (world-wide) have said they accepted Christ as a direct result of watching the JESUS video.

Bring JESUS into every home in your neighborhood. For exciting, FREE info, go to page 7 in the Bible Reference Update insert in this issue.

Or call the JESUS Video Project now, for your FREE informational "Vision Kit". Call toll-free at: 1-888-JESUS-31, Ext #875.

CRANMER THEOLOGICAL HOUSE

P. O. Box 52591
Shreveport, LA 71135

An Anglican School of Ministry in the Tradition of the English Reformation

FOR INFORMATION CALL:

1-800-REC-0910
(732)

www.cranmerhouse.edu
rsutton@morrisdickson.com

An outstanding opportunity for residence study with leading Christian Scholars. An EARN-WHILE-YOU-LEARN program is available for incoming students in the 1998-1999 academic year.

COVENANT

ROOTED IN GRACE FOR A LIFETIME OF MINISTRY

ROOTED IN GRACE FOR A LIFETIME OF MINISTRY

COVENANT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

and the Francis Schaeffer Institute

1-800-264-8064

12330 Conway Rd. • St. Louis, MO 63141
Website: www.covenantseminary.edu
E-mail: admissions@covenantseminary.edu

SERVE YOUR COUNTRY WHILE STILL IN SEMINARY.

The Army needs ministers and seminary students to meet the spiritual needs of America's soldiers and their families.

The Army and Army Reserve have even developed a special program for seminary students that won't interfere with your studies. It's called the Army Chaplain Candidate program. And it enables you to use your summer vacation to minister to the diverse needs of America's troops here in the U.S. or overseas.

The need is great, but the rewards are even greater. For specific information call 1 800 USA ARMY or visit the Army Chaplain website at www.goarmy.com

ARMY CHAPLAIN CORPS
BE ALL YOU CAN BE

ancestry is interesting trivia. They would say that being Jewish is something their ancestors were.

Can it plausibly be God's will that a Jewish person who comes to faith move into the body as a whole, losing all identity? If so, why do Paul and James take so much trouble to disabuse fellow Jews—believers and nonbelievers alike—that Paul did not encourage Jewish believers to forsake Torah?

Instead of being the only one of my family in a Messianic congregation, which would the movement look like today if most of my family members had been in Messianic congregations for the last 20 years?

Rob G.
Franklin Square, NY

The Tabernacle as Model?

✉ I found Tim Stafford's article ["God in the Blueprints," Sept. 7] very thought-provoking. In dealing with the problem of the tension between "horizontal" and "vertical" emphases in church architecture, building committees and architects should perhaps consider the simple form of the wilderness tabernacle with its large outer court (emphasizing the horizontal) and its smaller inner sanctuary (focusing on the vertical).

Fredric McCormick
Coon Rapids, MN

Global Connection

Off Campus and On Line

Without disrupting your family or leaving your present Ministry, you can complete your degree program. With Bethany, you can study off campus and on line via the World Wide Web. At your computer, in your home or office, or whether you use the mail, you can have a dialogue with Bethany's faculty, students, or alumni. Bethany will not take second place when it comes to providing nontraditional education. Bethany...A Seminary of Distinction.

The Bethany Degree Program... Bachelor's, Master's and Doctorate Degrees in the following areas:

Biblical Studies
Theology, Missions
Pastoral Ministry
Religious Education
Christian Counseling

Bethany is an Independent, Conservative, Protestant Seminary with a trans-denominational student body. Bethany is designed for creating Pastors, Missionaries, and Evangelists. Bethany respects the integrity and infallibility of the Word of God.

Advanced standing, transfer credit and post-graduate Learning Assessment for life experience and field arrangements are possible.

Bethany Worldwide

BETHANY COLLEGE AND THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

2573 Hodgesville Road / P.O. Box 1944 / Dothan, AL 36302

Phone: (334) 793-3189 • Fax: (334) 793-4344

E-mail: bethanybc@ala.net

✉ As a pastor, I church hop when I'm on vacation. What I found this year was growth in the God-is-here-for-you mode of worship. So when I read Tim Stafford's article on church architecture, I thought of Marshall McLuhan's aphorism "the medium is the message." Here is the message of most new church buildings: Everyone can be comfortable in God's presence. While I want to do what I can to draw people into God's presence, the fact is that few true encounters with God are comfortable. Everyone in Scripture who meets God, even an angel, falls down in fear. No believers I meet tell me their own recent experiences in prayer and worship speak of little comfort and more of reverence and awe. They yearn to be in the presence of holiness. CT's own Frederica Mathew-Green speaks of her conversion in a church in Dublin, Ireland, as a "confrontation" that set her "reeling" [CT, May 18, 1998, p. 54]. Honestly, I think most Americans are sick of everything being essential, "relaxed-fit." But when we hear of the seraphim crying out "Holy, Holy, Holy," we are filled with an aching desire.

Eric Irwin
Issaquah, WA

Lord...yes!

here am I ... send me.

ONCE you've heard someone say Lord ... Yes!, don't put it on hold. It's their spiritual wake-up call. It's your opportunity to point them to a cross-cultural SHORT-TERM MISSION with LONG-TERM IMPACT ... for them, for your church, for the Kingdom.

FIND OUT HOW GOD USES SHORT-TERM MISSION TO PRODUCE LONG-TERM IMPACT. And find out why so many are talking about World Servants.

CALL TODAY FOR YOUR FREE COPY OF THE NEW WORLD SERVANTS' VIDEO LORD ... YES!

hear it.

call us.

"World Servants makes an impact! ... What began as a way for our people to serve Christ caused our whole church to seriously consider Jesus' words, 'Whatever you did for the least of these, you did for me.'"

MIKE WARMAN, DIRECTOR OF YOUTH MINISTRIES
WATERFORD COMMUNITY CHURCH, WATERFORD, MICHIGAN

1(800)881-2170
lordyes@worldservants.org www.worldservants.org

it's free

GREAT GIFT IDEA! INSPIRATIONAL T-SHIRTS

KNOW GOD KNOW PEACE
(no God, no peace)

Style # 1 -
Know God, Know Peace
(no God, no peace)

GIVE GOD
WHAT IS RIGHT
NOT WHAT IS LEFT.

Style # 2 -
Give God What Is Right,
Not What Is Left

Also available in the same style

Style # 3 -
Feed Your Faith and
Your Doubt Will Starve

100% cotton t-shirts available in sizes S-M-L-XL

CHRISTIANITEES.

T-SHIRTS

ORDER TOLL FREE

1-888-996-0808

MC, Visa and American Express are accepted

Only $14.95 each plus
$4.95 Shipping and Handling

Allow at least 2 weeks for delivery

Drawn to Lewis

■ I really appreciated the commentary on C. S. Lewis by J. I. Packer ["Still Surprised by Lewis," Sept. 7]. Packer does not explicitly state that Lewis appeals to evangelicals today because he (Lewis) was not one, but that is precisely why I am so drawn to him. Lewis's faith was shaped by the Anglican Church with its orthodoxy and centuries of experience, and he was enabled to admire the depth and mystery of God. Few modern evangelical writers (especially of fiction) display the fullness and majesty of God. Our more subjective faith may actually limit God.

Rebecca C. Hughes
Avon, Conn.

■ The article brought to my mind the quotation by David Luvell: "On the day that both John F. Kennedy and C. S. Lewis died, we can remember one as a monument, Kennedy, along the road and the other, Lewis, as a signpost, pointing to the greater hope."

Don Mechlin
Philadelphia, Pa.

Veggie Tales or Freddy Krueger?

■ Your David Grossman article ["Trained to Kill," Aug. 10] completely stunned me. Thanks for publishing it. I have a six-month-old son who loves watching Veggie Tales Christian videos. I shudder to think of him watching Freddy Krueger or Jason Vorhees movies with the same glee—yet I watched and enjoyed some of those violent movies myself as a teenager. I don't watch TV much anymore.

Dennis G. Jerz
Eau Claire, Wisc.

It was undoubtedly a shrewd marketing decision to print such a sensational article, and then to choose to use it as your cover story. Violence is a hot topic that sells—a source of revenue these days—because it's not easy to navigate through the deep waters of our times. Grossman is right to say that "this virus of violence is occurring worldwide," but it does not logically follow that "the explanation for it has to be some new factor that is occurring." Modern Christians are falling for easy answers and looking for places to lay blame instead of swallowing the bitter pill of our humanity's fallen nature.

I thought Grossman described beautifully and accurately the way God designed his creatures with a natural aversion to killing their own kind. He's right that the increase of "desensitization and brutalization" of our youth is a cause of the increase in violence in our culture. But he's wrong to let the blame fall squarely on forms of entertainment our kids have access to instead of on the homes the children are being reared in that leave them in front of the TV, on parents who give any place for such damage to entertainment at inappropriate ages, on the acceptance of abortion, and an attitude, even among Christians, that children are a negative, an inconvenience, a burden in an otherwise happy adult life.

Why would we think that outlawing some games will make better kids? We need to stop all this "alarmist" thinking that these kinds of articles promote.

Mrs. Amy M.
Jacksonville,

■ As an Anabaptist, I'd like to ask fellow evangelicals: Why haven't Bible-based churches taught pacifism for the last 20 centuries, let alone 20 years? Why don't you even teach and then apply the nonscriptural "Just war theory," rather than ignore the subject? Why have almost all evangelical groups blessed WWII, Korea, Vietnam, and the Gulf War? If I were a betting Christian, I'd bet 99 percent of American believers are in denial about New Testament pacifism.

Frank M.
Houston,

■ Thank you so much for this long-awaited explanation of why my conditions are founded.

Lynn Th.
Minnesota City, M

Reconcilers in Turkey

■ I was excited to read the article about Turkey ["In Search of the Lost Churches of Paul," Aug. 10]. I found it accurate except for one exception: the Reconciliation Walk is sponsored by Youth With A Mission. Those who participated in the Reconciliation Walk were implicitly instructed not to evangelize in any way (including giving out New Testaments). The walk is totally committed to apologizing for the Crusades. To those they are affiliated with a missions organization undermines their work of repentance and seeking forgiveness.

Pennye Kona
Baytown,

Brief letters are welcome. They may be edited for space and clarity and must include the writer's name and address if intended for publication. Due to the volume of mail, we cannot respond personally to individual letters. Write to Eutychus, CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188; fax: 630/260-0114. E-mail: ctedit@aol.com (✉).

Attend Class While Tending Your Flock

balancing the needs of your ministry with the needs of your family isn't easy. But furthering your ministry through education doesn't have to disrupt your home life. You can study for your bachelor's, master's, doctorate and still continue your ministry through the external studies program at Trinity.

Trinity College and Seminary allows you to complete your education through a personalized, accelerated degree program without a residency requirement. Our traditional off campus program, along with our virtual campus and optional Regional Seminars, lets you choose the method of study that best fits your responsibilities to your family and your personal educational goals.

Contact an Admissions Counselor for more information.

B.A., M.A., M.Div., Ph.D., D.Min.
in Various Disciplines

Financial Grants are Available

Off Campus and On-line

Degree Programs

Accelerated Study

Regional Seminars Optional

Accredited by the University of Liverpool, England

TRINITY COLLEGE OF THE BIBLE
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

800-457-5510

International Academic and Administrative Offices
Newburgh, Indiana, USA

Phone: 800-457-5510

Fax: 812-858-3235

E-mail: 74777.245@compuserve.com

Visit our website! www.trinitysem.edu

Are there things your M.Div. didn't prepare you for?

Pastor. Preacher. Counselor. CEO. COO. Chief strategy officer. Facilities manager. Master of ceremonies. Administrator. Volunteer recruiter. Media specialist...and more.

You give your whole self to your whole job 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. And now, we can help.

If you feel like you need more knowledge, more encouragement and more leadership skills, the DENVER SEMINARY DOCTOR OF MINISTRY may be for you. Designed to address real, practical needs of pastors and missionaries, Denver Seminary's D.Min. offers programs in

- Pastoral Ministry
- Marriage and Family Counseling
- Church and Parachurch Leadership

All are geared around the schedule and budget of full-time ministry professionals, now including students from 32 states and 12 foreign countries.

Our special mentoring program matches you with a mature professional who understands the demands and challenges you face. He or she will walk with you as you grow your mind, your heart and your ability to impact lives — Jesus' sake. D.MIN. BE MORE. DO MORE.

D.Min. Faculty Includes:

Dr. Haddon W. Robinson
Gordon-Conwell Seminary
Relevant Biblical Preaching

Dr. Calvin Miller
Southwestern Seminary
Creative Preaching

Dr. Gary J. Oliver
John Brown University
Marriage/Family Counseling

Dr. Clyde McDowell
President, Denver Seminary
Mobilizing Through Leadership

Dr. Bruce Demarest
Denver Seminary
Spiritual Formation/Mentoring

Dr. Rod Cooper
Denver Seminary
Developing Men

Dr. Dan Trathen
Southwest Counseling Associates
Marriage/Family Counseling

Dr. Ralph Covell
Denver Seminary
Communicating Christianity Cross-Culturally

Dr. Bruce Shelley
Denver Seminary
Strategies for Ministry

Dr. Steven Lee
Huntington College
Marriage/Family Counseling

Dr. Neil Anderson
Freedom in Christ Ministries
Spiritual Formation & Leadership

Dr. Craig Blomberg
Denver Seminary
Preaching the Parables

Dr. Harold Westing
Center for Leadership Development
Developing People With Purpose

Dr. H. Norman Wright
Christian Marriage Enrichment
Marriage/Family Counseling

Dr. Les Parrott, III
Seattle Pacific University
Marriage/Family Counseling

Dr. Everett Worthington
Virginia Commonwealth University
Marriage/Family Counseling

Dr. Joan Winfrey
Denver Seminary
Marriage/Family Counseling

For the rest of the answers, contact
Doctor of Ministry Office

Denver Seminary

P.O. Box 10,000

Denver, CO 80250

Or call Dr. David Osborn

1-800-922-3040 Ext.

e-mail: admit@densem.edu
www.gospelcom.net/densem

DENVER SEMINARY

The D.Min. for the next generation of leaders

INDIGENOUS PEOPLES

Freedom to worship: Cree elder Wally McKay prays to dance as David danced, as a native girl (below) follows through after the supplication.

Native Christians Reclaim Worship

After 500 years of being told by other cultures how to worship Christ, native people from 15 countries met at the second World Christian Gathering of Indigenous People to explore expressions of worship that grow out of their traditions and culture.

Some of the more than 1,000 participants at the nine-day conference in Rapid City, South Dakota, September 5-13, believe they have been asked to give up too much of their culture.

"It was wrong for denominations to teach us to become like them," says planning committee member Lynda Prince. "The only mandate in the Bible says that their duty and our duty is to teach people to become like Jesus Christ." At the age of five, Prince, a Carrier/Sekani of Canada, was taken to a residential school where she was not allowed to speak her native language. "Assimilation taught us to become ashamed of who we are," she says. "Basically, it says God made a mistake when he created you."

Conference participants in native dress shared their culturally unique forms of worship. Some critics question such presentations, calling them syncretistic, blending Christianity with other forms of religion.

In North America, some conservative Indian Christians reject the use of drums and traditional dances in Christian worship. But Richard Twiss, a Lakota Sioux and event co-chair, says, "We're not trying to take evil things and make them good. We want to take things that God made and see them restored to their original purpose, which is the exaltation and glorification of Almighty God."

Steve Cheramie, pastor of the Mennonite-affiliated Native Christian Fellowship and chair of the Pointe Au Chien tribe of Louisiana, says, "Certain groups said, don't go to the gathering because they are going to have an Indian drum there, and the Indian drum has been used for evil in the past. [But] I know a piano that's been used for evil in the past."

Mark MacDonald, the Episcopal bishop of Alaska, believes that some people have a hard time seeing things from a perspective that differs from their own culture's. "Indians often put out a plate for a deceased relative at a funeral," he explains. "There's a story about a white guy who comes up and says with a laugh, 'When are your relatives going to get up and eat that food?' The Indian answers, 'About the same time your relatives get up and smell those flowers.'"

The gathering received endorsements from Fuller Theological Seminary, Wesleyan Native American Ministries, World Vision Canada, and Wycliffe Bible Translators. The American Bible Society printed a special edition New Testament with the event's logo and presented one to each registrant. The next gathering is scheduled for Sydney in January 2000.

By Ken Steinke in Rapid City.

INTERNET COMMENTARY

Christian Syndicate Launched

Seeking to place biblical perspectives onto the opinion pages of the America's secular newspapers, the Lansing, Michigan-based Amy Foundation is launching one of the first newspaper syndicates available on the Internet.

Dubbed "Real Answers," the columns will seek to provide spiritual insight on current issues and problems. "Our nation is in a deepening spiritual and moral crisis," says Foundation president Jim Russell. "The Amy Internet columns will provide clearly defined spiritual and moral direction."

Starting this month, two new columns are being provided weekly at the Amy Foundation Web site (www.amyfound.org). "These value principles have proven to be historically effective in restoring a character of faith, obedience, and love," Russell says.

The nonprofit Amy Foundation is known in evangelical circles for its Amy Writing Awards, which honor biblically based articles published in the secular print media (CT, June 21, 1993, p. 30). The syndicate so far has about 20 writers, including William Mattox, columnist and member of USA Today's board of contributors, and Indianapolis News editor Russell Pulliam. Columns will be available free to daily newspapers. □

ALTERNATIVE GIVING

Goats Make Holiday Gift Lists

In search of the perfect Christmas gift for the person who has everything, an increasing number of gift givers are buying water buffaloes instead of Beanie Babies.

Christian aid agencies such as Heifer Project International, World Concern, and World Vision are offering catalogs with unusual, tax-deductible Christmas gifts—such as goats, rabbits, medical care, and school tuition that help poor children and families in developing countries.

Gift prices range from $10 to $5,000. For each gift, such as a $25 goat, a card is sent describing how the donation purchased in the donor's honor will help a family.

Catalogs reflect a new fundraising strategy for nonprofits, which have long relied on heart-wrenching letters featuring photographs of emaciated children.

Heifer Project International (HPI), which has produced an alternative gift catalog for a decade, is printing more than 1 million this year. "It's probably our most important direct-mail piece," says Tom Peterson, HPI's director of communications. Peterson declined to say how much catalog income HPI receives, but indicated it provides a "significant chunk" of the $11.6 million individual-giving figure listed in the agency's most recent annual report.

The organizations are also posting their catalogs on the Web for on-line purchasing (www.heifer.org; www.worldconcern.org; www.worldvisiongifts.org).

For aid agencies that "sell" intangible needs such as the hunger and poverty of nameless faces living oceans away, alternative gifts personalize the need and allow agencies to meet their donor's need of finding meaningful Christmas gifts.

Agency leaders see the catalogs as much more than direct-mail appeals. World

Concern president

Paul Kennel

says alternative gifts help parents teach their children Christian values and return the focus of the season to one of giving, not just receiving.

Miyon Kautz, coordinator of World Vision's catalog, agrees: "I hope people will see the value of this, to give a gift that really does help someone, instead of giving a gift that sits in a closet."

By Christine J. Gard

In Brief

◆ The American Center for Law and Justice (ACLU) is suing New York City and seeking a preliminary injunction on the city's domestic partners law, which was implemented on September 5. "By creating a special class of persons for whom matrimonial benefits flow but from whom no responsibilities are required, the City of New York mocks the dignity and inviolability of marriage as the foundational institution of our society," ACLU said.

◆ The Conservative Congregational Christian Conference celebrated its fiftieth anniversary in Minneapolis in July. The conference, which has 40,000 members and 242 churches, was founded in 1948 by evangelicals who declined to participate in mergers creating the United Church of Christ.

◆ The Presbyterian Church in America (PCA) has surpassed the Christian Reformed Church (CRC) as the largest evangelical Reformed denomination with 283,381 members, compared to CRC's 279,029 members. PCA membership increased 22 percent over the past six years, primarily due to church planting. During the same period, CRC membership declined by 12 percent, due partly to conflicts over the ordination of women and issues such as theistic evolution.

◆ At the denomination's national convention in Springfield, Illinois, in August, General Baptists called for a boycott of the Disney Corporation, saying the company "is promoting the political agenda of homosexual activists."

A Journal of Salvation Army
Theology and Ministry

◆ The Salvation Army has launched a semi-annual scholarly publication, Word and Deed: Journal of Salvation Army Theology and Ministry. Jonathan Raymond and Roger Green are coeditors of the academic journal that will contain editorials, book reviews, and articles. It will be published in Alexandria, Virginia.

◆ Scott Rodin, 41, is the new president of Eastern Baptist Theological Seminary in Wynnewood, Pennsylvania. He replaces Mar-

fred Brauch, 58, who returned to teaching.

◆ Wesley R. Willis, 57, is the new president of Northwestern College in Saint Paul, Minnesota. He replaces Donald O. Ericksen, 65, the school's new chancellor.

◆ Sojourners magazine, in an organizational restructuring has named Roy Coffman as its publisher. Coffman was a senior vice president at Christianity Today, Inc., for 17 years and recently was board chairman of the Evangelical Christian Publishers Outreach. Joe Roos, long-time publisher of Sojourners, has taken a post with the Associated Church Press.

◆ Lonnie J. Allison, 46, in August became the new director of the Wheaton, Illinois-based Billy Graham Center and the center's institute of evangelism. Allison has been global director of evangelism and prayer for the Evangelical Covenant Church since 1989. He also served as secretary of the U.S.A. Lausanne Committee for World Evangelization. Allison replaces acting director Ken Gill, who will remain with the organization.

On the air: Showgirls fawn over shock jock Howard Stern during the first taping of the Saturday night program on CBS.

Howard Stern Takes TV to New Lows

The raunchy antics of radio "shock jock" Howard Stern have netted him both a fanatical national audience and more than $2 million in federal (FCC) fines. Now, after expanding into film, books, and cable TV, the self-proclaimed "King of All Media" has tackled broadcast TV.

The Howard Stern Radio Show, the host's new CBS venture, airs late (but perhaps not late enough) on Saturdays, and features televised versions of Stern's typically obnoxious radio studio gimmicks—many of which make Jerry Springer look almost civilized.

Produced by Eyemark, a CBS-owned syndication company, the show debuted August 29, two days before the launch of family-friendly PAX TV network (CT, Oct. 5, 1998, p. 15).

Early episodes earned TV's MA rating with a lengthy flatulence contest, a lap-dancing stripper (nudity was digitally obscured), a misanthropic "contest" featuring less-than-picture-perfect women competing for free plastic surgery, Stern groping the breasts of a woman who had a sex-change operation, and a takeoff on TV's Dating Game featuring two mentally disabled people.

Critics howled, calling the episodes "a low point in television history" (New York Post) and "the dregs of the dregs" (Washington Post). The first week, viewers tuned in by the millions, giving the show a respectable 5.9 rating. In succeeding weeks, however, ratings sank, and increasing numbers of viewers watched Saturday Night Live reruns on NBC instead.

Donald Wildmon's American Family Association, long a critic of Stern's radio and cable shows, has tried to persuade stations to drop the show. But it has been personal disgust—not outside pressure—that has inspired some station managers to do so. A station in Lubbock, Texas, dropped it, as did KTVK in Phoenix, whose manager, Larry Landaker, called it "cruel," saying, "At some point you have to ask yourself, Does this have any value at all?"

Stern continues his daily radio program and his five nights a week cable show on E! Entertainment Television.

By Steve Rabey.

Bill Would Limit Lethal Drugs

A new bill before Congress could prohibit the use of federally controlled drugs for physician-assisted suicide. But critics say the measure would restrict legitimate use of painkillers for terminally ill patients.

The Lethal Drug Abuse Prevention Act of 1998, introduced by Sen. Don Nickles (R-Okla.) and Rep. Henry Hyde (R-Ill.), declares physicians' use of prescription drugs under the Controlled Substances Act for the purpose of assisting suicide is "not a legitimate medical purpose." It also reaffirms the use of drugs for chronic pain relief.

The bill is a response to Attorney General Janet Reno's ruling in June that physician-assisted suicide falls under state jurisdiction. Her comments support Oregon voters' decision last November to legalize assisted suicide (CT, Dec. 8, 1997, p. 64).

Opponents of the measure claim doses of medicine high enough to control pain could also unintentionally cause death, making doctors reluctant to treat pain for fear of losing their federal registration, says Joseph Bailes, president-elect of the American Society of Clinical Oncology. Critics say the bill could increase requests for assisted suicide from patients with unrelieved pain.

"It's the opposite of the truth," says William Petty, a practicing oncologist in Portland, Oregon. "It not only will help prevent abuse; it will help pain control." Once he stops their pain, Petty says, his patients do not want to die: "A request for assisted suicide is really a cry for help for some other problem." Petty, a member of the Christian Medical and Dental Society, sued the state of Oregon to try to halt implementation of the Death with Dignity Act.

William Toffler, a family physician in Portland and national director of Physicians for Compassionate Care, says doctors should be concerned about managed care, not regulatory scrutiny. He is not as concerned about prescribing pain medication as he is about securing the medication from a managed-care system that claims a drug is too expensive. Oregon's managed-care system will fund patients' suicide, Toffler says, but will not pay for some medications to make their pain more manageable.

"What [assisted suicide] is really telling a person is, I don't care if you live or die," Petty says. "That's not the role of a physician." The bill is bottled up in congressional committees and will likely be bumped to the next congressional session.

By Christine J. Gardner.

YES ON 51

Suicidal measure: A publicity brochure targeting last year's Oregon assisted-suicide law.

Lyons Retains Post Despite Fraud Charges, Adultery

Henry J. Lyons, beleaguered president of the National Baptist Convention USA, was forgiven by his board during a September annual session in which he confessed he had an "inappropriate" relationship with a female employee.

But the unanimous decision by 195 board members to forgive Lyons did not put an end to his problems. He faces trial in Florida state and federal courts on charges he used his position to steal millions of dollars from big corporations. A decline in donations has brought about a financial crisis within the denomination, which claims 8 million members. Critics contend the convention has inflated statistics and really has fewer than 1 million members.

In his annual address, Lyons, 56, said he has made "serious miscalculations in judgment" in his personal and professional lives. "From the bottom of my soul, I am truly sorry. I want you to forgive me. I ask for your mercy," he said. The convention proved merciful. After forgiving Lyons, it passed a resolution forgiving President Clinton for his affair with former White House intern Monica Lewinsky. "We stand firmly behind our President," Lyons said. "We'd like to see the majority Republican Congress get off his back. We'd like to see Mr. Starr get off his back."

BEGINNING OF TROUBLES: Lyons's troubles began in July 1997 when his wife of 26 years, Deborah, set a fire that damaged a $700,000 waterfront house in Tierra Verde, Florida, near Saint Petersburg. Lyons owns the home with Bernice V. Edwards, a former convention public-relations director once convicted of embezzling $60,000 from a school for at-risk students. Deborah Lyons told police she started the fire in a fit of anger after learning Lyons and Edwards own the house together. She later pleaded guilty to arson and was placed on five years' probation. The fire prompted a series of news reports about Lyons's personal and financial dealings (CT, Sept. 1, 1997, p. 94). Records showed he and Edwards also own a $22,500 time-share condominium in Lake Tahoe, Nevada, and had been negotiating to buy a $925,000 mansion in Charlotte, North Carolina. Lyons and Edwards also bought a $36,200 diamond ring from a Saint Petersburg jewelry store.

The ring was purchased with a check written on the Baptist Builder Fund, an account not mentioned in the convention's financial audit. By the time Lyons went to the convention's 1997 annual meeting in Denver, he was under investigation by Florida and U.S. government officials. But he survived as president even after dissident members of the convention seized the floor and tried to force him out (CT, Oct. 27, 1997, p. 102). In February, Florida officials charged him with racketeering and grand theft, saying he stole millions of dollars from an insurance company, a funeral company, and numerous other entities that did business with the convention. Edwards was charged as his accomplice. Five months later, federal prosecutors charged Lyons with 54 counts of wire fraud, bank fraud, mail fraud, tax evasion, extortion, money laundering, and conspiracy. Also charged were Edwards and convention meeting planner Brenda Harris. All pleaded innocent and are free pending trial.

Still in charge: Henry Lyons (left) addresses the National Baptist Convention after the board of directors gave support to his presidency.

RELATIONSHIP QUESTIONED: Questions about Lyons's relationship with Harris were first raised last year. According to news reports, Harris's Nashville neighbors said the two introduced themselves at a 1997 social gathering. Brenda and Henry Harris, an engaged couple who happened to share the last name. Both later denied they were romantically involved. But at last month's convention board meeting in Kansas City, Missouri, they acknowledged the reports were true. Both said they were sorry. Harris also apologized to Deborah Lyons, who was present for the meeting. "Dr. Henry Lyons is an innocent man and will continue to be innocent until he is proven guilty," said E. V. Harris, a board member and consistent supporter of Lyons. "Afro-Baptists are a peculiar people. We aren't just sellers of the gospel; we're users."

Not everyone has been so forgiving.

"At this point, if Dr. Lyons had any love left for himself and the National Baptist Convention, he would step down," Charles Kenyatta, a New York City pastor, said. "To drag millions of people through all this mud is a shame. In the 118 years of our existence, we've never had a president this dumb."

COMING CHALLENGES

Lyons, elected to a five-year term as president in 1995, will face at least five challengers when he runs for reelection next September. (He announced his candidacy in Kansas City.) The candidates are emphasizing honesty, integrity, and financial accountability—all of which, they say, have been missing under Lyons.

In the aftermath of the scandal, donations are down sharply, leaving the denomination little choice but to cut back on its missionary work and gifts to historically black colleges. Lyons announced the convention was behind $300,000 on its mortgage on the Baptist World Center in Nashville, with another $664,000 payment due soon. Still, many members responded generously when Hill asked them to donate to Lyons' legal defense. In one remarkable 20-minute stretch, supporters collected more than $40,000, much of it coming in checks of $500 or more. Lyons said he was humbled by the expressions of support. "I have not given all of the sterling, without-flaw leadership that I came to this office to give," he said.

By Mike Wilson in Saint Petersburg

EAST GATES INTERNATIONAL

憑信超越難成的事

BIBLES for China

"For only $4.00 you can place a Bible into the hands of a Chinese House Church Christian.

These Bibles are full Bibles — both Old and New Testaments. They are hard bound and printed LEGALLY in China.

Because these Bibles are printed and distributed legally, there is not the associated risk to the Chinese believers as with smuggled Bibles."

Billy & Ruth Graham

Billy Graham
Billy Graham

Rev. Ned Graham teaching in a House Church in Mainland China.

A House Church family in Jiangxi Province with a new East Gates Bible.

East Gates Bibles being shipped to House Churches.

For more information contact

EAST GATES
INTERNATIONAL

P. O. Box 2010, Sumner, Washington 98390

1-800-959-3464
www.egmi.org

Ned Graham, President

"Since 1992, East Gates has legally placed over 1.5 million Bibles in every province of China — bringing new hope and life to hundreds of thousands."

Spurning Lady Luck

Churches reject funds tainted by gambling.

Though churches in Canada differ dramatically on many theological, social, and political fronts, one battleground is bringing together Left, Right, and center. Across the spectrum, churches are alarmed by the social costs of legal gambling and the growing dependence of government on its cut of gambling revenues. They have been fighting back, and in a few cases, church leaders have turned down their share of gambling receipts.

Late last year, the Toronto-based Evangelical Fellowship of Canada (EFC) released "Gambling: A Bad Bet," calling the habit "an insidious form of evil which takes advantage of the poor and disadvantaged and undermines a healthy and just society." More recently, the United Church of Canada, the country's largest and most liberal Protestant denomination, called for a federal inquiry into the social, economic, and legal impact of gambling.

In Canada, churches can benefit financially from gambling receipts. Provincial governments collect a portion of the winnings from all casinos and video lottery terminals (VLT). Then, part of those funds are distributed to charitable organizations, which apply for grants.

Yet several denominations have publicly refused to accept funds from gambling. The bishop of a Roman Catholic diocese in northern Canada went so far as to ban bingo in his jurisdiction when he realized some people were spending grocery money on gambling. Vancouver's Anglican mayor has staunchly refused to allow casino expansion in the west coast city.

Antigambling efforts are getting results. In other issues, says political scientist Geoffrey Hale of London, Ontario, Christians often feel that dealing with politicians is futile. "It's like Sisyphus rolling the rock up the hill over and over again. A lot of Christians are feeling the boulder is getting heavier and people aren't listening." But with gambling, says Hale, who participated in a successful anticasinio lobby in his city, "There's a feeling that other people are listening." Indeed, community lobbies, many of them led by Christians, have managed to keep casinos away from 39 out of 44 Ontario communities holding referenda.

The main target of church and community groups is the VLTs, the biggest revenue producer in the industry. In one province alone, oil-rich Alberta, government revenues from VLTs are expected to exceed half a billion dollars this year—up tenfold from five years ago.

Terminal disease? Gambler George Dumas presses his luck with a Rocky Mountain House video lottery terminal before the vote.

PROTESTS ACCELERATE: The Alberta government has been forced to respond to the petitions of communities upset with the unasked-for presence of VLTs. The protest started in the small town of Rocky Mountain House, where pastors, weary of witnessing the destruction gambling causes in families, asked the town council to remove the machines. The council refused, but determined pastors gathered enough names to force a plebiscite on the issue. A record turnout led to the removal of the VLTs from the town in April 1997.

That victory gave other Alberta communities fortitude to fight, according to Christian Reformed pastor Phil Stel, who led the movement in Rocky Mountain House. "It's certainly gone far beyond any of our expectations."

Similar successes came in the province's two largest cities, Calgary and the capital of Edmonton. "We collected more names on our petition than people who voted in the last civic election," says Calgary Baptist pastor Jim Wallace.

On October 19, when cities throughout the province hold elections, 70 per cent of voters will be eligible to decide plebiscites whether to keep or remove VLTs from their communities.

COALITION BUILDING: Those involved in the fight are quick to point out that although churches play a key role, they are not working alone. In Alberta, church leaders have formed an alliance with big business. That alliance works, says Wallace, because many citizens "have become concerned about the continuing erosion of social restrictions."

Church leaders are careful not to use spiritual beliefs as an overriding factor in their antigambling arguments. "We didn't present it as a moral issue," Stel says. "We presented it as a community issue."

Hale says, "In this case, the economic arguments, social arguments, and moral arguments all converge to bring together a fairly broad cross section of people."

THEOLOGICAL ARGUMENTS:

The EFC says there are theological reasons to avoid gambling, and Christians "have often failed to discern the spiritual dynamic behind gambling." In "Gambling: A Bad Bet," the EFC's Social Action Commission outlines several reasons why gambling is wrong: it appeals to greed; it contravenes the Christian duty to care for neighbors; instead of taking from neighbors; it encourages the reckless investment of God-given resources; it undermines a healthy philosophy of work, industry, and saving; and it can become habit-forming and addictive.

When governments sponsor gambling, even if the revenues are used to help finance hospitals, education, and charities, they give "an implicit endorsement of greed, materialism, and the denigration of the value of productive work," according to the EFC. The commission urges governments to withdraw from all forms of direct involvement in gambling, regulate and restrict gambling as much as possible, and heavily tax gambling businesses and winnings.

The tussle over government-sponsored gambling has forced the church to do some soul-searching. Several churches and denominations have reversed policies accepting money from gambling. One Ukrainian Catholic church sent back a $80,000 check it had received from the government to help build a cultural center.

By Debra Fieguth in Winnipeg

Opportunities Like This Only Come By Every 2,000 Years Or So.

It's an unprecedented, historic movement of God. More than 60 denominations, 150 ministries. And tens of thousands of Christians like you. All pulling together under the umbrella of Mission America, with the vision of Celebrate Jesus 2000—to pray for and share Christ with every man, woman and young person in America by the end of the year 2000. Will you help? Will you be a part of the greatest revival and spiritual awakening this nation has ever seen? Call for your free brochure, or ask how you can order the Celebration Kit (with video, workbook, resource catalog, timeline, and promotional materials for you, your church and community). And be a part of the greatest celebration in history.

MISSION AMERICA
9400 55th Street
Minneapolis, MN 55420
www.missionamerica.com missionamerica@compuserve.com

FOR FREE INFORMATION, CALL

1-800-995-8573

NORTH KOREA

Famine Toll Exceeds 1 Million

More than a million people have died in North Korea during three years of floods and drought, according to a U.S. congressional delegation that visited the country in August, but international aid is beginning to save lives.

The group reports between 300,000 and 800,000 of North Korea's 23 million people have died each year since 1995, claiming more than twice as many lives as the Ethiopian famine of the mid-1980s.

"They're going through an acute food shortage right now," says Mark Kirk, one of four congressional aides who visited the Communist nation. The group witnessed severe malnutrition and the use of "alternative" foods such as grass, roots, and bark, but reported that government and military leaders appeared well fed.

The situation for young children has greatly improved. "The international food assistance to date has saved an enormous number of lives," Kirk says. But the famine, due in part to natural disasters, deforestation, and poor agricultural practices, will have a lasting impact on the nation's health. Al York, World Concern's director of international programs, says, "The stunting I see in children is devastating. It's affecting a whole generation."

Christian organizations have contributed a significant amount of assistance despite lingering concerns over diversion of aid. World Vision has sent nearly $7.5 million in food, medicines, and clothing since 1995. The aid agency joins Amigos Internacionales, CARE, Catholic Relief Services, and Mercy Corps International to form the Private Voluntary Or-

Famine victim: A malnourished baby lies in a North Korea hospital bed.

REUTERS

In Brief

◆ On November 13, the Far East Broadcasting Company will launch the first full-time Christian radio station in the Muslim nation of Indonesia. The station will be programmed locally in Jakarta, reaching more than 8.6 million people with 12 hours daily of Christian music, news, and local programs.

◆ Gospel to the Unreached Millions founder K. A. Paul, with support from 1,000 Kenyan churches, held three nights of evangelistic meetings at Nairobi's Uhuru Park, August 28-30. Paul, born in India, led the final night's crowd of 500,000 on a prayer march to the site of the U.S. Embassy bombing. An estimated 400,000 individuals, out of the 800,000 total attendance, made Christian commitments.

◆ Nineteen of 41 nations in Europe are violating the religious rights of minority groups, according to the International Helsinki Federation for Human Rights (www.ihf-hr.org). Violations may involve granting special protections to majority or traditional religions, particularly in countries where most of the populace is Orthodox or Muslim. Also, some countries create stiff registration requirements to limit religious practice.

CT

ganization (PVO) consortium which has distributed 75,000 metric tons of grain.

The monitoring of aid distributions has improved, Kirk says. World Concern, which has distributed $3 million in aid, receives better monitoring by treating hunger as a health issue and distributing food kits through the medical system, York says.

Despite recent flooding, the fall harvest should feed the country through April, but Kirk says economic reforms are needed for longer-term sustainability.

By Christine J. Gardner

NEWS MEDIA

Christian Journalists Form Society

Traveling the globe as chief diplomatic correspondent for Time magazine tested David Aikman's faith. "I wanted to have Christian fellowship, but I didn't want to have it with people who didn't like journalists," he says.

Christian journalists sometimes feel out of place in church, where distrust of the news media is commonplace.

"The idea formed in my mind a long time ago to form a fellowship of Christian journalists," Aikman recently told a gathering of 70 journalists in London, where he announced details of his organization. Gegrapha, Greek for "I have written" (John 19:22), is the name he chose to represent the global fellowship of journalists.

By linking through e-mail, Christian journalists will be able to support one another in prayer and find a sympathetic ear for job-related challenges that fellow believers and fellow journalists both might not understand.

Aikman's plans for Gegrapha include publishing a book of testimonies from Christian journalists, which will make a strong case for the significance of Christian involvement in the profession.

Churches Seek Debt Cancellation

A worldwide coalition of religious leaders is joining a campaign for the cancellation of the international debts of developing nations.

"Debt reduction can bring good to the populations of rich as well as poor countries," says Bill Peters, vice president of Jubilee 2000, which is calling on the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, and other international creditors to set aside the foreign debt of developing countries.

The problem is especially acute in Africa, where about $220 billion to foreign creditors. In Zambia, for example, the government owes $7.1 billion and spends more on debt service than on education and health services for its people, 70 percent of whom live in poverty.

Zambian Christians recently issued a joint statement calling for debt cancellation, saying the country's total debt is unpayable and hurts mostly the poor. Jubilee 2000 openly connects its goal of debt remission with scriptural mandates for the celebration of jubilee as a universal time to clear unpayable debts.

Under the Jubilee 2000

plan, debts would be forgiven on a sliding scale with 100 percent remission for countries with the poorest economies.

Lutheran, Methodist, Anglican, and Roman Catholic organizations have been signing on to lobby internationally for the effort.

"Jubilee symbolizes a fresh start for the poor and re-establishes justice and equity in the world," says Joan Harper, chair of the Office of Justice and Peace of the Catholic Archdiocese of Los Angeles. Jubilee 2000 reasons that the dozens of international financial institutions that originally loaned the money should now forgive the debts because: the rescheduling of loan payments has failed; debtor countries have learned hard lessons from the debt crisis; and life-saving services for the poor could be restored if debt service was curtailed.

Peters, a retired British diplomat, says, "The concept of jubilee is firmly rooted in Judeo-Christian thought. [It is] a time not only for leveling inequalities, but also for rejoicing and celebrating the start of a new phase with past obstacles to community swept away." [CT]

CHINA

House Church Leaders Call for Freedom

A group of Christian house church leaders, who function without government registration, has issued a public appeal to China's leaders, calling for the release of imprisoned Christians.

The handwritten appeal was released to two journalists in Zhengzhou, a city in China's central Henan Province. According to Religion News Service, the document calls for the unconditional release of house church Christians in labor camps, for dialogue between government and church leaders in hopes of recognition for house churches, and for a clear-cut definition of religious cults.

"We have been persecuted so long, we just have to fight the last fight," says Zhang Rongliang, a Christian farmer who is spokesperson for the

MISSIONS

Literacy tool: A Russian boy learns about Jesus in public school.

JESUS FILM PROJECT

CoMission Expands to Africa and Asia

After six years of teaching Christian ethics and morality to public-school educators in the former Soviet Union, CoMission is going global with new programs in Africa and East Asia.

Under the new name of CoMission International, the coalition of eight missions agencies is launching literacy training and English as a second language classes at the invitation of local missionaries. "Literacy is a tool to get people reading the Bible," says Rex Johnson, a professor at Talbot School of Theology and a leader of CoMission International's work in Africa. Mozambique, one of the new ministry areas, has a 75 percent illiteracy rate.

Evangelism and discipleship continue to be goals of the partnership, says Alan Nagel, director of global resources for Campus Crusade for Christ and chair of CoMission International's leadership council. Language and literacy classes help build relationships and provide opportunities for Christian witness. "If that's the open door, great—we'll take it," he says.

The coalition has relied on a volunteer corps of lay leaders, many of them second-career adults, to commit to one-year terms of service. Since its inception in 1992, CoMission has deployed more than 5,000 lay missionaries.

CoMission was founded as a five-year partnership between 85 Protestant organizations to teach Christian ethics in public schools in Russia and neighboring countries. During that time, CoMission held 136 weeklong convocations where trained lay leaders presented the Jesus film and an ethics curriculum to more than 44,000 educators in 116 cities. [CT] group. "We have been silent too long."

Shen Cheng-en, associate general secretary of the China Christian Council, says repression of Christians is mostly a local, not a national problem. "I don't think persecution is everywhere. The policy of the central government is to ensure religious freedom."

Nelson Graham, head of East Gates Ministries, which assists in Bible publishing within China, says, "This declaration reveals a great level of political naïveté."

Meanwhile, Compass Direct News Service reports that in July an unnamed senior staff member at one of China's leading seminaries openly vented his criticisms of the Three Self Patriotic Movement (TSPM), the official Protestant ruling church body.

The senior staff member said China's leaders have rehabilitated the TSPM without openly noting how its leaders were actively involved during the 1950s and 1960s in persecuting Christians on a "massive scale." [CT]

White House Scandal Sparks Church Dialogue

President Clinton's admission of moral failure has spurred a national conversation on sin, forgiveness, and repentance and engaged many American pulpits and Sunday-school classes that normally steer clear of politics.

"This has hit a raw nerve deep in the soul of millions of people," says Walt Kallestad, senior pastor of Community of Joy Lutheran Church in Glendale, Arizona.

Kallestad's 4,000 plus-member Evangelical Lutheran Church in America congregation devoted all of its services to the subject on the weekend following Clinton's August 17 confession of an "inappropriate relationship" with former White House intern Monica Lewinsky. Pastors fielded questions from the congregation after the reading of a "letter to Bill Clinton from Jesus."

Parents streamed to an open microphone, asking questions such as: How do I talk to my children about oral sex? and How do I build trust again in leaders?

"We said: If you have personal questions, you can e-mail, you can fax, you can write, you can call," Kallestad says.

"We wanted to make ourselves available, because it has had an impact on people of all ages."

In Tacoma, Washington, Bill Wolfson, pastor of Bethel Church, an independent are extremely distressed. "They come to me asking, 'How can I raise my children with a President like this?'"

The inevitable discussion of appropriate consequences for the President's behavior has perplexed some Christians. Says Kent McCulloch, rector of Saint Mary's Episcopal Church in Lakewood, Washington, "They don't quite know how to be citizens and also Christians and whether to forgive or not forgive and what all that means," he says.

PARTISAN THEOLOGY?

Some liberal church leaders have urged the President to resign, including heads of the Assemblies of God, Church of the Nazarenes, African Methodist Episcopal Church, Reformed Church in America, and President Clinton's own Southern Baptist Convention.

One of the country's most politically savvy pastors, Jerry Dobson, thinks those resignation statements are inappropriate. At Dobson's Calvary Church in Grand Rapids, Michigan, mention of the White House crisis from the pulpit has been limited to pastoral prayer. "We were not called of God to interpret the Constitution," says Dobson, who serves as Jerry Falwell's close associate in the development of the Moral Majority in the 1980s (CT, Aug. 11, 1997, p. 26). "We were called upon by God to preach Scripture."

Dobson believes that many pastors have be-

Gathering storm: Protesters gather outside the Billmore Hotel in Miami, where Clinton spoke at a September 9 Democratic fundraiser.

charismatic congregation, drew lessons from the White House crisis in a three-part sermon series presented to his multi-ethnic congregation. "I got a lot more questions about Clinton than I ever got during the [Jimmy] Swaggart debacle and during the moral failure of [Jim] Bakker," Wolfson says.

Wolfson says some parents in his church

Pastoral Trio to Hold Clinton 'Accountable'

President Clinton last month asked three pastors to meet weekly with him in the wake of his admission of a sexual relationship with former White House intern Monica Lewinsky.

The three are Tony Campolo of Eastern College in Saint Davids, Pennsylvania; Gordon MacDonald of Grace Chapel in Lexington, Massachusetts; and Philip Wogaman of Foundry United Methodist Church in Washington, D.C.

On September 13, MacDonald, author of Rebuilding Your Broken World, told his congregation, "I am in a position to talk the language of repentance and what it takes to find a deeper and more purposeful walk with God in the midst of personal tragedy." In 1987 MacDonald resigned as president of InterVarsity Christian Fellowship after acknowledging that he had had an adulterous relationship with a friend while pastor of Grace Chapel (CT, July 10, 1987, p. 38). He eventually returned to Grace in 1993.

Campolo and Wogaman have at times been spiritual confidants to Clinton. Although Clinton is a Southern Baptist, he often attends Foundry, near the White House. Campolo says the purpose of the meetings is to counsel the President and "to hold him accountable for his behavior." Campolo says, "We want to provide all the help that we can to spiritually strengthen him against yielding to the temptations that have conquered him in the past."

Clinton's admission of a sexual relationship with Lewinsky has triggered extensive commentary from American religious leaders. Top Southern Baptists have called for Clinton's resignation. Some have demanded that Clinton's home church, Immanuel Baptist in Little Rock, Arkansas, "discipline" the President, but it has no plans to do so. Bill Bright of Campus Crusade for Christ called on Clinton to "truly repent and seek God's face." Jim Wallis of Sojourn magazine and Call to Renewal says, "The real issue here is moral accountability. How could his genuine repentance—and ours—be used to teach our nation something about real spiritual values?"

Campolo, to MacDonald

Illinois City Bars Worship at Vineyard-owned Facility

Vineyard Christian Fellowship of Evanston, Illinois, has filed suit against the city of 75,000 people for what it calls punitive use of zoning laws to restrict religious freedom.

At issue is a long-vacant 36,000-square-foot office building bought by Vineyard in May 1997 for $1.1 million. The purchase ended a 10-year search for a permanent home for the 22-year-old church, one of Evanston's largest and most ethnically diverse congregations. The church asked the city for a zoning variance, which would allow the congregation to use the commercial office building not only for offices, counseling, and community outreach activities, but also for Sunday worship services.

Despite support for the request by the Evanston Zoning Board and Evanston Plan Commission, the City Council denied the variance. Vineyard executive pastor William Hanawalt says the request fell prey to "the politics of taxes." Increasingly, churches around the country are facing opposition to construction or expansion plans because many city officials wish to maximize property tax revenues (CT, April 28, 1997, p. 72).

Evanston is home to five colleges, universities, and seminaries and more than 70 houses of worship, all of which have tax-exempt status. The city has the highest property-tax rate in the state.

Those on the council who opposed the variance say the city has accommodated within its boundaries more than its fair share of nonprofit groups. The church argues that it is an unequal application of zoning laws to allow its space to be used for concerts, theatrical performances, and other "cultural uses," but not to be used by the same number of people for religious gatherings. Such zoning restricts religious speech and religious assembly, guaranteed by the Constitution, the suit says.

LOCAL SOLIDARITY: Earlier this year, the Illinois Department of Revenue made the lost tax revenues a moot point when it granted Vineyard's request for a property-tax exemption on the office building. But the church must still rent Evanston Township High School's auditorium—for $100,000 a year—for its Sunday services. The city is asking for a state hearing to appeal the church's exemption.

Empty sanctuary: So far, Hanawalt can only kneel by himself in the church facilities.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE/MILBERT ORLANDO BROWN

A surprising amalgam of Evanston nonprofit organizations has come together in support of the Vineyard. In July, 1,200 people demonstrated solidarity with Vineyard at a gathering sponsored by a citizen's coalition of Evanston churches, unions, and community groups.

At the August 24 city council meeting, Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish leaders presented 600 signed postcards to council members, protesting the city's use of taxpayer dollars to fight a church.

Hanawalt sent a letter to every council member saying, "If you'll just let us worship in our building, we'll drop our claim for damages." The Vineyard's suit asks for $500,000 in compensatory damages to help recoup the protracted legal fees. Hanawalt says, "We would rather spend the Lord's money on ministries to the poor and to our community's youth. But we will not back down in the face of the city's opposition to our right to worship in our own building."

Alderman Art Newman accuses the church of using "strong-arm tactics" to win the zoning fight. Evanston Mayor Lorraine Morton is reticent to speak until the litigation has been resolved. "Let's just say that it is the responsibility of the city council to act in the best interest of all the citizens of Evanston," Morton says. "Clearly, we feel the decision we made met that criteria [sic]."

Christian zoning attorney John W. Mauck of Chicago says the use of zoning laws to restrict churches is a growing national trend. "There are many reasons cities oppose churches, and a lot of them are unspoken because they would be politically incorrect," Mauck says. Municipalities often view churches as only slightly more desirable than landfills.

By Verla Gillmor in Evanston.

come embroiled in "partisan theology," which detracts from their primary purpose. "If you are a supporter of the President and his politics, you're most likely to speak of forgiveness, healing, and let's move on," Dobson says. "And if you're not a supporter of the President and his politics, you're most likely to call for his resignation. I believe that pastors are called upon to be nonpartisan."

Humility and prayer are prevailing in many churches, regardless of whether pastors mention the President's future job status. Rick Ragle, pastor at Hilo (Hawaii) Church of the Nazarene, has not cited the President's situation from the pulpit, but the subject has arisen in small groups and Sunday-school classes, leading to times of prayer.

"That's what we're doing, no matter what our own individual political biases are—our response to leadership needs to be prayer," he says.

DIFFICULT WORK AHEAD: Saint Mary's McCulloch says the President's predicament raises "transcendent issues" that cannot be ignored. He believes Clinton is emblematic of a larger cultural problem that began with the sexual revolution of the 1960s.

In an August 30 sermon that received a prolonged standing ovation, McCulloch said, "For so long ignored, finally the subject of our nation's sexual immorality is unavoidable."

McCulloch told CT, "I think my church felt gratified that morality is being pronounced from the pulpit as important and significant, and they weren't hearing it from anywhere else."

But McCulloch points to a sharp division in his congregation between the views of younger and older generations. "Regardless of whether they're conscientious Christians, for the generation under 35 this is a nonissue—they don't believe there's any connection between [Clinton's] private behavior and his public policy," he says. "Whereas the older have a much more holistic view of character."

Kallestad thinks the church needs to seize the moment by addressing America's moral decline. "There is a fundamental root cause, and to get at that is hard work," he says. "You can't just wave a magic wand to rebuild trust, relationships, and integrity and to restore honor and recover biblical values. A lot of people want to give up and not do the hard work, but that is part of the healing process of our nation."

By Art Moore.

Turning Back the Clock

Non-Orthodox Christians have less religious freedom than a year ago.

One year after Russia enacted a controversial law restricting religious freedom, Protestants and Roman Catholics say the measure has had a chilling effect on religious activity nationwide.

Russia's controversial law on religion, signed a year ago by President Boris Yeltsin (CT, Nov. 17, 1997, p. 66), has produced what attorney Vladimir Ryakhovsky, president of the Christian Legal Center, calls "an atmosphere of intolerance."

The law has initiated a season of religious harassment and discrimination, while official favors are visited on Russia's dominant Orthodox church and other "traditional" religions.

Although abuse most often has occurred in rural areas and Russia's remote East, religious minorities in Moscow have not been spared. Baptist, Pentecostal, Lutheran, Presbyterian, and Catholic believers—both Russian nationals and foreign missionaries—have experienced problems. There have been evictions and restrictions on teaching, publishing, and distributing literature. Church registrations have been revoked. Taxation has been excessive, and attempts to close down churches or other ministries through the courts have been implemented.

Discrimination has come mainly at the hands of local government officials, federal agents, Orthodox priests and parishioners, local police, Cossacks, Communists, nationalists, and fascists. Religious-rights attorneys in Moscow appealed to the Constitutional Court in July, citing four cases of violations.

Language in the new religion law is considered to be unconstitutional in at least 16 instances. Additionally, the law violates international human-rights standards and agreements signed by the Russian Federation.

VISA LIMITS: In June, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs implemented instructions limiting visas for foreign missionaries to a three-month maximum. The action, which had an impact only on religious workers, violated both international agreements and Russian law. Foreign religious workers and their families had to make costly trips outside the country to renew visas to comply with the new rule, which also exacted a high cost in morale and in work disruptions.

In August, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs reversed the rule and allowed missionaries again to receive one-year multiple-entry visas. The change came only after attorneys from the Institute of Religion and Law and the Christian Legal Center intervened.

Endangered activity: Further restrictions could limit such ministries as street evangelism in Saint Petersburg and the rest of Russia.

LEGAL WRANGLING: A case against Pentecostal Word of Life Church in Magadan, in the far eastern part of Russia, illustrates the religious bias problems. For now, it appears that church has triumphed in court.

The district prosecutor tried to take registration and legal rights away from the church, a member of the centralized Russian Associated Evangelical Union of Christians of Evangelical Faith (Pentecostal), first legally registered in 1970, re-registered in 1989, and again in 1990 under Russia's previous religion law.

The prosecutor accused the pastor of using hypnosis to influence people who attended the church, saying the faith was "nontraditional" and only a Russian under hypnotic influence would attend a church that is not Orthodox or Muslim. Tithing was also viewed as a problem. The prosecutor concluded a "normal" person would not sacrifice 10 percent of his income to support a church.

The 400-member church was accused of destroying families and the mental health of its members. Only one case was presented as evidence in which a nonbelieving husband protested that his converted wife wanted to raise their children according to biblical principles.

In an attempt to prove that attendance at the church destroyed psychological health, the prosecutor singled out one woman in the congregation receiving treatment at a psychiatric hospital. But witnesses testified that she had a history of psychiatric treatment.

Ryakhovsky, the attorney representing the church, refuted the charges, and the prosecutor claimed he "hadn't been prepared enough" and indefinitely postponed the trial. Ryakhovsky remains confident the case will not resurface.

"We're proving that we can defend religious freedom through the courts," says Anatoly Pchelintsev, director of the Institute of Religion and Law (IRL).

REOCCURRING THREAT

Another situation in Vanino, also in the far east, in Khabarovsk faces an uncertain outcome. American Independent Baptist missionary pastor Arthur Bristol lives under almost daily threat of imprisonment or deportation.

Bristol has tried since July to pastor a small, autonomous church. Officials initially refused to register him and ordered him to leave the country, even though he possessed all required legal paperwork. Bristol came to the United States, obtained another visa, and returned to Vanino in August. Since arriving, Bristol says he has been harassed daily by local officials, who make threats, monitor phone calls, tamper with his e-mail, and force him to undergo prolonged interrogations.

Russian Christian leaders in his church are being threatened by Russian agencies who have advised them to stop attending.

Vladimir Nikulnikov, director of Khabarovsk's ministry of culture and religion since the Soviet era, admits that he would like to rid the region of foreign missionaries. He equates missionaries with foreign spies trying to brainwash children with a goal of overthrowing the country.

By Beverly Nickles in Moscow

The next great leap for developing church leaders is really a

step back.

Back to the way Jesus himself
equipped and trained the 12.

Smelly fishing boats. Dusty streets. Windblown hillsides. Not much of a campus! But the student body of 12 sure learned the secrets of effective ministry. At Denver Seminary, we're following the example of the Master Professor with an emphasis on hands-on learning directed by experienced mentors. Learn more about the seminary education with an innovative approach to knowing, being and doing. We borrowed it from the best!

Take the leap.

DENVER SEMINARY

1-800-922-3040 Ext. 278
P.O. Box 10,000

e-mail: admit@densem.edu www.gospelcom.net/densem/
Denver, CO 80250

Fighting for Fairness

Does religion in schools favor Catholics?

Protestants in Nicaragua will persist in their efforts to keep Catholic doctrine out of the public schools, even though the country's president has replaced the controversial, devoutly Catholic head of public schools with a bureaucrat some Christians perceive as more moderate.

Throughout Humberto Belli's eight-year tenure as education minister, many Protestant leaders opposed his program to promote Christian values, viewing it as an unconstitutional attempt to force Catholic teaching in public schools (CT, April 28, 1997, p. 78).

Protestant concerns focus on "Education in the Faith," an elective after-hours program that Belli established to teach children basic Christianity. "Parents have the right to have their children receive the religious instruction of their liking . . . as an extracurricular activity," Belli says. Under the program, parents select and pay for a teacher, curriculum, and textbooks. The ministry, in turn, permits free use of classrooms.

Yet some fear the classes are a step toward returning to the days of mandatory public-school catechism classes, when non-Catholics were legally denied access to public education and health care.

REMOVAL WELCOMED: "Schools shouldn't be teaching religion," says Guillermo Osorno, Christian Way party president and a member of Nicaragua's legislative assembly. He believes faith should be taught in homes and churches. The Assembly of God pastor-turned-politician (CT, March 3, 1997, p. 60) applauds Belli's removal as minister of education. "[The classes] are a violation of the constitution and a violation of human rights," Osorno says.

Osorno refers to the constitution's Article 124, which establishes Nicaragua as a secular state with no official religion. Gustavo Parajón, president of the evangelical relief organization Council of Evangelical Churches Pro-denominational Alliance, believes that religion classes violate the constitution and are a front for forcing students to study Roman Catholicism.

Parajón notes that Belli is a member of the conservative Catholic group Opus Dei, which, in some Latin American countries, has lobbied for legal privileges for Catholic churches and corresponding restrictions on evangelicals. Parajón cites 1996 textbooks published and endorsed by Managua's Catholic hierarchy. He believes that the Ministry of Education intended to promote the series, coincidentally titled "Education in the Faith," for the religion classes but backed down in the face of evangelical opposition. One volume warns against "Protestant cults" as racist deceivers who prey on, bribe, and scare ignorant Catholics into converting. "It's very obvious that the Roman Catholic church prepared this series in cahoots with Mr. Belli, a response to the perceived threat of evangelical growth all over Latin America," Parajón says.

Free speech: Belli shares his views on religion's role in the public schools with the news media.

Belli, however, maintains that the religious education program does not violate Article 124 because participation is voluntary and after hours, and instructors are not state paid. He emphasizes that the Ministry of Education does not endorse any text for the class, leaving that choice to parents in each school. He denies having had a hand in the series.

In the early 1980s, Belli fled the Sandinista-ruled Nicaragua and lived in exile in the United States. In 1982, he founded the Puebla Institute, a human-rights organization dedicated to defending religious liberty. On a 1989 visit to his homeland, Belli offered his help in rebuilding the nation's education system, eventually becoming named education minister in 1991.

"As a Christian, I saw the Ministry of Education as a task presented to me by the providence of God," Belli says. However, he inherited a system in such physical decay that many schools were beyond repair and a curriculum steeped in political propaganda. "Education is concerned with transforming young people into mature, value-oriented adults. Part of our effort is . . . the transmission of new values, most of which, of course, would be inspired by our Christian tradition."

Now, as minister of the family, Belli will oversee several social-assistance ministries that benefit the poor, children, women, the elderly, and the handicapped.

RELIGION-FREE SCHOOLS

Some Nicaraguan Protestants worry that Belli's abrupt departure will doom all religiously oriented offerings in public schools. Barb Johnson, codirector of Nicaragua's Youth with a Mission, and her husband, Don, have two teenage children enrolled in a government-financed Catholic "semi-public" school in Diriamba, 25 miles south of Managua. Under Belli's tenure, the Johnsons received written government permission to minister in public schools with drama and "King's Kids" programs. "I had to see him leave," she says.

Johnson says the Catholic staff at her children's school respect the family's evangelical beliefs. While her children attend Catholic religion classes, they are not forced to attend mass. She believes most evangelicals are not worried about plots to indoctrinate students. "My concern is that the evangelicals are making such a big deal. It's going to turn [public education] into what it is in the States and religion is going to be banned in the schools," Johnson says.

But Belli's replacement, José Antonio Alvarado, former minister of government, has given wary Protestants cause for hope. Christian Way legislator Orlando Mayorga, a Seventh-day Adventist pastor, has served on committees with Alvarado and says he feels comfortable with him as head of Nicaragua's schools. "We have excellent communication with Alvarado," Mayorga says. "He's a person who listens." Alvarado supports the nonsectarian Article 124.

By Deann Alford in Managua, Nicaragua

In the time it takes to read this, another Christian will lose their life for their belief

An estimated 160,000 believers around the world will lose their lives this year alone simply because they are followers of Jesus Christ.

Surprised you didn't know? Few American Christians know anything about this modern day tragedy. We encourage you to become informed by sending for your complimentary subscription to Open Doors Newsbrief.

Open Doors has been serving the Suffering Church in more than 50 countries for 42 years, bringing them God's Word, leadership training, prayer support and encouragement.

Newsbrief contains news and information you won't get anywhere else, as it brings you the most up-to-date information available concerning Christians living in the world's most difficult areas.

The stories you read in Newsbrief will build your faith as you learn of God's mighty work behind the Enemy's lines.

But most important, you'll learn how to touch the lives of your persecuted brothers and sisters, letting them know they are not forgotten. They need your encouragement and prayers in the daily struggles they face.

You can be part of the solution for those living where faith costs the most!

Please call Open Doors toll free today at 800-392-2222 or mail the coupon at right to receive your free subscription to Open Doors Newsbrief.

YES!

I want to be informed. Please send my complimentary six-month subscription to Open Doors Newsbrief.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____

STATE _____ ZIP _____

☐ I also want to help Open Doors offer encouragement and support to the Suffering Church.

Here is my gift of ☐ $15 ☐ $_____

OPEN DOORS

WITH BROTHER ANDREW
P.O. Box 27001, Santa Ana, CA 92799

The President's Small Group

Turning your life around is not a do-it-yourself project.

In mid-September, Gordon MacDonald told his congregation, Grace Chapel in Lexington, Massachusetts, that he, Tony Campolo, and one other minister had been asked by President Clinton to form an "accountability circle." Their task as spiritual advisers is to help the President follow up on his tearful request for forgiveness at the September 11 White House breakfast for religious leaders (see "Clinton Seeks Pastoral Counsel," p. 18).

MacDonald's sermon and Campolo's subsequent press release led to calls to CT from journalists at the New York Times, Time magazine, three network news organizations, and other media outlets. They had never heard of accountability groups, and they wanted both to learn more about them and to ask what we think of this group of spiritual advisers solicited by and for the President.

Whatever his motivations, we commend the President on taking this step. We also recommend to all our readers that they should get involved in a group that will hold them accountable morally and spiritually, whether or not they are presently in a personal crisis.

Beyond remorse

The President's asking several prominent ministers to walk him through this period of repentance and restitution is a far more important element of what the Old Testament prophets called "turning" than were Clinton's dramatic lip-biting and tearful eyes. But what now? What will this group hope to accomplish with the President?

One reporter asked CT if there were specific steps in an accountability and restoration process. We were happy to summarize for him the seven points from an article written 11 years ago by former CT editor Kenneth S. Kantzer (Nov. 20, 1987, pp. 19-22).

The first step is remorse, wrote Kantzer. The second step, true confession, is wisely limited to the circle of those who need to know. The third, accountability, is "a recognition by the wrongdoer that sin is never a completely isolated act and that we are always accountable to fellow believers." Fourth, fruits that befit repentance must follow. Fifth, restitution, where possible, involves setting right what has been done wrong.

Kantzer outlined two more points that are especially important for leaders whose wrongdoing compromises their continued ability to lead. The sixth step is retreat, withdrawal for a time from public responsibility and visibility. Whether the wrongdoer is a pastor of a church or a college president or the leader of the free world, a significant sabbatical away from the pressures of office is required. Both in politics and the church, it is hard to separate one's personal, spiritual motivations from the calculated effects that statements and deeds will have on one's constituents. Can a sitting President make public acts of contrition without calculating their political effect? Can he now be a truly penitent President without understandably skeptical critics claiming that he is merely "playing the God card"? Will the President's advisers tell him to step down from office for his own spiritual health? Would he do so if they told him to?

The seventh step, wrote Kantzer, is the manifestation of a genuine call. If the process of restoration is not simply the restoration to fellowship, but also a restoration to leadership, there must be a genuine calling by God for the individual again to take up the reins of leadership. This sense of call must be perceived by the penitent and the accountability circle, as well as the community to be led. Not all penitent leaders should be restored to a leadership role. Indeed, Bill Clinton, sufficiently chastened and taking a cue from Jimmy Carter, might render his greatest service as an ex-President.

From Wesley to Promise Keepers

In 1987, when Gordon MacDonald's own affair became public knowledge, pastoral counseling professor David Augsburger wrote in CT about the importance of horizontal accountability structures (Nov. 20, 1987, pp. 23-24). "An egalitarian society has led us to discard vertical models of authority. But it has not created alternative models for appropriately distributing authority in community," he wrote.

Renewal movements have often been accompanied by an emphasis on forming such horizontal spiritual relationships. Historically, John Wesley, the father of so much that has come to characterize American evangelicalism, fostered the model for accountability groups. Today, Promise Keepers continues the call to accountability, urging the sweating, shouting, weeping males who attend its events to carry the ethical commitments that have been formed and energized in the emotional intensity of a stadium into the intimacy of small, congregationally based circles.

Wesley lived in an age of burgeoning democracy, and both his Holy Club at Oxford and his Methodist "class meetings" laicized spiritual accountability. It was an idea whose time was ripe, having been germinated in the seedbeds of Pietistic Protestantism and a segment of French Catholicism that had come under the influence of à Kempis's Imitation of Christ. For most of the history of the church, spiritual accountability had been a vertical and hierarchical process. Christians who had access to a confessor or spiritual director did as they were instructed by experienced clerics. But the late seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries saw a new trust in the spiritual wisdom of the people emerge. And the lasting success of Wesley's ministry was due in large part to the spiritual growth cultivated in the peer groups he called class meetings.

Curiously, such horizontal authority structures hold in tension two opposing notions: the democratic sensibility that trusts the good impulses and common sense of common folks; and the biblical insight that we are all depraved, which is to say that every aspect of everything each of us does is in some way tainted by sin. Yet there is spiritual magic at work in this tension: While we are, each of us, expert at ignoring the fault lines in our own souls, those who know us well can spot them with little trouble and should point them out to us.

Given that fact, most of us would just as soon avoid such contact. Yes, some studies show that approximately one-third of American adults are involved in some sort of small group; but precious few of those dig beneath the social level to the substratum where we learn the truth about ourselves.

In 1987, Augsburger pointed out that "horizontal models of authority that work out patterns of mutual accountability are available. But," he wrote, "they have their price: they require us to limit our individualism, to adjust our narcissistic self-realization, to commit ourselves intentionally to building personal peer networks with integrity, and to make increased commitments to values, core faith positions, authentic repentance, and renewal of relationships."

Those are difficult adjustments to make. But whether we are presidents or peasants, our spiritual health depends on it.

Scandal in the church

One reason accountability groups are so important is the impact that sin has on others. When certain sins are avoided, individuals, families, and communities are spared suffering. Sometimes, however, the people close to a perpetrator of these sins themselves engage in enabling behaviors—denial, coverups, rationalization—which let the guilty party off the hook and allow sin to work its wreckage.

The scandalous behavior of National Baptist Convention USA president Henry Lyons (see story, p. 16) is a case in point. Because Lyons's peers did not carefully monitor his behavior, he was enabled to carry on an extramarital affair and waste allegedly ill-gotten monies on extravagances for himself and his lover.

More scandalous, however, has been the unwillingness of his denomination's leadership to hold him accountable. (The members are voting by closing their pocketbooks. And rank-and-file clergy, like Cheryl Townsend Gilkey of Cambridge, Massachusetts, are saying that "an honorable person would have already offered to resign.") Though Lyons has been indicted on charges of racketeering, extortion, money laundering, and other financial crimes and has openly admitted to adultery while in office, church leaders have refused to do what would be best for their church and for Lyons himself—to give him time away from pastoral and denominational responsibilities to let the Lord heal him from his self-inflicted wounds. Protesting that Lyons has not been convicted (yet) of any crime, they are content to leave him in office.

The scandalous behavior of this church leader is bad enough. But when compounded by the inaction of a denomination in denial, it brings shame on the church of Jesus Christ and sings sinners to sleep with a lullaby of cheap grace. Because Lyons heads a church that represents Jesus Christ's body on earth, this scandal is in some ways far worse than the misdeeds of the President.

Sin is serious. Sin in the lives of leaders disgraces and infects their communities. But when leaders take responsibility for their sins, not only by expressing remorse but by engaging in accountability, restitution, and retreat, we must, like the angels in heaven, rejoice.

Can President Clinton now be truly penitent without skeptics claiming he is merely "playing the God card"?

CI

New York City's Evangelical Christian College

Recent high school graduates searching for a solid Bible foundation in a Christ-centered academic environment have an exciting new option.

Nyack College's Manhattan Center—located in the heart of the pulsing city—offers afternoon, evening and weekend courses to serve the needs of traditional students as well as working adults. Nyack College rewards life experiences with college credits and makes generous grants available.

Associate Degrees:	Liberal Arts A.A., Christian Work A.S.
Bachelor Degrees:	Bible B.A., Pastoral Ministries B.S., Youth Ministries B.S., Psychology B.A., Business Administration B.S., Elementary Education B.S., Interdisciplinary Studies (Double Major degrees – B.A. & B.S. only)

Call 212-625-0500 now
for free information!

Contact President
David Schroeder
at (914) 358-1710
if you would like to aid Nyack College's ministry in
New York City.

335 Broadway/93 Worth Street, 10th Floor
New York, NY 10013-3904
<http://www.nyackcollege.edu>

For Every Believer, There's a Believer's Life System.

Remember what you've been called to do. The Believer's Life System has a special help you organize. It's called it. And put God right in the center of it. (For the Believer's Life System offers a whole family of products, including the Classic Size Planner Edition, with its low at innovative features. And the family of products includes:

The Believer's Life System™

• Classic Size Planner Edition
• Compact Size Planner Edition
• Hardcover edition for weekly and five-year planning

Compact Size Women's Edition that fits easily into a purse. Either way, you'll enjoy everything from time management and devotional aids to tips on family life and personal finance—all in handsome, American-made binders guaranteed for life.

Look for the Believer's Life System family of products at your favorite bookstore, or call 1-800-466-LIFE (5436). And get the life management system BELIEVER'S that's just right for your life. For the Christian bookstore nearest you call 1-800-991-7747.

Life|SYSTEM

Helping Put God at the Center of All You Do

A Restoration Project

Several years ago when restorers finished cleaning Michelangelo's Sistine Chapel frescos, the paintings seemed to come alive, sporting vibrant colors that for years had been muted by dust and pollution. Art experts were astounded to see what Michelangelo had originally created.

In this issue of CT, a team of scholars, preachers, and writers has undertaken a similar task with one of the best known of Jesus' parables: the Prodigal Son. Because evangelicals have sometimes been accused of spending more time arguing over the role of Scripture than actually reading Scripture, we have chosen to delve deeply into a single text: Luke 15:11–32. By approaching Jesus' parable from different angles, we hope to rediscover its many brilliant facets.

According to biblical scholar Kenneth Bailey, a seasoned expert on Middle Eastern culture, familiarity with the parable has dulled our perceptions and made us draw the wrong lessons from it (see "The Pursuing Father," p. 34). He knocks loose the cultural accretions that distort the parable's original jarring message. He notes that his Muslim friends object to, and Christians often miss, the profoundly theological and Christological message of the parable.

Even Rembrandt's portrait of the father's embrace of his lost son can seem dull and clichéd—until it is paired with the spiritual insights of the late Henri Nouwen, who allows us to see a masterpiece anew (p. 39).

To remind us of the radical implications of the parable, we interviewed Croatian theologian Miroslav Volf on how he found in the father's embrace of the Prodigal Son a model for loving his Serbian enemies (p. 65).

Other contributors looked at the parable from other provocative points of view: writer Wendy Zoba shares her journey while parenting a prodigal in "The Missing Mother" (p. 76); preacher Barbara Brown Taylor counsels us not to be too quick in our judgments in "The Other Brother Had a Point" (p. 70); and theologian Christopher Hall explores the early church debate over whether apostate Christians could be forgiven as prodigals in "Rejecting the Prodigal" (p. 73).

Our restoration project would not be complete without the interpretative efforts of the contemporary artists whose work accompanies the articles. In unique ways, Carol Bomer, Brent Morris, Bruce Herman, Tanja Butler, Mary McCleary, Ward Smith, Rebecca Ross, and He Qi, too, are expositors of the text. The combined effort, we feel sure, will make plain why this gospel parable is indeed good news to twentieth-century sinners like us.

—The editors

T H I

T H

P A R A B L E O F

CAROL HOMER

P R O D I G A L

The Pursuing Father

What we need to know about this often misunderstood Middle Eastern parable.

KENNETH E. BAILEY

I was stunned! It was 1958 in Jerusalem. A British scholar and churchman, Dr. Kenneth Cragg, was lecturing on the Muslim-Christian debates of the Middle Ages. He had just pointed out that the Muslim scholars of the period loved to quote the parable of the Prodigal Son as evidence against Christians. The reason was that, in the story, a son who leaves his father (God), goes into a far country, gets into trouble, decides to return home, is on his arrival welcomed, and his return is celebrated. He needs no incarnation and no atonement, no cross, and no salvation. There is no mediator between the two of them. He simply returns home and his father accepts him. Ergo: Jesus is a good Muslim.

After 40 years, the shock of that speech is still with me. In fact, that lecture inaugurated my personal pilgrimage into the mind of Jesus of Nazareth with this famous text as a road map. Was there any response to this centuries-old Muslim challenge?

This story badly needs to be rescued from familiarity and from its traditional cultural captivity. For centuries, we in the West have read the story in the light of our own cultural presuppositions, which have dulled its cutting edge.

I spent most of my childhood in Egypt, and from 1955 to 1995 our family lived in Egypt, Lebanon, Jerusalem, and Cyprus, where I taught New Testament in seminaries and institutes. For all of my adult life, it has been my privilege to study the New Testament while living and teaching in the Middle East. Indeed, when I began to take seriously the traditional Middle Eastern culture of which Jesus was a part, the parable of "the father and his two lost sons" began to unfold for me in a new and exciting way. In the light of that culture, available through early Jewish and Eastern Christian sources, answers can be found to the original challenge with which my pilgrimage began. In short—are the Incarnation and the Atonement a part of this crucial parable? Yes, they are. I will try to explain why.

Luke's trilogy

This parable must be seen as the third part of a trilogy in Luke 15. The Pharisees challenge Jesus: "This fellow welcomes sinners and eats with them" (quotations taken from the NRSV unless otherwise noted). The Babylonian Talmud makes clear that rabbis did not eat with the 'am-ha'arets (the people of the land) who did not keep the law in a precise fashion. Luke records, "So he told them [the Pharisees] this parable [singular]." What follows are the three parables of the lost sheep, the lost coin, and the two lost sons (the Prodigal Son).

Thus we see that Luke understood them to be three parts of a single parable. A shepherd pays a price to find and restore a lost sheep. The woman does the same for her coin. In these two stories it is clear that Jesus is the good shepherd and he is the good woman. Which raises a question about the third story: Is he also the good father? And does this third story parallel the first two stories by having the father pay a high price to find and restore his son(s)? To answer these questions, which point to the larger issue of atonement and incarnation, at least 14 aspects of the parable need to be rescued from their traditional interpretation.

1. The request. The younger son requests his inheritance while his father is still alive and in good health. In traditional Middle Eastern culture, this means, "Father, I am eager for you to die!" If the father is a traditional Middle Eastern father, he will strike the boy across the face and drive him out of the house. Surely anywhere in the world this is an outrageous request. The Prodigal is not simply a young boy who is "off to the big city to make his fame and fortune." Rather, this young son makes a request that is unthinkable, particularly in Middle Eastern culture. The father is expected to refuse—if he is an oriental patriarch! In fact, he is not, which brings us to the second point.

2. The father's gift. The father grants the Prodigal the freedom to own and to sell his portion of the estate. Five times in the parable the father does not behave like a traditional oriental patriarch. This is the first instance. The inheritance is substantial. This is a wealthy family that has a herd of fatted calves and a herd of goats. House servants/slaves appear. The house includes a banquet hall large enough to host a crowd that will eat an entire fatted calf in one evening. Professional musicians and dancers are hired for that banquet. The father is respected in the community, and thus the community responds to his invitation. Transferring the inheritance is a serious matter that should only be dealt with by the father as he approaches death.

Furthermore, the Prodigal "gathered all he had," or as the New English Bible puts it, "turned [it] into cash." This means that he is selling his part of the family farm. As that happens, this horrendous family breakdown becomes public knowledge, and the family is shamed before the entire community. Jewish law of the first century provided for the division of an inheritance (when the father was ready to make such a division), but did not grant the children the right to sell until after the father's death.

In a second departure from the expected norm, the father grants the inheritance and the right to sell, knowing that this right will shame the family before the community. Thus, from the opening lines of the parable, it is clear that Jesus does not use an oriental patriarch as a model for God. In the contemporary West, Jesus is often accused of having done so. Such is not the case. Rather, he has broken all the bounds of Middle Eastern patriarchy in creating this image of father. No human father is an adequate model for God. Knowing this, Jesus elevates the figure of father beyond its human limitations and reshapes it for use as a model for God.

3. The hurried sale. The Prodigal sells quickly ("A few days later"). He is obliged to do so. Anger in the village rises against him because he has shamed his father and his entire extended family by offering a large portion of the family farm for sale with a healthy father still farming it. He has to conclude the sale and get out of town as quickly as possible. As noted, Jewish law did not permit such a sale. The Prodigal does not care.

4. The getsatsah ceremony. From the Jerusalem Talmud it is known that the Jews of the time of Jesus had a method of punishing any Jewish boy who lost the family inheritance to Gentiles. It was called the "getsatsah ceremony." Horror at such a

THE PARABLE

There was a man who had two sons. The younger of them said to his father, "Father, give me the share of the property that will belong to me." So he divided his property between them. A few days later the younger son gathered all he had and traveled to a distant country, and there he squandered his property in dissolute living. When he had spent everything, a severe famine took place throughout that country, and he began to be in need. So he went and hired himself out to one of the citizens of that country, who sent him to his fields to feed the pigs. He would gladly have filled himself with the pods that the pigs were eating; and no one gave him anything. But when he came to himself he said, "How many of my father's hired hands have bread enough and to spare, but here I am dying of hunger! I will get up and go to my father, and I will say to him, 'Father, I have sinned against heaven and before you; I am no longer worthy to be called your son; treat me like one of your hired hands.'" So he set off and went to his father. But while he was still far off, his father saw him and was filled with compassion; he ran and put his arms around him and kissed him. Then the son said to him, "Father, I have sinned against heaven and before you; I am no longer worthy to be called your son." But the father said to his slaves, "Quickly, bring out a robe—the best one—and put it on him; put a ring on his finger and sandals on his feet. And get the fatted calf and kill it, and let us eat and celebrate; for this son of mine was dead and is alive again; he was lost and is found!" And they began to celebrate.

Now his elder son was in the field; and when he came and approached the house, he heard music and dancing. He called one of the slaves and asked what was going on. He replied, "Your brother has come, and your father has killed the fatted calf, because he has got him back safe and sound." Then he became angry and refused to go in. His father came out and began to plead with him. But he answered his father, "Listen! For all these years I have been working like a slave for you, and I have never disobeyed your command; yet you have never given me even a young goat so that I might celebrate with my friends. But when this son of yours came back, who has devoured your property with prostitutes, you killed the fatted calf for him!" Then the father said to him, "Son, you are always with me, and all that is mine is yours. But we had to celebrate and rejoice, because this brother of yours was dead and has come to life; he was lost and has been found."

—LUKE 15:11–32 (NRSV)

loss is also reflected in the Dead Sea Scrolls. Such a violator of community expectations would face the qetsatsah ceremony if he dared to return to his home village. The ceremony was simple. The villagers would bring a large earthenware jar, fill it with burned nuts and burned corn, and break it in front of the guilty individual. While doing this, the community would shout, "So-and-so is cut off from his people." From that point on, the village would have nothing to do with the wayward lad.

From the various references to this ceremony, it appears that the ban was more comprehensive than the Amish "shun." When shunned, an Amish person can at least eat at a separate table. The first-century Jewish shun appears to have been a total ban on any contact with the violator of the village code of honor. As he leaves town, the Prodigal knows he must not lose the money among the Gentiles. He does. In the far country he lives among Gentiles. They own pigs!

5. Expensive living. Many times the Prodigal is accused of "loose living" or "riotous living." The Greek adjective in this phrase, however, does not imply immorality. (Syriac and Arabic translations in the Middle East have for 18 centuries preserved this finely tuned detail.) Jesus gives no hint as to how the Prodigal wasted his money. We are only told that he was a spendthrift. At the end of the story the older son publicly accuses his brother of spending the money on harlots. But he has just arrived from the field and knows nothing. He clearly wants to exaggerate his brother's failures. This tension in the story disappears when words such as "riotous living" (KJV), "loose living" (RSV), or "disolute living" (NRSV) appear in the text.

6. The search for employment.

When his money is spent, the Prodigal would naturally return home. But he has broken the rules. He knows that the qetsatsah ceremony awaits him if he returns to the village. He is thus desperate to somehow recover the money. For this he needs a paying job. Twice he tries to obtain one. The first attempt is feeding pigs in the far country. The second is the game plan he vocalizes on the eve of his return home. These two plans must be looked at with some care.

The first plan, becoming a pig herder, does not work. The text deliberately affirms, "No one gave him anything." Like Lincoln's Gettysburg address, this parable contains no excess verbiage. Each phrase is carefully crafted to carry precise meaning. As a pig herder, the Prodigal is fed but not paid. The first-century Jewish reader knows the Prodigal must earn back the money he wasted if he is to avoid the qetsatsah ceremony.

Having failed at his first try, he plans one last roll of the dice—he will go home, get job training, and earn his way. To be accepted for that job training, he will need his father's endorsement. But how will he convince his father to trust him one more time?

7. The self-serving plan. Perhaps the most theologically damaging traditional misunderstanding of this parable is in the popular perception of the phrase, "He came to himself." This has long been interpreted as meaning "he repented." This reading of the text dulls its cutting edge and breaks up the theological unity of the chapter. The good shepherd must traverse the wilderness to find his sheep. He does not return to the village and wait for the sheep to wander home and bleat at the door of the sheepfold. The good woman lights a lamp and searches diligently to find the lost coin. She does not resume her chores expecting the coin to flip itself out of a crack in the floor and land on the kitchen table.

In short, the first two stories are Augustinian. The sheep and the coin must be rescued. But if the Prodigal manages to make his way home by his own efforts, then the third story is Pelagian or at least semi-Pelagian. That is, it teaches that people are not impeded by original sin or depraved wills and can by their own effort, without divine grace, take steps toward salvation.

In the first story, the lost sheep is a symbol of repentance, and repentance is shown there as "acceptance of being found." The second story confirms this definition. But if the Prodigal truly repents in the far country and struggles home on his own, then Jesus contradicts himself. As traditionally understood, the third story affirms the opposite of the first two. Either Jesus is theologically confused or repentance is an elastic concept that is open to both an Augustinian and a Pelagian interpretation. I find both options unacceptable. Is there an alternative?

By telling the parable of the Good Shepherd, Jesus invokes Psalm 23, which also has a lost sheep and a good shepherd. The key phrase appears in verse 3, which is traditionally translated, "He restores my soul." This statement has come to mean: I was downcast, and the Lord restored my spirits. That understanding is, no doubt, a part of the psalmist's intention. But the Hebrew reads yashubib nefshi, "which literally means, 'He brings me back,' or 'He causes me to repent.'" Clearly, the psalmist is lost, and God, the good shepherd, brings him back to the paths of righteousness.

When the Prodigal's speech is read in this light, a new meaning emerges. The psalmist believed God brought him back (to God) and caused him to repent. The Prodigal is going to solve his own problem—he came to himself. The verb for return does not appear! The long, rich history of Arabic versions contains a number of interesting translations of this key phrase. Some read, "He got smart." Others translate, "He took an interest in himself" or "He thought to himself." None of these translators saw the Prodigal in the far country as repentant. Ah—but what of his "confession"?

The prepared confession reads, "I have sinned against heaven and before you," and this is (understandably) usually seen to indicate heartfelt repentance. Jesus' audience, however, is composed of Pharisees who know the Scriptures well. They recognize that confession as a quotation from the pharaoh when he tries to manipulate Moses into lifting the plagues. After the ninth plague, Pharaoh finally agrees to meet Moses, and when Moses appears, Pharaoh gives this same speech. Everyone knows that Pharaoh is not repenting. He is simply trying to bend Moses to his will.

The Prodigal is best understood as attempting the same. Hoping to soften his father's heart, the Prodigal plans to offer his solution to the problem of their estrangement: job training. He will work as a paid craftsman and be able to save money. He will not live at home for the present. But after the lost money is recovered, he can discuss reconciliation. Having failed to get a paying job in the far country, he will try to get his father's backing to become gainfully employed near home. He will yet save himself through the law. No grace is necessary. He can manage—or so he thinks! But is the lost money the real problem?

Traditional Middle Easterners, wearing lo in public. To do so is deeply humiliating. T

In his soliloquy in the far country, the Prodigal opens his mind and spirit to the listener/reader. Wanting to eat, he says, "I am dying of hunger!" He thinks that if he can only recover the lost money, everything will eventually be solved. In the interim, he will be able to eat, and once the money is returned, the village will accept him back. He does not consider the father's broken heart and the agony of rejected love that his father has endured. While talking to himself in the far country he evidences no shame or remorse. If he is a servant standing before a master, his plan is somehow adequate. If he is a son dealing with a compassionate and loving father, his projected solution is inadequate.

8. The point of turning. The Prodigal steels his nerves for his humiliating entrance into the village. He remembers the qetsatsah ceremony and braces himself to endure its shame. The painful interview with his father will not be any easier. His one hope is that his "humble speech" will touch his father's heart and that he will win his father's backing for the training he needs to become a wage earner. The Prodigal is expected to return with generous gifts for the family. Not only does the Prodigal return home empty-handed, he returns in failure after insulting his family and the village at departure. This painful road back is endured for one reason: he is hungry. The bottom line is, "I am dying of hunger!"

But what of his father? The father knows his son will fail. He waits day after day, staring down the crowded village street to the road in the distance along which his son disappeared with arrogance and high hopes. The father realizes full well how his son will be welcomed in the village when he returns in failure. Thus, the father also prepares a plan: to reach the boy before the boy reaches the village. The father knows that if he is able to achieve reconciliation with his son in public, no one in the village will treat the Prodigal badly. No one will dare suggest that the qetsatsah ceremony must be enacted.

The father sees him "while he was still far off." The "great distance" is more spiritual than it is physical. If the Prodigal thinks he can earn money and with it solve the problem of their relationship, he is yet very far away! The language is borrowed from Isaiah 57:19, where God affirms peace to those who are "far off" and peace to those who are "near." This is precisely what the father sets out to do. Through a great, dramatic action, he will offer peace to the one who is far off and then concentrate on creating peace with the one who is near (the older brother).

And so, for the third time, the father breaks the mold of Middle Eastern patriarchy. He takes the bottom edge of his long robes in his hand and runs to welcome his pig-herding son. He falls on his neck and kisses him before hearing his prepared speech! The father does not demonstrate love in response to his son's confession. Rather, out of his own compassion he empties himself, assumes the form of a servant, and runs to reconcile his estranged son. Traditional Middle Easterners, wearing long robes, do not run in public. To do so is deeply humiliating. This father runs. The boy is totally surprised. Overwhelmed, he can only offer the first part of his prepared speech, which now takes on a new meaning. He declares that he has sinned and that he is unworthy to be called a son. He admits (by omitting the third phrase) that he has no bright ideas for mending their relationship. He is no longer "working" his father for additional advantages. The father does not "interrupt" his younger son. Instead, the Prodigal changes his mind, and in a moment of genuine repentance, accepts to be found.

9. The father acts like a mother.

In the parable, a traditional oriental patriarch would be expected to sit in grand isolation in the house to hear what the wayward boy might have to say for himself. The mother could run down the road and shower the boy with kisses.

We know God is spirit and thus is neither male nor female. But God is also personal, and God is one. A 1,000-year-old, finely tuned sacred tradition is available to Jesus. The prophets called God "Father" and partially described that father in female terms. This language affirmed the personhood and the unity of God for all believers, male and female. In the Old Testament, God is already presented as a father who also acts with the tender compassion of a mother (Deut. 32:18; Ps. 131; Isa. 42:14, 66:13). The Dead Sea Scrolls describe God with the same imagery. More than 200 times Jesus calls God "Father," and in John's gospel, we find that the believer must be "born from above." In 1 John, the believer is "born of God." That is, God "gives birth" in the New Testament even as he does in the Old (Deut. 32:18). In this parable, too, the father appears on the road, demonstrating the tender compassion of a mother.

10. Christology. As the father comes down and out to reconcile his son, he becomes a symbol of God in Christ "Father," a symbol for God, ever so quietly evolves into a symbol for Jesus. The same shift occurs in the story of the Good Shepherd. At three points in the Old Testament, God is a good shepherd who goes after his lost sheep (Ps. 23:3; Jer. 23:1-8; Ezek. 34). Jesus retells that classical story and introduces himself into it as its hero. The Pharisees complain, "This fellow welcomes sinners and eats with them." Jesus replies with this story, which in effect says, "Indeed, I do eat with sinners. But it is much worse than you imagine! I not only eat with them, I run down the road, shower them with kisses, and drag them in that I might eat with them!" Jesus is clearly talking about himself. By the end of the story, the father does what Jesus does.

A famous eleventh-century Syriac

...es, do not run
...her runs.

scholar in Baghdad, Abdallah Ibn al-Tayyib, identified the father in his self-giving love on the road as a symbol for Jesus. The great New Testament scholar Joachim Jeremias made the same identification this century. I call this "hermeneutical Christology." That is, Jesus takes a known symbol for God and quietly transforms it into a symbol for himself.

11. The meaning of the banquet.

The banquet in the parable has three interpretations. The first is offered by the father, the second by a little boy in the courtyard of the home, and the third by the older son. The first two are in harmony with each other. The third is in sharp contrast to the first two. Contemporary readers usually only recall the third. All three interpretations must be examined.

Once reconciliation is assured, the father orders a banquet. He says, "Let us eat and celebrate; for [now comes his reason] this son of mine was dead and is alive again; he was lost and is found!" The father does not say, "He was lost and has come home." Instead, we read, "He was lost and is found." So who found him? The father did! Where did he find him? At the edge of the village! Thus, in the father's perceptions, the Prodigal was still lost and dead at the edge of the village. Even as the shepherd was obliged to go forth and pay a high price to find his sheep, and the good woman sought diligently to find her coin, even so the father went down and out in a costly demonstration of unexpected love to find and resurrect his son. The banquet is a celebration of the success of that finding and that resurrection.

Now for the little boy's interpretation. The older son comes in from the field and on hearing the music calls to a pais. This Greek word can mean three things. The first is "son," which does not fit this text. The second is "servant," which also does not fit, because all the servants are busy in the house serving the huge banquet. The third option is "young boy." Middle Eastern Syriac and Arabic versions have always chosen this third alternative. As the older son approaches his family home in the center of the village, he naturally meets a

THE END OF THE GREAT REBELLION

Looking again at Rembrandt's portrayal of the return of the younger son, I now see how much more is taking place than a mere compassionate gesture toward a wayward child. The great event I see is the end of the great rebellion. The rebellion of Adam and all his descendants is forgiven, and the original blessing by which Adam received everlasting life is restored. It seems to me now that these hands have always been stretched out—even when there were no shoulders upon which to rest them. God has never pulled back his arms, never withheld his blessing, never stopped considering his son the Beloved One. But the Father couldn't compel his son to stay home. He couldn't force his love on the Beloved. He had to let him go in freedom, even though he knew the pain it would cause both his son and himself. It was love itself that prevented him from keeping his son home at all cost. It was love itself that allowed him to let his son find his own life, even with the risk of losing it.

Here the mystery of my life is unveiled. I am loved so much that I am left free to leave home. The blessing is there from the beginning. I have left it and keep on leaving it. But the Father is always looking for me with outstretched arms to receive me back and whisper again in my ear: "You are my Beloved, on you my favor rests."

— HENRI J. M. NOUWEN IN THE RETURN OF THE PRODIGAL SON (DOUBLEDAY, © 1994)

crowd of young boys who are not old enough to recline with the elders at the banquet, but are outside the house dancing in tune to the music and enjoying the occasion in their own boisterous manner. The young lad assumes the role of the chorus in a Greek drama. (We now know that there was a large Greek theater in Sephoris, four miles from Nazareth.) The little boy tells the listener/reader the truth about what is happening in the story. The older son asks him what the party is all about and the lad says (as I would translate it), "Your brother has come, and your father has killed the fatted calf, because (now comes the second interpretation) he (the father) received him (the Prodigal) with peace!" The word I translate here as "peace" is the Greek word hugaino. This means "in good health," and from it we have the English word hygiene. But in the Greek Old Testament (the Septuagint), this same Greek word appears 14 times, and without exception it translates the Hebrew word shalom or peace. When a first-century Jew used the word hugaino, he or she mentally translated the Hebrew word shalom, which includes "good health" but means so very much more.

I am confident that Jesus used the word shalom in the story. The point is that the banquet is in celebration of the father's successful efforts at creating reconciliation—shalom—and the community has come to participate in that celebration. Rather than a qetsatsah ceremony of rejection, they are participating in the joy of a restoration achieved by the father at great cost. Thus the young boy confirms the father's interpretation. For both, the banquet is a celebration of the success of the father's efforts at reconciling his son.

The language of the young boy, "He received him. . . ." (and plans to eat with him), reminds the listener of the Pharisees' complaint, "This fellow [Jesus] welcomes sinners and eats with them." The young boy's speech confirms that the father has clearly evolved into a symbol for Jesus. Jesus receives sinners and eats with them. In this parable, the father does the same.

We have yet the older son's interpretation to consider, which he offers after the father tries to reconcile this son to himself. He says, "You killed the fatted calf for him!" This claim is the exact opposite of what the little boy has just told the older son. It is also the opposite of the father's own declared purpose for the banquet. Noting that the older son contradicts the two previous interpretations of the banquet, the listener must choose between them. Is the banquet in honor of the Prodigal or in honor of the father? Is it a celebration of the Prodigal's successful efforts at reaching home (on his own), or is it rather a celebration of the success of the father's costly efforts at creating shalom? Will the guests congratulate the Prodigal or the father?

It is my 40-year perception that generally modern readers of the parable do not even discern these contrasts or observe that there is a choice to be made. The banquet foreshadows Holy Communion. Surely we know that Jesus is the hero of that sacred banquet and that sinners are not the center of attention. The older brother's self-righteousness becomes a pair of colored glasses through which he sees the world. All he can understand is that the Prodigal lost the money and that he has been reconciled to their father without having first returned the money. In short, grace has been offered and accepted rather than the requirements of law demanded and fulfilled by the sinner. The older son's interpretation represents the view of many, then and now. But the father's view of the banquet (supported by the young boy's speech) is the mind of Jesus. For many, grace is not only amazing—it is also unbelievable! How could it be true? After all, you get what you pay for, don't you?

12. The older son's anger. If the banquet were a straightforward celebration of the Prodigal's safe return, the older son would enter the hall immediately. It would mean that the Prodigal's position in the family has not yet been determined. The older son would be very anxious that his point of view be represented when the family discusses the matter. Of course, they are all (publicly) glad the Prodigal is home and in good health. It would be churlish not to rejoice at his safe arrival. But the young boy tells the older brother that it's all over! Their father has already reconciled the Prodigal son—and has done so without the Prodigal paying for his sins! This is why the older son is angry. He is so angry he takes the radical step of breaking his relationship with his father.

For a son to be present and to refuse participation in such a banquet is an unspeakable public insult to the father. A cultural equivalent might be the case of a son in the West who has a heated public shouting match with his father in the middle of a wedding banquet after a large family wedding. A shouting match is not unthinkable—but not in public at such a banquet. The older son's rejection of his father's reconciliation with the Prodigal leads that same older son to break his relationship with the father who achieved it.

13. The father's response. For a fourth time, the father goes beyond what a traditional patriarch would do. For the second time in the same day, he is willing to offer a costly demonstration of unexpected love. Only this time it is to a lawkeeper rather than a lawbreaker. Amazing grace holds true for both sons. Culturally, the father is expected to proceed with the banquet and ignore the public insult. He can deal with the older son later. But no! In painful public humiliation, the father goes down and out to find yet one more lost sheep/coin/son.

14. The older son's response. The younger son "accepted" to be found. He was overwhelmed by the costly love freely offered to him. The older son, in contrast, seems unimpressed. Instead, he mercilessly attacks both his father and his brother in public. The father is expected finally to explode and order a thrashing for the public insults. For a fifth time, patriarchy is transcended. This is not a remarkable father. Rather it is a symbol for God. As Henri Nouwen has written regarding this parable, "This is the portrayal of God, whose goodness, love, forgiveness, care, joy and compassion have no limits at all. Jesus presents God's generosity by using all the imagery that his culture provides, while constantly transforming it" (The Return of the Prodigal).

If the older son accepts the love now offered to him, he will be obliged to treat the Prodigal with the same loving acceptance with which the father welcomed the pig herder. The older son will need to be "conformed to the image" of that compassionate father who comes to both kinds of sinners in the form of a suffering servant, offering undeserved, costly love. Is he willing? We are not told. By this point the audience is on the stage and must decide for itself. CT

Kenneth E. Bailey is an active lecturer on Middle Eastern New Testament studies and professor emeritus of New Testament at the Tantur Ecumenical Institute, Jerusalem. Author of Finding the Lost: Cultural Keys to Luke 15 (Concordia), he lives in New Wilmington, Pennsylvania.

This special section on the Prodigal is continued on page 65.

Update

FALL 1998

Remedies for Biblical Illiteracy

New resources to help open the Bible

Page 4

Virtual Exegesis

Bible software changes
the way we study the Word

Page 18

Now There
Are Notes On
The Greatest Work
Of All Time

just can't find a better study resource than the Shepherd's Notes series.

Each Bible book is revealed in simple, understandable steps with easy-to-follow subject icons that outline and underscore the focal points and personalities of the biblical text.

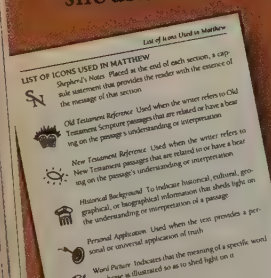

The perfect choice for Bible study, personal devotions, teaching, even sermon preparation, Shepherd's Notes are valuable and value-priced guides that no Christian home, school, or personal library should be without.

Ask to see the
Shepherd's Notes
Resource Center at your favorite
Christian bookstore.

The Most Concise and Accurate
Way to Grasp the Essentials

SHEPHERD'S NOTES
RESOURCE CENTER
When you need a guide through the Scriptures

THE GREATEST WALL

IN CHINA IS

SPIRITUAL

You can answer the prayers of Christian leaders in China for Bibles

Think of your desire to learn more about God and walk closely with Him, but imagine trying to do this without His Word. That's what life is like for Christians in China.

But now, spiritual walls are coming down and the need is great to equip Christian leaders with the greatest resource for evangelism, the life-giving Word of God.

It's estimated only 1 in 9 Chinese Christians have a Bible

In spite of pockets of harsh persecution, Church growth in China is unprecedented.

"Persecution here is still severe and many church leaders are still in prison. People want to read and understand the Bible now. There are never enough Bibles here. Sometimes villagers come hundreds of miles to obtain Bibles, and we try to give as many Bibles to as many as we can."

—Pastor Samuel Lamb

Your gift will provide Christian leaders with God's Word

Through International Bible Society you have a unique opportunity to equip Christian leaders with a firm foundation for sharing the gospel with Chinese Life Application Bibles.

Your gift of only $18 will provide 6 Christian leaders with Bibles. $30 will provide 10 leaders with Bibles.

You will be blessed by:

- Knowing you've answered the prayers of Christian leaders for Bibles as they share Christ.
- Helping Christian leaders deepen their understanding of Scripture and its power.
- Knowing you've made an eternal difference in the lives of Chinese Christians.

Your generous gift makes a difference!
Please fill out the coupon or call us at International Bible Society.

Imagine a Chinese pastor seated in the living room of a house Church, sharing God's Word from a Bible you provided.

"All Scripture is God-breathed and is useful for teaching, rebuking, correcting and training in righteousness, so that the man of God may be thoroughly equipped for every good work." 2 Timothy 3:16 NIV

YES! I want to provide Christian leaders in China with Chinese Life Application Bibles. Enclosed is my gift.

- ☐ $18 will provide 6 leaders with Chinese Life Application Bibles
☐ $30 to provide 10 leaders with Chinese Life Application Bibles
☐ Other $ _____ to provide leaders with Chinese Life Application Bibles.

1409

Name _____
Address _____
City _____
State _____ Zip _____
Phone (_____) _____

For further information or to make an immediate gift, please call us at 1-888-648-2425. Visit our website: www.gospelcom.net/ibs

Please send this coupon along with your tax deductible gift to:

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY
PO Box 35901, Colorado Springs CO 80935-3901

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY

Building the Kingdom—book by book

Since 1809 IBS has been providing Scriptures for evangelism and discipleship.

POC 23920

Remedies for Biblical Illiteracy

Almost every home has one or more Bibles. These new resources will help people to open them.

A recent national survey, conducted by the Barna Research Group and commissioned by Tyndale House Publishers and Zondervan Publishing House, has revealed that interest in spirituality is on the rise. According to the survey, 45 percent of Americans feel their own spirituality is more important today than it was three years ago.

Perhaps it is the approaching millennium that has awakened interest in spiritual matters and in the Scriptures and Bible resources. Perhaps the wide array of Bibles and Bible-related products that has been made available in recent years has contributed to the trend. Whatever the reason, interest in Bible resources today is sky high and shows no signs of waning.

A recent article in USA Today helped document the Bible's amazing popularity. It pointed out that, in the span of a year, Tyndale House Publishers doubled its Bible products and experienced a 41 percent increase in sales. Tyndale now has over 40 products based on its 1996 New Living Translation, and Zondervan boasts 46 products based on the widely used New International Version (NIV). According to the article, Bibles now come "in an explosion of format choices, enabling someone to build a Bible wardrobe for every age and stage of life, if not for every day of the week." Another way to put it is to say that publishers have created Bibles and Bible products that attempt to "scratch where Bible readers are itching." Among other things, publishers have developed Bibles that cater to the way people read the Bible. They have divided it, for example, into manageable chunks that enable a person to read the whole Bible in a year. They have designed and developed Bibles targeted for believers of various ages, life situations, and theological interests in order to make Scripture more clear and relevant to readers' lives. And at least to this point, the market has responded enthusiastically.

The booming market for Bible resources is a testimony first and foremost to the amazing depth of Scripture. Upon consid-

Preacher's Outline & Sermon Bible®

actual size of these volumes is 8 1/2 x 11" (much larger than shown in this sample). You will appreciate the large, readable type. Each volume has also been drilled to fit into a 3-ring binder if you choose to use your volumes with other sermon materials.

Limited Offer:
Take Romans
REG. ~~$28.95~~
Just $19.⁹⁵

CALL TOLL FREE:
800-887-8790

ROMANS 12:14-21

D. The Believer and Unbelievers. 12:14-21

18 If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men.

19 Dearlly beloved, avoid not yourselves, but rather give place unto wrath: for it is written, Vengeance is
I will repay, saith the Lord.

20 Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink: for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head.

21 Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with

DIVISION VIII

THE BELIEVER AND HIS DAILY BEHAVIOR

D. The Believer and Unbelievers, 12:14-21

D. The Believer and Unbelievers, 12:14-21

(12:14-21) Introduction: the believer is expected to conduct himself in the most noble of unbelievers. God expects His follower to control himself and to gain complete victory over sinners who persecute you (v.14). ... of men (v.15).

1. Bless those who persecute you (v.14).
2. Show genuine interest in the experiences of men (v.15).
3. Seek harmony and associate with the lowly (v.16).
4. Live above reproach (v.17).
5. Live at peace with all (v.18).
6. Give no place to revenge (v.19-21).

(12:14) Persecution: the believer is charged to do something that could be well of him. Therefore how difficult this is when you are verbally or physically persecute him. Picture how difficult this is when you are verbally or physically overlooked, slandered, cursed, abused, injured. You are to bless the person who persecute whether he is your...
 • classmate
 • friend
 • fellow communist
 • employee
 • fellow church member

- next door neighbor
- family member
- fellow worker
- classmate
- employee
- employer
- friend
- fellow comm
- fellow church

What does it mean to bless and to speak well of?
It means to speak well to our persecutors. We do not react against them at all. We do not try to hurt them either verbally or physically. On the contrary, we commendable about them and we commend them for it.

“Not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing: but contrariwise being called, that ye should inherit a blessing” (1 Pt.3:9).
 “Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and, and ye, with all malice: and be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, God for Christ’s sake hath forgiven you” (Eph.4:31-32).

2. It means to speak well about our persecutors. When speaking to others mention some commendable trait. We praise some "good thing" about the person.

"But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you; for they know not what they do." (Lk. 23:34).

I thought I think of the impact upon persecutors when an attitude of quietness is taken. Every persecutor is not won to Christ, but every persecutor is won to Christ by the Holy Spirit in the persecutor's quiet and calm. This is what God is after.

ACBR4

Remedies for Biblical Illiteracy

New American Standard Bible

UPDATED EDITION

Then God said, "Let there be light";
and there was light.

Continuing the tradition of Biblical excellence
for over 25 years.

About the NASB Update...

Discover the truth in the inspired Word of God by reading the New American Standard Bible. The updated edition continues the NASB's commitment to accuracy while increasing clarity and readability. Vocabulary, grammar, and sentence structure have been carefully updated for greater understanding and smoother reading. The NASB remains the most literally accurate Bible in the English language.

Look for the NASB Update in a variety of formats, including:

- Side-Column Reference Bible
- Text Bible in hardback, Gift and Award, and paperback editions
- BibleMaster Software (Foundation Publications)
- Ryrie Study Bible-Expanded Edition (Moody Press)
- Bible Software (Various Publishers)

Ask for the NASB Update at your local bookstore.

I'D LIKE MORE INFORMATION ON THE NASB UPDATE.

NAME _____
ADDRESS _____
CITY _____	STATE _____	ZIP _____
PHONE _____

For more information contact:

The Lockman Foundation
900 South Euclid Street, La Habra, CA 90631
(714) 879-3055

www.gospelcom.net/lockman

ering the many riches contained in the Bible, it should come as no surprise that those riches cannot be fully explored in 20 or 30 resources, or even in 200 or 300—or more. This is especially true given the fact that scholars and believers are far from being of one mind when it comes to how the Bible should be translated, interpreted, and applied. Add to this the fact that Bible scholarship continues to make advances, and there is no reason to think that market demand for Bible-related products will be satisfied any time soon.

Bible ignorance

No doubt the Bible resources that have been published in recent years have made lasting contributions to Bible knowledge and to the spiritual growth of countless believers. Yet the availability of Scripture does not automatically guarantee proficiency in biblical knowledge. Surveys conducted by Barna have consistently borne this out.

The typical American home has three Bibles, according to Barna, and 91 percent of all households have at least one. However, Barna's research points out the difference between owning a Bible and actually reading it or knowing what it says. Only 22 percent of respondents to a recent survey said they had read the Bible all the way through. Only 42 percent attributed the Sermon on the Mount to Jesus, and a whopping 80 percent wrongly believed that the Bible somewhere states, "God helps those who help themselves."

The many thorough and wide-ranging resources being turned out by Christian publishers together constitute a major assault on Bible ignorance. Each resource is intended in some way to mine the depths of Scripture while at the same time making the Bible more accessible—that is, easier to understand and to apply. Let us examine some of these resources.

Jewish roots

Several recent releases highlight and explore Christianity's roots in Judaism and Jewish culture. Jewish New Testament Publications, Inc., and Messianic Jewish Resources International tout the Complete Jewish Bible as the only English version of Scripture that is fully Jewish in style and presentation. This unique Bible follows the Hebrew order of the Old Testament, that with which Yeshua (Jesus) was familiar. It does not separate Old and New Testaments, and it offers the original Hebrew names for people, places, and concepts, providing readable English transliterations.

Availability of Scripture does not guarantee proficiency in biblical knowledge.

In this same vein, Hendrickson Publishers has brought back a book first published in 1909: Aspects of Rabbinic Theology, by Solomon Schechter (1847–1915), a leading thinker of Conservative Judaism at the turn of the twentieth century. Though it was written some 90 years ago, the book is considered to be a classic and a definitive treatment of the basic principles and concepts of Judaism, especially as found in the Talmud and Midrash.

Eerdmans has performed a great service to the world of biblical scholarship with the publication of The Masorah of Biblia Hebraica Stuttgartensia. This volume will be useful to all Hebrew scholars, but particularly to those who are just beginning to learn Hebrew. It fills a gap in introductory literature on the Masorah (the accumulated Jewish tradition on the correct Hebrew biblical text). The Eerdmans book, which provides an introduction and annotated glossary, was written by the late Page H. Kelley of Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Daniel S. Mynatt of Anderson (S.C.) College, and Timothy G. Crawford of Bluefield (Va.) College.

The content of What the Bible Says About the Ten Commandments (Leadership Ministries Worldwide) is clear from the title. This volume, very practical in its approach, explores the contemporary relevance of the Ten Commandments for both individuals and societies.

Finally, in his book GodStories (Judson Press), author H. Stephen Shoemaker employs Haggadah—the rabbinic way of storytelling—to give new life to familiar Bible stories. Weaving together ancient and modern stories in a way that brings multiple meanings to the surface, Shoemaker has produced a book sure to be appreciated by pastors and other believers, old and new.

Bibles

In recognition of the fact that many who read the Bible are seeking spiritual renewal, Tyndale House Publishers earlier this year released the Spiritual Renewal Bible, which, like many contemporary Bibles, is ideal for individuals or small groups. At every step of the way, this Bible's supplementary features guide readers on the path toward personal spiritual renewal. Each book of the Bible begins with a listing and brief discussion of that book's spiritual renewal themes. Text notes throughout highlight the Bible's messages as they relate to spiritual renewal.

In addition, this Bible identifies seven keys to spiritual renewal and provides devotionals throughout that draw attention to those keys. The devotionals are arranged in two reading cycles, one for the Old Testament and one for the New Testament. Each cycle contains seven different devotionals for each of the seven keys. This Bible is a perfect example of a publisher identifying what people want in a Bible and then providing it.

Tyndale has released, or is soon to release, three additional Bibles, each targeted to a specific audience. The Rock is a teen study Bible with hundreds of notes and features intended to help

Who better than Jesus to share the Gospel?

Find out how God has used the JESUS film to save 46 million worldwide, and is now using it to save America, one neighbor at a time.

There is no tool more powerful in any ministry than the Word of God.

There is no medium more powerful in our world today than film.

The JESUS video joins the power of both. It's the straight Gospel of Luke on film.

Some pictures are worth a thousand words. This one's worth 46 million personal commitments.

Over 46 million individuals worldwide have declared their commitments to Jesus Christ as a direct result of watching the JESUS movie. Right now, we're focused on reaching America's neighborhoods.

There are over 100 million homes in America to reach

Our goal is to get JESUS in every home. That means there are over 100 million reasons for you to say "Yes!" to help the rest of America see the most true-to-the-Word film about Jesus ever made.

Your FREE "JESUS Video Vision Kit" makes it easy for you to convince others to partner with you in continuing the awesome work God has begun with the JESUS Video Project in your local community.

Why is this film so powerful, and so important?

It's pure, it's precise, it's compelling, and it is a very well crafted film.

The JESUS film is the result of thousands of people working together towards one vision: Show the Word. A team of 500 Christian scholars and leaders worked together for five years to insure the film to be archaeologically, historically, and theologically accurate.

Millions of Americans have seen the JESUS video. Hundreds of thousands have professed their decisions for Christ as a result. Find out how you can help reach the rest in your neighborhood.

Witness the pure Gospel of Luke at work in the JESUS video

- Call or write now for your free JESUS Video Vision Kit.
- The JESUS Video Vision Kit includes a 12-minute video explanation of the simple and easy-to-use process that has proven to be incredibly effective in getting, showing and helping bring individuals to Christ with the JESUS video in your local community. It's yours for the asking. Will you ask?
- Make the call to the JESUS Video Project (a ministry of Campus Crusade for Christ). Then watch God use JESUS to make the Call to eternal life.

Pastors, Church Leaders: call now,
toll-free, to 1-888-JESUS31 (537-8731) ext. #873

Or write to: the JESUS Video Project, Dept #873
(a ministry of) Campus Crusade for Christ,
24600 Arrowhead Springs Rd., San Bernardino, CA 92414

© 1998 Campus Crusade for Christ. All rights reserved.

Remedies for Biblical Illiteracy

young people learn about God and how to make decisions that are morally right. It is the official Bible for respected youth specialist Josh McDowell's "Right from Wrong" campaign. Perhaps at no time in history has the need been greater for teens to discover the moral foundations provided by their Christian faith.

Tyndale's Slimline Reference Bible employs an ultra-thin design and easy-to-understand translation (New Living Translation) among its many other attractive features to make it ideal for commuters or travelers. Tyndale is also bringing back The Book. In the form of the Living Bible paraphrase, The Book sold nearly 3 million copies; its return will use the New Living Translation.

Reference tools

Among the most important Bible-related products to be released each year are reference tools, such as dictionaries and atlases. These resources enable scholars, pastors, and laypeople alike to do original research and to come up with new ideas and insights regarding the Bible's meaning and relevance. Hendrickson describes its Wycliffe Bible Dictionary (formerly available in two volumes) as "a Bible library at your fingertips." This resource, edited by Charles F. Pfeiffer, Howard Vos, and John Rea, contains articles written by more than 200 evangelical scholars. It provides extensive background information not only on the names and places mentioned in the Bible, but on important historical and doctrinal themes. This nearly 2,000-page volume retails for only $34.95, making it affordable for college or seminary students.

Hendrickson has also released a revised edition of its Handbook of Biblical Chronology, by Jack Finegan. As the title suggests, this resource focuses on the various and numerous biblical references to time. Many Bible students avoid this area because it is so confusing.

This resource recognizes that an understanding of how ancient cultures referred to time is important to a complete understanding of the Bible. The volume includes more than 100 tables that catalog the diverse methods of time reckoning in Bible times, ranging from Egyptian civil calendars to early Roman and Julian calendars. The resource will certainly help its readers make more sense of references to time that may have seemed confusing, if not contradictory.

Yet another resource from Hendrickson is based on the accurate presumption that the Bible becomes more meaningful with a fuller understanding of the geography of the Holy Land. The Concise Bible Atlas (subtitled A Geographical Survey of Bible History) was originally published in 1988 as Baker's Concise Bible Atlas. Written by J. Carl Laney and geared to a popular audience, this resource is essentially a geographical and historical survey of the Bible. It provides an invaluable

(continued on page 12)

Knowing how much God loves you:

"Jesus loves you"—this you know. But what you might not feel is the full force of God's head-over-heels love for you. And frankly, it will floor you. In Love Beyond Reason, author John Ortberg's powerful, moving illustrations open the floodgates to the vastness of the Father's incredible love. Isn't it time God's awesome love moved from your head into your heart, transforming not only you, but those around you? Fill your cup to overflowing by calling 1-800-727-3480 or just visit your local Christian bookstore today.

Feeling how much God loves you

LOVE
BEYOND
REASON

SAVING GOD'S LOVE FROM
THE HEART OF JESUS

The New Living Translation is the fastest-growing translation because it always focuses on giving you the clearest and simplest understanding of what a passage means. When translations follow the Greek word structure too closely, it often doesn't read as well in English. Compare this passage from Romans 1:1-5:

King James Version:

Paul, a servant of Jesus Christ, called to be an apostle, separated unto the gospel of God,² (Which he had promised afore by his prophets in the holy scriptures,) ³ Concerning his son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh; ⁴ And declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead: ⁵ By whom we have received grace and apostleship, for obedience to the faith among all nations, for his name:...

New International Version:

Paul, a servant of Christ Jesus, called to be an apostle and set apart for the gospel of God—² the gospel he promised beforehand through his prophets in the Holy Scriptures ³ regarding his Son, who as to His human nature was a descendant of David,⁴ and who through the Spirit of holiness was declared with power to be the Son of God by his resurrection from the dead: Jesus Christ our Lord. ⁵ Through him and for his name's sake, we received grace and apostleship to call people from among all the Gentiles to the obedience that comes from faith.

New Living Translation:

This letter is from Paul, Jesus Christ's slave, chosen by God to be an apostle and sent out to preach his Good News.² This Good News was promised long ago by God through his prophets in the holy Scriptures. ³ It is the good news about his son, Jesus, who came as a man, born into King David's royal family line. ⁴ And Jesus Christ our Lord was shown to be the Son of God when God powerfully raised him from the dead by means of the Holy Spirit. ⁵ Through Christ, God has given us the privilege and authority to tell Gentiles everywhere what God has done for them, so that they will believe and obey him, bringing glory to his name.

Have You Experienced It Yet?

Open a copy of the Holy Bible, New Living Translation, and you'll know. This is going to be a whole new experience. Because here in your hands is the easiest-to-understand Bible translation you've ever read.

But understandable as it is, the New Living Translation is a truly accurate and faithful translation, the work of ninety world-class scholars laboring for more than seven years.

Which makes it perfect for both devotional reading and serious study. And it's available in over eighty different editions and bindings, including the Life Application Study Bible, The One Year Bible and the TouchPoint Bible.

Ask for the New Living Translation at your favorite bookstore. And experience God's Word like you never have before.

Tyndale House Publishers, Inc.
www.tyndale.com

Live It Now

Unlock the Word.

ISBN 0-89957-700-8

The Hebrew-Greek Key Word Study Bible is both practical and easy to use. Everything is there for in-depth study of God's Word; footnotes, dictionaries, Strong's concordance, lexical aids and more. Take a look for yourself at your local Christian bookstore or call us at 1-800-251-7296.

AMG
PUBLISHERS

www.amginternational.org

The New Standard of Excellence

The Baker Reference Library

Evangelical Dictionary of Biblical Theology

0-8010-2049-2 $44.99 934 pages

Five hundred articles by 125 scholars give church leaders up-to-date insights into the biblical teaching on a wide variety of topics, ranging from the individual books of the Bible (e.g., the theology of Isaiah), to major theological ideas (e.g., atonement or prophecy), to topics of contemporary concern (e.g., abortion).

"I will keep my copy at my fingertips." — Jerry Vines

"A preacher will want to keep the EDBT near his desk as he studies."

— Haddon Robinson

"One of the most useful and practical theological reference books in my library."

— Warren W. Wiersbe

Topical Analysis of the Bible

0-8010-3205-9 $44.99 912 pages

Complete texts organized into easy-to-use outlines reference scriptural teaching on various doctrines and Christian life topics.

Evangelical Dictionary of Theology

0-8010-3413-2 $44.99 1,232 pages

Over 1250 articles cover the fields of systematic theology, historical theology, biblical theology, philosophical theology, and theological ethics.

Evangelical Commentary on the Bible

0-8010-3202-4 $44.99 1,248 pages

This comprehensive one-volume commentary by thirty-eight scholars offers intelligible, concise explanations of each biblical book.

BAKER

Available from your local bookstore or call 800-877-2665. www.bakerbooks.com

Remedies for Biblical Illiteracy

(continued from page 8)

overview of 16 historical periods and of major biblical events, all in the context of their respective geographical settings.

In similar fashion, the Holman Bible Atlas, by Thomas V. Brisco, focuses on the geography of the biblical world, making use of 140 full-color maps and 140 full-color illustrations. The atlas sheds light on every period of biblical history from the patriarchs through the third century of the Christian era. It pays particular attention to the international powers—Egypt, Assyria, Babylon, Persia, Greece, and Rome—that had major influences on the development of Christianity.

Finally in this category, The Holman Ultimate Giant Print Bible Dictionary & Concordance is now available as a companion to Holman's best-selling Super Giant Print reference Bible. With 16-point type and a price tag of just $16.99, this is a perfect gift for senior adults or others with special visual needs.

Commentaries

Bible commentaries rank among the most important vehicles for combating biblical ignorance. Abingdon Press has released the twelfth volume of The New Interpreter's Bible, which encompasses the books from Hebrews through Revelation. This 12-volume commentary replaces the highly respected Interpreter's Bible, published by Abingdon in the 1950s.

The sheer length of The Book of Isaiah, Chapters 40–66, the latest in the highly regarded New International Commentary on the Old Testament series (Eerdmans), testifies to its depth, as Asbury Theological Seminary professor John Oswalt uses nearly 700 pages of commentary to bring 27 chapters from the Old Testament to life.

Duane A. Garrett has written the latest installment (the Old Testament books of Hosea and Joel) to Broadman & Holman's The New American Commentary. This commentary series is distinguished by its focus on uncovering what the text actually says.

Meanwhile, Zondervan has released three new volumes in its NIV Application Commentary Series: Colossians/Phile- mon (David Garland), 1 & 2 Thessalonians (Michael Holmes), and Acts (Ajith Fernando). This highly regarded series is designed to bridge the gap between the biblical text and contemporary life.

The books of the Bible

While most Bible reference tools cover the entirety of Scripture, some zero in on a particular section or book of the Bible. Several recently released resources fit this category. Some lean toward being more scholarly in their approach, while others are more practical in orientation.

Commentaries rank among the most important vehicles for combatting biblical ignorance.

The Life Lessons series from Word, featuring the thoughts and insights of popular author Max Lucado, is eminently practical. The most recent releases in this series are 1 & 2 Peter and Revelation. Each is broken down into 12 lessons, all of which contain probing questions designed to explore the meaning and relevance of selected passages. Each lesson contains a short inspirational essay from Lucado as well as ample space for recording thoughts. This series is ideal for those who like to focus their daily devotional times on books of the Bible and want to be active participants in the learning process. (Those who use it should make sure to sharpen their pencils first!)

A similar approach to Bible study lies behind the Spirit-Filled Bible Discovery Guides series from Thomas Nelson. Popular charismatic author and pastor Jack W. Hayford serves as executive editor of the series. Recent releases cover the Old Testament books of Ezra & Nehemiah; 1 & 2 Samuel & 1 Chronicles; 1 & 2 Kings & 2 Chronicles; and Joshua & Judges. The lone recent New Testament release covers 2 Corinthians, 1 & 2 Timothy, and Titus. The lessons are highly interactive in addition to being very thorough and detailed. Those who use these books as a daily devotional resource will likely want to break each lesson into several parts, since each will take considerably longer than 15 or 20 minutes to complete. The lessons are ideal for Sunday school or small-group study.

Highly respected scholar Elizabeth Achtemeier has written an extremely valuable book whose title, Preaching from the Minor Prophets (Eerdmans), accurately captures the book's content. This is a perfect resource for preachers who do not want to ignore the 12 books of the minor prophets but feel they lack the understanding to preach on them with any authority. In exploring the theological richness of these books, Achtemeier not only provides theological and historical context, but suggests sermon titles and provides homiletical exposition intended to stimulate preachers. This approach is an ingenious way to garner interest in a section of Scripture that many do not find inherently interesting. And it's done in a way to make the resource readily usable, especially to those who occupy the pulpit on Sunday mornings.

New Testament scholar Susan R. Garrett, in The Temptations of Jesus in Mark's Gospel (Eerdmans), focuses on key passages of Mark in light of first-century cultural conventions relating to the testing or tempting of the righteous. The result is a fresh perspective on the gospel writer's views on several important topics, including the person and work of Jesus and the nature of Christian discipleship.

This is not the only recent release from Eerdmans that paves new scholarly

YOU CAN'T CHANGE A LIFE WITHOUT TOUCHING ONE.

Before you step out in front, you need to know what makes people follow. In his new book, The 21 Irrefutable Laws of Leadership, renowned speaker and best-selling author John C. Maxwell lays out the unchanging principles he's learned over a lifetime of corporate and organizational achievements. It's the winning leadership touch you've been looking for.

FROM AMERICA'S EXPERT ON LEADERSHIP

JOHN C. MAXWELL

*The 21 Irrefutable
Laws of Leadership*
ISBN 0-7852-7431-6

Also available on audio
ISBN 0-7812-7478-6

JOHN C. MAXWELL

THE 21 IRREFUTABLE
LAWS OF LEADERSHIP

Follow Them
and People Will Follow You

THOMAS~NELSON
publishers

CELEBRATING 100 YEARS OF HONORING
GOD AND SERVING PEOPLE

Available in fine bookstores everywhere or call 1-800-231-0442.
Please refer to Source Code 06818.

Remedies for Biblical Illiteracy ground. In The Missions of Jesus and the Disciples According to the Fourth Gospel, Andreas J. Köstenberger explores the relationship between the mission of Jesus and the mission of the disciples as presented in the Gospel of John. The author gives special attention to the question of how later generations of disciples are related to Jesus' original followers.

Twenty-five distinguished scholars survey the theology of the early church as presented by the author of Acts in the book Witness to the Gospel: The Theology of Acts, also from Eerdmans. The book's 25 essays address the major themes of Acts, including God's plan of salvation, the renewing work of the Holy Spirit, and the relationship between Jews and Gentiles in the church. The volume is edited by I. Howard Marshall of the University of Aberdeen in Scotland and David Peterson of Oak Hill Theological College in London.

In Exodus: Go Out and Meet God

(Eerdmans/Handsel), retired South African Anglican bishop Godfrey Ashby explores the relationship between the Exodus event and the gospel of Jesus Christ. He also explores the relevance of Exodus for the struggle for liberation taking place in various parts of the Third World.

Among these kinds of thematic approaches to books of the Bible can be found a more commentarylike type of approach. In A Commentary on Jeremiah: Exile and Homecoming (Eerdmans), widely respected Old Testament scholar Walter Brueggemann explores the historical setting and the message of Jeremiah, including the relevance of that message for today. Brueggemann contends that the Old Testament prophet's voice issues an urgent invitation to faith, obedience, justice, and compassion.

Topical studies

Four resources written by Larry Richards and published by Thomas Nelson will appeal to those readers interested in pursuing a particular biblical topic. Every Good and Evil Angel in the Bible, Every Covenant and Promise in the Bible, Every Miracle and Wonder in the Bible, and Every Prayer and Petition in the Bible are all part of Nelson's Everything in the Bible Series. These readable volumes are ideal for a pastor's reference library and can also be used as the basis for Sunday-school classes or small-group topical studies.

Leadership Ministries Worldwide provides another subject for a topical study in The Tabernacle, the latest in LMW's Outline Bible Study series. A study of the tabernacle explores both God's holiness and God's mercy, attributes that are fundamental to God's working in history.

Hendrickson continues its decades-old "All Series" books with a topical study on the Second Coming. All About the Second Coming is based primarily on a study of the Book of Revelation. Herbert Lockyer, Jr., edited this volume based largely on his father's notes. Given the millennial fervor that has already begun and is sure to remain, this would be an excellent resource for small-group study.

For younger or newer believers, Thomas Nelson Publishers' What You Need to Know About Salvation in 12 Lessons and What You Need to Know About Defending Your Faith, both written by Max Anders, are perfect resources. The same could be said of Nelson's entire What You Need to Know series, which now consists of 10 titles that explore the basic doctrines and beliefs of the Christian faith. The author's interesting and readable style, as well as frequent reviews of the material covered, make these books ideal overviews. No one could read through this series and not feel that he or she has a solid doctrinal grounding in the Christian faith. Though ideal for newer Christians, the reviews are also helpful for those who have been part of the church for a long time.

Meanwhile, three topical studies from Eerdmans are geared toward the more experienced Bible scholar. Rainer Riesner addresses many of the scholarly ques-

The Choice of Independent Ministers for Over One Hundred Years

The faces of the Evangelical Church Alliance are made of pastors, evangelists, chaplains, missionaries and parachurch ministers who stand united to spread the gospel throughout the world.

The E.C.A. is interdenominational in nature and provides ordination and licensing to qualified ministers seeking a reputable organization that continues to preserve evangelical doctrine and high standards for the ministry.

ECA
EVANGELICAL CHURCH ALLIANCE

P.O. Box 9, Bradley, IL 60915

Phone: 815.937.0720 Fax: 815.937.0001

E-Mail: eca@keynet.net

Web Site: www.keynet.net/~eca

We've worn
your shoes.
That's why we know they need to come off every so often.

Ministry was never meant to be a burden. But when the pressures mount and understanding is scarce, please know Focus on the Family's Pastoral Ministries is here for you.

Our pastors and counselors have dedicated their lives to serving others in ministry. They've walked your path, knowing feet that bring the Good News can get tired. Isn't it time you let others minister to you?

Serving His Servants.

We're here to help.
Toll-free 1-877-233-4455

pastoral ministries
FOCUS ON THE FAMILY®

Remedies for Biblical Illiteracy

tions relating to early Pauline chronology and theology in Paul's Early Period: Chronology, Mission Strategy, Theology, which was originally published in German. The first volume in the late Henri de Lubac's multivolume study of medieval exegesis is now available in English. Originally published in French, the first English volume is titled The Four Senses of Scripture. Finally, Joseph A. Fitzmyer has added eight studies of important Pauline and Lucan topics to his second edition of To Advance the Gospel, part of Eerdmans' Biblical Resource Series.

Applied spirituality

Virtually all Bibles and Bible-related tools have implications for spiritual growth. Three recently released resources from NavPress appear to uphold spiritual growth as their primary, if not their exclusive, purpose. Spiritual director Jan Johnson, in Listening to God, offers 30 Bible studies for meditation and spiritual formation. The book is broken into six parts, each of which is sure to touch the felt needs and goals of many a reader, as evidenced by the titles: "Finding Intimacy with God," "Making Progress in the Spiritual Life," "Healing Life's Wounds," "Having the Heart of Christ," "Building Relationships," and "Moving Beyond Mediocrity."

A NavPress Spiritual Formation Book, The River Within, by Jeff Imbach, seeks to restore readers' passion and joy in Christian living. And in Help Lord, I'm Sinking, Carole Mayhall examines lessons she learned in the midst of her sister's illness and ultimate death from lymphatic leukemia.

NavPress has also published an issue-oriented book, Righteous Sinners, in which author/scholar Ron Julian addresses the Lordship Salvation debate. It is an issue about which Julian has been thinking for over 25 years; and the results are apparent in this very readable theological work. The author addresses the strengths and potential liabilities in both sides of the debate. His conclusions are difficult to dispute, which may explain why theologian J. I. Packer has endorsed Julian's work as follows: "Biblically exact and pastorally profound, this book is a gem!"

Indeed, many gems can be found among the recent Bible-related releases as we ride this new wave of popularity for history's most popular book by far. And many more are on their way. Publishers have done their part and will continue to do so. It is up to readers not to be content merely to own these rich Bible resources but to read and study them. As that happens, Bible ignorance will be dealt a crushing blow. We can only hope that when George Barna does his next survey of Bible knowledge, he, along with the rest of us, will be pleasantly surprised.

By L. Katherine Robbin, a freelance writer in Philadelphia, PA.

The truth about lies and why good people tell them.

Jesus said "I am the way, the TRUTH, and the life," yet as Christians, we allow ourselves to indulge in small lies and deceptions every day. Author Diane Komp, M.D. dissects this startlingly common behavior with surgeon-like precision in her new book Anatomy of A Lie. Find out how little lies are at the heart of a bigger problem and what you can do to stop small deceptions from becoming a spiritual cancer in your life. Call 1-800-727-3480 or visit your local Christian bookstore today.

Zondervan Publishing House
www.zondervan.com

FREE OFFER

READ AND FOLLOW SOME OF THE MOST IMPORTANT ADVANCES IN BIBLICAL TRUTH SINCE THE REFORMATION

BIBLE STUDY LEAFLETS
WRITTEN BY
OTIS Q. SELLERS

A Library of over 200 Biblical subjects. Choose and order by selected titles at just a few cents each or as 100 subject bound volumes. Well studied and plainly written in an easy to read four-page format. The results of over sixty years of progressive study in the Word of God, searching to uncover the truth.

A Sample Packet and List Sent Free. No Obligation, No Solicitation or Visitation

THE WORD OF TRUTH MINISTRY
P.O. BOX 90259, PASADENA, CA 91109

YOU CAN DO IT.

Prepare your sermon. Do high-end Bible research. Write your seminary papers. Translate the Bible. Review your Greek and Hebrew. Do complex and simple searches on 46 Bible versions in 14 languages with 6 lexicons. See original text parsing and lexicon entries for Greek, Hebrew, and many other versions by waving your mouse over any word. Use the fastest and most versatile program available. Type right-to-left Hebrew. Find all occurrences of the Granville-Sharp Rule. Get to know the program using the tutorial videos.

Use the accented Greek and pointed Hebrew fonts in other programs.

Quickly insert verses from any version into your favorite word processor. Build complex searches with Command Line and Morphology Assistants. Compare passages in interlinear format or in parallel columns. Exegete your text with lexical, morphological, and syntactical analysis tools.

Seek Wisdom and Knowledge.

With BibleWorks, You Can Do It.

SPECIAL
$200
 +P&H
 MSRP $395

The language barrier is broken.

For free brochure, call 1-800-74-BIBLE.

<http://www.bibleworks.com>

HERMENEUTIKA P.O. Box 2200 Dept. BRU Big Fork, MT 59911-2200 USA
 PHONE: (406) 837-2244 FAX: (406) 837-4433 EMAIL: sales@bibleworks.com

VIRTUAL EXEGESIS

Bible software is changing the way we study the Word.

If you take the Bible seriously and you have a computer, you should have a good Bible-study software package. We talked to several people who have used Bible software for awhile to learn why they prefer it. While we weren't surprised to find that all of them still read a print Bible daily, most said they can't imagine going back to nonelectronic books for word studies, lesson and sermon preparation, or Bible-based writing. Today products exist for every budget, ministry orientation, and range of study needs.

Academic pioneers

Seminarians at the beginning of their ministries' learning curve find original Bible languages the steepest part of that uphill road, says Wendell Stoltzfus, a seminarian and bookstore employee at Westminster Theological Seminary in Philadelphia. "I think people buy the [Bible-study] software here at the seminary for translation [studies when working from the original languages]," he says.

"When you have AGES Software's Early [Church] Fathers collection of 42 volumes [on one CD-ROM], it cuts down on having to pull so many books from the shelf," says Charles Biggs, another Westminster seminarian and bookstore employee. Biggs also speaks well of other publishers' multivolume electronic libraries, especially when used in one research project. "I didn't have the time to read through every book," he explains. So he searched for the specific ideas he needed, and the software pulled up every reference contained in every book on the CD-ROM. "It keeps you from having to go the library," he says.

Beginners should be wary lest their Bible software become a crutch, Biggs cautions. One Westminster professor claims that those who rely on Bible software before they become grounded in Greek and Hebrew can handicap their growth. Biggs says 15 percent of today's students have laptops, though fewer than 5 percent bring them to language classes. As Biggs suggests, it's more constructive for seminarians to think through their thoughts in class—and save the high-powered tools for study time.

Interlinear Greek and Hebrew texts are what Sr. Elizabeth Picken, theological consultant to the bishop of the Diocese of Saginaw, Michigan, wants in her high-end Bible software. "I think it's much easier to use Bible software than a concordance or a multiple-translation book," she says. "It's easier than thumbing through commentaries. If I want something specific, I can look through numerous volumes in less time."

Pastors on the cutting edge

Tom Cucuzza, pastor of Northland Bible Baptist Church (St. Cloud, Minn.), has used Bible software for about 10 years—ever since he began running Scripture Scanner on an 8088-based PC. Then he read an ad for WORDsearch for DOS, which had Strong's Concordance, and has stayed with the program ever since, relying today on WORDsearch for Windows. Cucuzza sees clear advantages in using Bible software, though it hasn't supplanted his paper sword yet. "I use my computer exclusively for study," he says. "However, I do my devotions in my leatherbound Bible because it's more comfortable." But he would not choose to give up his computer either. "I see the computer as more of a research tool. Obviously it's easier to have 15 books open on my computer than on my desk."

Fr. Brian Cavanaugh of Franciscan University (Steubenville, Ohio) says, "I use Liguori's Bible on Disk for Catholics and find it most useful. It has improved my sermons [to have] the Barclay commentaries and the Hebrew/Greek nuances of a word in English." Br. Daniel

Korn, director of mission effectiveness for Liguori Publications (Liguori, Mo.), has been using Liguori Faithware products for over a year, mainly to write prayer services and pamphlets. "I used to do all that manually," he explains: he would photocopy pages, spread them out on a table, mark the copy using a highlighter, then type the desired worship texts on a computer. "Now I take it and [assemble] it directly, all at my desk, at one time."

Korn still uses his print Bible for preaching because, he says, "it doesn't look good to run off sheets" or read from them. He also uses it for spiritual direction, because "it's much more proper and symbolic to have a book and its readings." On the other hand, he notes, for private study a computer can help a person search Leviticus completely for a certain word or phrase—and one doesn't even have to spell the word completely, thanks to the artificial intelligence of Bible programs' search tools. It's not an either/or question, he suggests, because one can own a print and an electronic Bible and benefit from both. "It helps me with my paper Bible, having perused over all these sources [electronically]."

Men and women with a mission

Sharon Gray, a Wycliffe missionary leading an Old Testament translation project in Mali, West Africa, spoke with us while stateside for training in Dallas. "I primarily use Bible Windows," she says, "when I'm preparing to work with the [native] Dogon translators. My job is to check the exegesis. I search on words that recur throughout the book, which I would never do [otherwise] because to sit down with a concordance would just be too great a job." For her work, Gray says she requires "all sorts of different versions" to check against the actual meaning of the text. She also needs French translations because she communicates with her collaborators in French. "I work better on a table with books in front of me, but I can see that in the future, if I have a laptop, it's going to be much more convenient," she says.

Virtual Exegesis

Missionaries have budgetary and logistical constraints as well. Indeed, the challenges of shipments to and from the Ivory Coast have kept Gray from upgrading her computer and software until later this year. Nor can missionaries always use the latest technology. For one thing, their work is specialized; for another, their computers are typically not the most current model. Gray's supervisor recommended she consider switching to a different program, but she found it complicated. She says, "I guess you get used to one thing, and then you judge everything else by it." In summary, says Gray, her Bible software "makes me lazy on my Greek and Hebrew, because the computer tells me how to parse my verbs—but it all saves time."

Bob Liichow of Inner-City Christian Discernment Ministry (Grosse Pointe, Mich.) uses a range of programs for his cutting-edge ministry. Logos Bible Software, Bible Windows, WORDsearch, and LESSONmaker, with AGES Software's Master Christian Library and the "very inexpensive" Early Church Fathers from EBS all help him write sermons and books as well as produce daily updates to his Web site (<http://www.discernment.org>). "Computers have been a real blessing," he observed. "There's so much information on the Internet that I think we're going to be culpable before God if we don't teach well and become the most learned and best trained [ministers, and faithful]. There's so much out there."

Not for prayer

Pastors and academics do most of the research-oriented study for which Bible software excels. Yet seeking or possessing a ministerial degree is not required in order to use a Bible program.

John M. Espey of Perth, Western Australia, says, "I was a user of Online Bible (dos) for many years but could never afford a new version as I am on a war-service pension. It was great while I had it, and it proved very useful while I spent seven years in bed. It made reading my Bible so much easier, as I could not hold the hard-copy version."

Robert Mills is director of publications for PLC Publications (Lenoir, N.C.), home of The Presbyterian Layman. He has used QuickVerse and BibleWorks during the last eight years. He says he uses a print Bible for his devotions, and it's always open when writing Sunday-school lessons "just to look up one quick reference or to have a whole passage in front of me, rather than to be flipping back and forth between my word processor and my Bible program."

Depending on what's appropriate for the situation, Mills is comfortable using either a print or electronic Bible. Usually,

ὁ λόγος

For Windows & Macintosh Bible Software

דבר

Visit the Scholars@GRAMCORD.org

Since 1976 The GRAMCORD Institute, a non-profit consortium of Greek & Hebrew seminary professors, has set a standard for serious study of the Biblical texts. Scholarly reviewers consistently rate GRAMCORD for Windows and Accordance with GRAMCORD for Macintosh "most powerful" and "most advanced" – and both are also the favorite choice of thousands of pastors and students. While the for-profit commercial publishers invest in massive advertising campaigns, we invest in superlative software and research results of journal publication quality.

For independent reviews, program tours, downloadable demos, and Biblical studies news, visit us at <http://www.GRAMCORD.org>

New for Accordance for Macintosh:

- Accordance Bible Atlas – build your own maps, integrated with all other modules...$69
- CD-ROM Library #3 including NAS95 and notes, Jenni-Westerman Hebrew Theological Lexicon, LEH LXX Lexicon, E. Tov MT/LXX, and more.

CT/BRU Reader's Special Offer for Windows:

- The classic scholar's tool: GRAMCORD Greek NT for Windows...$125
- Scholar's Bundle: GRAMCORD Greek NT & GRAMCORD Hebrew MT for Windows...$195
- Free downloadable add-on modules and program updates

Consult pricing and bundling options before ordering.

THE GRAMCORD INSTITUTE

For Windows or Macintosh Biblical study tools:

PHONE: (360) 576-3000

FAX: (503) 761-0626

Scholars@GRAMCORD.org

<http://www.GRAMCORD.org>

2218 NE Brookview Drive, Vancouver, WA 98686, U.S.A.

SCHOOLS WITH MASTERS AND DOCTORAL PROGRAMS

The NEXT GREAT LEAP
for equipping church leaders
is really
a STEP BACK.

Back to the way Jesus himself equipped and trained the 12. At DENVER SEMINARY, we're following the example of the Master Professor with an emphasis on hands-on learning directed by EXPERIENCED MENTORS. Learn more about the seminary education with an innovative approach to knowing, being and doing. We borrowed it from the best!

1-800-922-3040 Ext. 278
e-mail: admit@densem.edu
www.gospelcom.net/densem/

DENVER SEMINARY

P.O. Box 10,000 • Denver, CO 80250

Knox Is Here For You!

"Apply your heart to instruction"
(Proverbs 23.2)

Knox is here with solid
Reformation theology to equip you to change the world for Christ.

•Doctor of Ministry
•Master of Divinity
•Biblical and Theological Studies
•Certificate in Biblical Studies

1-800-344-5669
E-mail: knox@crpc.org

KNOX
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Fort Lauderdale, Florida
D. James Kennedy, Chancellor

SPECIAL ADVERTISING SECTION Virtual Exegesis

he says, "I'm sitting here with books spread out around me; that's the way I work. But QuickVerse [on a computer] is much quicker than [just] me with a Strong's Concordance."

"I'm a layperson, of course," says Kay Hall, a freelance writer based in Cocoa Beach, Florida. "I don't know Greek or Hebrew, but I've learned inductive Bible study through Precept Ministries of Chattanooga, Tennessee, so I really like being able to access the meaning of the original Greek or Hebrew words with only one or two clicks [of a mouse]." Because it has Strong's numbers plus Greek and Hebrew dictionaries, she uses the Online Bible on her Macintosh "to support the Bible-study classes I take through Precept—they have daily homework—[and for] topical studies, when I have something to look up. The Online Bible has Nave's and Thompson Chain Reference; those are good tools for topical studies."

Personal prayer time is different, though. "It is nice to curl up with the leather-bound [Bible], so I use that for my daily reading," she says. "For prayer, you wouldn't use the computer," says Sr. Elizabeth Picken. "The whole ambiance is more comfortable" with a paper-based Bible, especially because you can take it anywhere.

A new generation

"I think [Bible software is] an immensely valuable resource, because it allows for quicker and more specific research," says John Kohlenberger of Portland, Oregon, who prepared the concordances for the NIV. He's used Bible software for 20 years. However, Kohlenberger says pastors now in their forties are on the cusp of the shift from paper to screen. "If you have something against computers, then I guess you'd prefer a book. You tend to stay with what you've got," he says. Kohlenberger predicts Bible software will catch on faster "as laptop and notebook computers keep getting smaller, and as people use computers more when they're younger."

By Steve Deyo, former editor in chief of ComputerUser magazine and currently president of the Deyo Group Online. He may be reached at steve@deyo.com.

Multnomah Biblical Seminary

MISSION: Ministry

DR. BRUCE FONG: MBS faculty; Promise Keeper's keynote speaker and co-founder of Clear Creek Community Church.

DR. PAMELA REEVE: MBS Women's Ministry program adviser; pioneered the first women's ministry program in the U.S. at Multnomah.

MULTNOMAH BIBLICAL SEMINARY is the perfect "mission headquarters" for you, with experienced instructors, tested programs, agency partners (Mission Portland Networking; International Renewal Ministries), and an urban mission field at your doorstep. If you want to join a faith-building community and put solid Biblical training to work in a vital ministry internship, then you must explore Multnomah Biblical Seminary. There may be no better place to prepare for the mission God has for you.

MULTNOMAH BIBLICAL SEMINARY
"Where Ministry is the Word"

Mail: 8435 N.E. Glisan St.
Portland, Oregon 97220
Toll Free: 1-800-275-4672
Internet: www.multnomah.edu
Email: admiss@multnomah.edu

KEVIN MOUNT: MBS Grad Class of '93; Director of Education and Career Services at the Portland Rescue Mission.

Where will your Church be when the new millennium Arrives?

Time is ticking away, with the year 2000 and many new opportunities just around the corner. To keep up with our everchanging society, it's time for spiritual leadership that meets many diverse needs. Becoming a leader of tomorrow means beginning today... at The Joy Leadership Center.

You'll share the secrets of what really works... to truly start your future now. Our innovative leadership training bridges the gaps between generations, cultures and denominations. You'll challenge yourself, network with skilled mentors, and sharpen your vision in a creative setting designed to inspire you to be a world-class leader.

Whether you select a one-day seminar conducted in your region, a four-day conference in beautiful Phoenix, or an extended period of individual coaching, the ultimate in personal enrichment will be yours. At "Building a Church for New Generations," you'll discover what 25,000 pastors and lay leaders have already learned. Make the commitment today, and become a leader for the new millennium.

Call now to attend a conference in your area (602) 561-0500

Joy Leadership Center

21000 N. 75th Ave. Glendale, AZ 85308

Telephone: (602) 561-0500

Website: www.joyonline.org

e-mail: registration@joyonline.org

The Joy Leadership Center is affiliated with Community Church of Joy

Robert H. Schuller Institute for Successful Church Leadership

January 25-28, 1999 at the Crystal Cathedral

DR. ROBERT H. SCHULLER
Founder and Senior
Pastor, Crystal
Cathedral,
Garden Grove, CA

ARVELA SCHULLER
Crystal Cathedral,
Garden Grove, CA

BISHOP T. GARROTT
BENJAMIN, JR.
Light of the World
Christian Church
Indianapolis, IN

BISHOP CHARLES
E. BLAKE
West Angeles Church
of God, in Christ
Los Angeles, CA

REV. KIRBYJON CALDWELL
Windsor Village United Methodist Church
Houston, TX

MR. MILLARD FULLER
Founder, Habitat for Humanity,
Americus, GA

DR. FRANK
HARRINGTON
Preachtree
Presbyterian Church,
Atlanta, GA

REV. BILL HYBELS
Willow Creek
Community Church
South Barrington, IL

DR. TED NISSEN, JR.
Colonial Presbyterian
Church,
Kansas City, MO

DR. LYLE A. SCHALLER
Author, Parish and Church Consultant,
Naperville, IL

DR. WALT KALLESTAD
Community
Church of Joy
Glendale, AZ

SPECIAL MUSIC

KEN MEDEMA
Musician
Escondido
Brian Patch Music

WORKSHOP LEADERS

THE IMPORTANCE OF SETTING
GOALS FOR YOUR CHURCH
Father Hank Albietz

CULTIVATING LEADERSHIP IN
YOUR CHURCH
Reverend Blair Anderson

CHRISTIANITY AND ISLAM -
THE COMMON GROUND
Dr. William W. Baker

ORGANIZING A PASTORS FINANCES
Dr. Wayne C. Barrett, CFP

LEADERSHIP THROUGH SPIRITUAL GIFTS
Reverend Brian Bauknight

DIRECTING AND GUIDING A SUCCESSFUL
CHURCH STAFF
Dr. Fulton W. Buntain

BUILDING A SUCCESSFUL SMALL
CHURCH MINISTRY
Reverend Doretta Clark

SUCCESSFUL PRINCIPLES I HAVE
LEARNED FROM DR. SCHULLER
Dr. Ray Cotton

BEREAVEMENT MINISTRY
Mr. Larry Davis

BUILDING A CITY CHURCH
Dr. J. Howard Edington

BECOMING A LEADER OF LEADERS
Dr. Dale Galloway

THE MINISTRY FAMILY: BUILDING
A STRONG TEAM
Mrs. Margi Galloway

THE HEART OF PREACHING
Reverend Dr. Deborah Gill

FUNDRAISING STRATEGIES
Mr. Ben Gill

A PASTOR'S HEART
Reverend L. H. Hardwick

RACIAL RECONCILIATION: BUILDING A
RACIALLY DIVERSE MINISTRY

Dr. Mark Horst
Rev. Peter G. Singletary, Jr.

PREACHING TO THE BABY BUSTERS
Reverend Cliff Melvin

REACHING GENERATION X
Reverend Tim Milner

SPIRITUAL INVESTING: SECRETS TO
FINANCIAL SUCCESS

Mr. Gary Moore

BUILDING A CHURCH FROM SCRATCH
Dr. Norman Neaves

REACHING THE UNCHURCHED
Dr. Juan Carlos Ortiz

READY SET GO! USING WHAT YOU HAVE LEARNED BACK HOME
Dr. Randolph Riggs

A CONVERSATION WITH LYLE SCHALLER
Dr. Lyle Schaller

KEEPING BALANCE IN A PASTORS LIFE
Dr. Robert A. Schuller

ROBERT SCHULLER'S SUCCESSFUL
METHOD OF PREACHING
Reverend David Tyler Scoates

IN FROM THE COLD
Reverend Michael Ward

GETTING THOUSANDS OF KIDS
TO SUNDAY SCHOOL
Reverend Bill Wilson

CONTEMPORARY WORSHIP IN TODAY'S CHURCH
Reverend Timothy White

☐ YES, I'LL BE THERE!

Name _____ Title _____

Church/Organization _____ Denomination _____

Street Address _____

City _____ State/Prov. _____ Zip/P.C. _____

Daytime Phone: () _____ Fax Number () _____

☐ Check or money order enclosed (payable to RHS Institute, Crystal Cathedral) $ _____

Bill my: ☐ VISA ☐ MasterCard ☐ American Express

Card #: _____ Exp. Date _____

Cardholder's Name: _____

Cardholder's Signature: _____

- ☐ Single: Before Oct. 31: $35.00
- ☐ Single: After Oct. 31: $65.00
- ☐ Group: 4 or more: $35.00 ea.
- ☐ Seminary Students: $30.00
- ☐ International: $30.00

Crystal Cathedral Reservation Center
12141 Lewis St., Garden Grove CA 92840

TEL: (714) 544-5679

FAX: (714) 971-4165

E-MAIL: rhsinstitute@crystalcathedral.org

Reach More People

with custom-designed postcards from ChurchDirect™

ChurchDirect™ has helped hundreds of churches like yours touch the hearts of their communities with custom-designed, high-quality direct mail postcards. Our team of devoted Christians works with your church or Christian organization to create colorful, impressive cards for any major event or occasion you are planning.

Our dynamic, eye-catching designs are proven to get the attention of unchurched people or those looking for a new church home.

ChurchDirect is a service of Manlove Advertising. As a full-service agency, we can also assist you with other marketing and design needs such as logos, brochures, billboards, web sites and more.

To find out how easy it can be, call us at 1.800.825.0845 and request a free, no-obligation brochure. Or you can visit our website at www.churchdirect.com.

ChurchDirect™

A Service of Manlove Advertising

Christian Marketing and Design Services

1.800.825.0845

Monday through Friday, 8:30 am – 4:30 pm Central Time

www.churchdirect.com

Call and request a free, no-obligation brochure

Read the dead sea scrolls, study the Bible in depth, or take a safari adventure with the Kingdom Theologian Multimedia computer!

FREE!

Computer Catalog

"After having dealt with customer service representatives from Gateway Computers and Dell Computers, I was thrilled to find someone who was more interested in helping me make the right purchase, and one with the right software package, than in trying to either compel me to make a quick purchase or get me off the phone."

-Matthew Robinson, IA

"Our Kingdom computer has revolutionized everything we do: finance, Biblical studies, record keeping, etc. Every avenue of our ministry has been enhanced by purchasing a Kingdom computer. Kingdom computers are first class. I recommend you to all my friends who are considering buying a computer."

-Rev. Bob Yates, TN

FREE catalog!

☐ Yes! Send me my FREE Kingdom Computer catalog right away!

Name _____

Address _____

City _____

State _____ Zip _____

Day Phone () _____

Evening Phone () _____

E-mail _____

Kingdom computers

P.O. Box 506 • Lambs Creek Road
Mansfield, PA 16933

1-800-385-3436

©1998 Kingdom Computers

CT198-10

The Kingdom Theologian Multimedia Computer gives you everything you need to do instant searches of the entire Bible and many, many reference works with ease - tens of thousands of pages in all. You can also explore creation with Compton's Interactive Encyclopedia™ - over 37,000 articles, 100 full motion videos and 800 photographs. You'll receive free - the 12 software programs listed below to do your word processing, spread sheets, charts, graphs and so much more.

Featuring:

- 32MB SDRAM, 512K Integrated Cache
- 4.3GB U/ATA Hard Disk Drive,
- 3.5" Floppy
- 40X Max. CD-ROM Drive
- New! ATI 4MB 3-D AGP Graphics
- 15" Kingdom 55i Monitor (.28dp, 13.8" View.)
- Vortex Wavetable 64 A3D Sound with
- KOSS Speakers & Microphone
- 56K Capable x2 Data/Fax Modem*
- Keyboard & Logitech Mouse
- Mid-Tower Model
- Preloaded MS Windows 98
- New! Free Software
- 5-yr./3-yr. Ltd. Premium Warranty*
- 1-year Next-day On-site Service*
- 30-day Money-back Guarantee*

Celeron 300*	$1197 +shp
Pentium II 333	$1347 +shp
Pentium II 350	$1497 +shp
with 100 Mhz bus
Pentium II 400	$1697 +shp
with 100 Mhz bus
Pentium II 450	$1897 +shp
with 100 Mhz bus

Upgrade Options!

Upgrade to a 8.4 GB hard drive for just $97

Upgrade to DVD instead of CD-ROM (plays both CDs and DVDs) for only $99

Call for low pricing on memory and other upgrades.

Kingdom Computers is Christian owned and operated. In the last 18 months, we have won over 50 industry awards including numerous "Best Buys" and top awards in magazines—Windows, PC World, Government Best Buys, and Computer Buyers Guide & Handbook.

Kingdom has designed the first line of computers built especially for churches and Christian families. Our goal is to make each customer feel like we're right around the corner.

Recent Industry Awards

WINDOWS Magazine 1998
September, Kingdom
Pinnacle 233V MMX

"Best Buy" Computer Buyer's
Guide and Handbook 1998
July, Kingdom Pinnacle 333

leasing starts as low as $42.
/mo.

FREE! 12 best selling software programs free when you buy from this ad

The Bible Companion Library™ - includes dozens of Bibles and reference works!

King James • NIV • International Children's Bible • American Standard • British Basic Edition • Darby's Translation • Weymouth New Testament • Young's Literal • Spanish 1909 Reina Valera • French Louis Segond Bible • German 1912 Luther Bible • Greek Textus Receptus • Vine NT Dictionary with Greek Text • Strong's Numbers in KJV / T, V, M verb parsings • Brown Driver Briggs Condensed • Thayers Condensed • Smith's Bible Dictionary • Nave's Topical Bible • Thompson Chain, 1917 original • 100 NT Outlines • 100 OT Outlines • Matthew Henry Concise Commentary • Second Coming Bible • Treasury of Scripture Knowledge, and more!

FREE! 8 of the best selling Christian software programs!

The Dead Sea Scrolls Revealed™ • Logos Personal Bible Study™ • Logos Bulletin Art!™ • Logos Bible Atlas™ • The One-Minute Bible™ • Logos Screen Saver: The Wisdom of Proverbs™ • Logos Bible Crosswords™ • Noah and the Ark™

FREE! 3 free home and office programs!
Microsoft® Works® 4.5 • Compton's Encyclopedia™ '98 • Microsoft CD Sampler™

1-800-385-3436

*©1998 Kingdom Computers. Specifications, offers, and prices are subject to change without notice. We reserve the right to substitute merchandise of equal or greater value. Kingdom Computers cannot be liable for actual or hypothetical errors. Pictures are representative of actual products. Other promotions or offers are void when purchasing products from this ad. All other trademarks and registered trademarks are property of their respective corporations. Call or write for warranty details. 30-day money-back guarantee - you can return any stock item within one month in new condition, with all original packing please, for a full refund less shipping and handling charges. Custom items will be made right. Free software offer only good with non-discounted merchandise. 56.6K modems are capable of 56Kbps downloads. FCC power output restrictions however, limit download speeds to 56Kbps and upload speeds to 33.6Kbps. Actual speeds may vary depending on line conditions. Custom items will be made right. 512K migrated cache not available with Celeron 300. This offer good while supplies last.

The Clumsy Embrace

Croatian Miroslav Volf wanted to love his Serbian enemies; the Prodigal's father is showing him how.

The title of his most recent book—Exclusion & Embrace: The Theological Exploration of Identity, Otherness, and Reconciliation (Abingdon)—sounds like the scholarly work that it is. But for Croatian-born Miroslav Volf, this academic exploration of who we and our enemies are to each other was driven by a personal quest. As a young man in Communist Yugoslavia, Volf saw firsthand the ethnic frictions that turned bloody after the breakup of the country. “An important factor in the war,” he says, “was the drive for pure identities—hence the term ‘ethnic cleansing.’ Persons belonging to the other ethnic group would be swept away like dirt so that one could have a ‘clean’ ethnic house. Since we live in a world that is inhabited by many groups, the desire for pure identities leads inescapably to violence and bloodshed.” He began searching for a resolution to the tension that existed in him between the “natural instinct to fight for your rights" and the teaching of his Pentecostal parents "that the enemy is there to be loved."

INTERVIEW BY
KEVIN D. MILLER

His quest took the form of theological reflection—which soon caught the notice of the academic world. This month, Volf, 42, begins a new position as Henry B. Wright Professor of Theology at Yale Divinity School, following seven years of teaching at Fuller Theological Seminary. He maintains ties to his homeland by serving as visiting professor of systematic theology on the Evangelical Theological Faculty in Osijek, Croatia, his alma mater. After studying at Osijek, Volf attended Fuller Seminary and the University of Tübingen, where he received his doctoral and postdoctoral degrees under Jürgen Moltmann. He talked with CT about the impact the story of the Prodigal has made on his thinking.

You say the story of the Prodigal Son teaches us a "theology of embrace." What do you mean by that?

After the war broke out in the former Yugoslavia, I started thinking about the whole issue of relationship between cultures and between individuals who are part of cultures. How should I relate to my friends and my fellow Christians who are Serb, and who find themselves on the other side of the barricades? Right about that time I was asked to write a paper addressing the upheavals in Eastern Europe from a theological perspective. I asked myself, How am I going to relate to those who have injured me and my country?

I tried to apply liberation theology to the situation, which says we need to fight first for justice and liberation and then we can get reconciliation. It didn't work. Both parties saw themselves as oppressed, and both saw themselves as engaged in the struggle for liberation. So the main categories of liberation theology, oppression and liberation, serve to justify the struggle rather than lead to peace. Then it occurred to me that one of the best portrayals of what lies at the core of Christian faith is this amazing story of the Prodigal, which I read as an expression of what God did for us on the cross. Suddenly those open arms of the father became for me the picture of who God is, how God had acted toward sinful humanity. And not only how God acted toward humanity, but how we ought to act toward those who have sinned against us.

How did that lead you away from a liberation-theology paradigm?

I started thinking about the implications of the Prodigal story for how we relate to one another in situations of conflict, of enmity, of wrongdoing, of suffering. At the center of Christian faith lies not so much liberation, but the embrace of the wrongdoer. That was where the idea of a "theology of embrace" was born. It is simply the Prodigal's father not giving up his relationship with his son—in spite of the wrongdoing of the younger son. When that son returns, the father runs toward him without having heard a single word from that son. He shows his son grace and acceptance because he was and he is and he remained his son even through the wrongdoing. That is what we see on the cross.

But it doesn't stop there. The God who runs toward us—the wrongdoers—also demands we do the same with those who have wronged us. So there is a social meaning to the cross. Divine grace obligates. In his book The Real Jesus, Luke Timothy Johnson argues that the core of the gospel is found at the end of the Gospels in the story of the crucifixion. The significance of the crucifixion is not only what God does for us; consistently throughout the New Testament the crucifixion is portrayed as the pattern that we are to follow. It is a model of social behavior toward the other as well as a statement about what God has done for us.

How does a theology of embrace apply to conflicts in places such as Bosnia and Northern Ireland?

The basic challenge in all these conflicts—indeed, the basic challenge in all human conflicts—is the same one identified in the story of the Prodigal: the relationship between justice and peace, liberation and reconciliation, law and grace. Do you call first for justice, then peace? First liberation, then reconciliation? Or is it the other way around?

When I read the Prodigal story, I saw that the primacy was given to grace, embrace, reconciliation. Not cheap reconciliation—"nothing that happened between us matters, so let's hug each other and everything's going to be okay." Everything wouldn't be okay. But also not the pursuit of what you might call "strict justice." As a way of resolving problems between people, this simply will not work, because strict justice is impossible in the real world in which we live. The stage on which we fight for justice was partly built by unjust means, and the fight for justice itself always and inescapably creates new injustice. If our relationships are governed by the idea of strict justice, they will never be healed.

Instead, I see in this story a dual emphasis. One can distinguish in it the will to embrace and the embrace itself. The will to embrace the other is absolutely indiscriminate and unconditional. It does not depend on anything that the other person has done, and it applies to every and any individual. The Prodigal's father runs toward his son; he is willing to embrace him no matter what the son will say. The will is there. And yet the full reconciliation takes place after the Prodigal's confession. It takes confession for the Prodigal to be transformed into a son.

The grace we see demonstrated here affirms justice in the act of transcending it. Just as forgiveness always entails blame (try offering forgiveness to somebody who thinks he or she has done no wrong!), similarly, every act of grace entails affirmation of justice precisely in the act of transcending the claims of justice.

But it still takes two to embrace.

Yes. The offer of embrace can be there, but there must also be a willingness on the part of the other party to belong to the relationship and to behave in a way that builds rather than undermines the relationship. Consider the relationships between the father and the Prodigal and the older brother and the Prodigal. It took the willingness of both the father and the younger son before their embrace could take place. But the older son did not will to embrace. Therefore, no embrace followed, at least as far as the story goes.

In your book you talk about the older brother's use of moral categories versus the father's use of relational categories. How are these different?

The older brother's behavior is governed strictly by the rules, by moral rules:

if you do this, then this must happen to you. If you squander the inheritance, you've got to return as a hired hand. He is unwilling to accept his younger brother's return because he is received not as one who had squandered but instead is reinstated as a son. From the perspective of the older brother, not only did the younger brother break the rules by leaving, but also the father broke the rules by accepting the younger. The older son operates on the basis of established rules and organizes all behavior around those rules.

One might expect that the father would, in contrast, simply set aside the regulate who is in and who is out; the father is governed not by the rules but by his unshakeable love toward both his sons. Augustine puts it something like this: "Love, then do as you please." In other words, love, which is not completely beyond the law but represents its fulfillment, will do the right thing.

If you say that relationship is prior to moral rules, how would you answer people who say, "Well, I've taken on this certain identity that may not be morally fitting of the rules, but relationship is prior to ship along, so they're good things. But they become bad things when they become the narrow gate through which the relationship must always pass. When this happens, the rules become the basis for the relationship and, in a sense, become a substitute for the relationship. Relationships are too complex, our lives too messy and too wonderful, to be governed by strict rules. This doesn't mean rules should be pushed aside—especially grand rules that specify for us what is right and what is wrong. And yet, I think we have to say that relationship ought to endure even the breach of those rules. I have to hold on to Miroslav Volf: "I've done the embracing of those who have wronged me deeply. It's clumsy. It's like God's call to Abraham to 'go to a land I will show you.'" rules. But he does not. He both affirms and transcends them. He affirms them in that clearly the younger son will not get a second inheritance. The son must bear the consequences of his action. And yet the rules are also transcended in that the son is reinstated as a part of the family. The older brother is concerned with rules that that, so let's just love each other?"

What I'm suggesting is that there is a middle road. It runs between an indiscriminate acceptance of everything and anything (which is typical in modern cultures that emphasize "inclusion") and a life according to inflexible, strict moral rules (which is often used as a bulwark against the culture of inclusion). That middle way is a supple kind of love that attends to who the other is and how the relationship is developing.

Rules help govern and steer a relation-the other, even when the other is doing wrong.

You've talked about "a theology of embrace" and "strict justice." In your book you also talk about the interplay of "identity of otherness." How does that fit into the story?

I see it in the behavior of the father, but also negatively in the behavior of the older brother. In order to extend grace, you need to make a journey together with the person to whom you are extending that grace. That's what the father does in never giving up on his son. The father never becomes self-enclosed in his own existence after the son has departed into the far country. Instead, he keeps his erring son, the son who sought to undo himself as a son, in his heart. He suffers the son's departure and therefore is always willing to readjust his identity as the identity of his son shifts.

That's a very significant feature of grace—the sense of being with another person and making a journey with that person. It requires being open and providing space in oneself for the other person even as that person is changing for the better or for the worse. To do this, I must readjust my own identity in the relationship to that other. In good relationships, we are happy to grow as the other person becomes part of us and who we are. When we suffer the changes in fractured relationships, we keep possible the healing of that relationship. It is this kind of commitment that I see exemplified in God's coming into the sinful world to die for our redemption.

That makes sense, considering how the Old Testament Law was broken, and yet God did not void the covenant with his chosen people.

You have Yahweh saying in Hosea, "How can I hand you over, O Israel?" Why? Because God is bound to Israel with "bonds of love." God's commitment and covenant are irrevocable. That's the eternity of the covenant and, therefore, I would say, the priority of the relationship. All sorts of things can happen within a relationship, but relationship is forever; the commitment to the other is eternal. And because this eternal commitment is there, it leads God—and anyone who is in relationship—to suffering on account of the other who has done wrong. If anything, in the New Testament, this kind of divine commitment gets intensified and its scope expanded.

A different way of making the same point would be to say that, at its core, the Christian faith is not about justice. It's about justification. There's a world of difference between the two. Now that does not leave justice outside of it, but puts a different spin to it. If Christian faith was about justice, it would also be about enforcement of justice in relationships between people. The whole of the relationship between God and people and people by themselves would be governed by enforcement of justice, so violence would then be an integral part of what Christian faith is about. But it's not about that. It's governed by justification of the ungodly; it's governed by showing the kind of grace to the one who has done wrong, which makes that person and the relationship just again. This is the Christian—the Christlike—way of dealing with the wrong that is presumed to be there.

We need to justify each other even when there's wrong done.

That's exactly what I want to argue. In our human way—a way that is both alike and different from the divine way—we need to seek to make the unjust person just and thereby create just peace between us. To say that we need to justify each other is a different way of saying what the apostle Paul said. He summarizes the whole teaching of Romans by applying it to the relationship between Christians. In 15:7, he instructs, "Accept one another as you have been accepted by Christ." This is in his letter in which justification plays such an important and significant role. His injunction is to make the pattern of divine action toward us a pattern of our actions toward the other.

Does this theology of embrace apply only to the follower of Christ or also to non-Christian institutions like governments?

I think it also applies to governments. But what we don't have yet is extensive exploration of ways in which it does. I think one of the things that we as theologians ought to be doing is dialoguing with political scientists and lawyers to explore what kinds of implications this would have for establishing and meting out justice.

I think a very good example of this kind of possibility is what's happening in South Africa with the work of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. There was a marvelous piece in the Christian Century by Peter Storey, past president of the Methodist church in South Africa, in which he argues that the experiences of the commission there point "beyond conventional retribution into a realm where justice and mercy coalesce, and both victim and perpetrator must know pain if healing is to happen. It is an area more consistent with Calvary than the courtroom. It is the place where the guilty discover the pain of forgiveness." I think we ought to explore what this may mean for our judicial system. I'd like to explore it with colleagues in other disciplines, but I'm not sure that I have ready answers about it yet. What I am pretty sure, though, is that not to explore social and political implications of divine grace extended to sinful humanity in Christ would be to betray the love of our faith and to abdicate our social responsibility.

How do you respond to those who say that what you are proposing is conceptually elegant but of no practical good?

My friend Jürgen Moltmann put that question to me in a slightly different way. I was presenting the paper on the social upheavals in the former Yugoslavia that I referred to earlier, arguing that we need a theology of embrace rather than a theology of liberation. Rather than Croats simply fighting for their liberation and Serbians simply fighting for their liberation, and therefore Christian faith serving to legitimate their fighting, we need something that will unite the two, a theology that reconciles the warring factions. Moltmann, who has been a granddaddy of liberation theology in many ways, in his very pointed and penetrating way asked me, "But can you embrace a četnik?" Četniks are notorious Serbian fighters. I paused—not because I didn't know what to say, but because it was difficult to say for me. It was at a time when a third of Croatia was occupied and when many of our cities and towns were being destroyed. Many people had been driven off their lands, and Croatia was full of refugees from many other countries. Finally, my response was, "I can't; but as a follower of Jesus Christ I ought to be able to." And in many ways, that question and my answer accompanied me as I was working through these issues. What would it take to embrace a četnik? What would it take for me to have the will to embrace? What would it take then for that embrace to actually take place? I think those are some key issues with which we have to struggle.

Have you ever literally embraced a četnik?

Actually, I've never met one, but if I did I think I would have the will to embrace him, though I also think that much would need to happen before the embrace—a full embrace, an embrace that is not a charade—could take place. Most of us, though, have our own četniks. And yes, I've done the embracing of those whom I felt have wronged me deeply. It's hard. It's clumsy to do. It's like God's call to Abraham to "go to a land that I will show you." You have no idea where that land is, but you open your arms and you embrace, unsure about what's going to happen. It takes tremendous courage to do so. It takes practice to do so. It takes self-giving. It also takes suffering. That's the tragic side of it. And yet, in that tragedy there is incredible promise.

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Web Site Directory

Calvin College (Alumni)
www.calvin.edu
Campus Crusade New Life Publications
www.newlifepubs.com
Church Chair Industries, Inc.
www.churchchair.com
Gordon Conwell Theo. Seminary
www.gcts.edu
Trinity International University
www.tiu.edu

To list your Web address in a Christianity Today Web directory
phone (630) 260-6202 x239.

Check Us Out Online!

America Online keyword: CO
www.christianity.net

SOMETHING FOR EVERYONE

Chat • Message Boards • Music
Bible & Reference • Shopping
Magazines • Fun & Games
Ministries • Devotionals

- Women to Women
 - Daily Bible Study Chats
 - Today's Christian Woman, Marriage Partnership, Virtue
- Brother to Brother
 - Weekly Men's Bible Study
 - Promise Keeper's Links
- Student Hangout
 - Jr. High, High School Chats
 - Campus Life Cafe
- Kids of the Kingdom
 - AOL Kids Only Access
 - Monitored Chats & Message Boards
- Singles Connection
 - Male & Female Personals
 - Chat Rooms Categorized by Age
- Church Leaders Network
 - Christianity Today, Leadership & Your Church
 - Sermon Illustrations & Preaching Resources
- Christianity on the 'Net
 - Christian Net Search & Church Locator
 - Best Christian Site Reviews

Get unlimited access to America Online
and the Internet for $21.95 a month.
Call 1-800-633-8888 for a free start-up kit.

To advertise on Christianity Online call
(630) 260-6202 x 239

The Other Brother
Had a Point

What kind of world would this be if people were rewarded for squandering their families' inheritance?

*M*ost of us grew up calling Jesus' story about a man and his two sons the parable of the Prodigal Son, but it is not. Jesus did not begin his tale by saying, "There once was a man who had a father and an elder brother."

"There was a man who had two sons," he says, letting us know whom the story is really about—a father who loved his two children to distraction and wanted them to love each other too. This is a comforting story until you notice something odd in it: the father does not wait for a confession or a promise of better behavior in the future. Instead, he rushes out to embrace his son and kisses and forgives him before the son can even get a word out of his mouth.

While this image may be excellent news for the prodigals among us, it is also disturbing news, because forgiveness is one of those gifts of God that cuts both ways. We all need it, and when we get it from God or from one another we know what new life is all about. But forgiveness is forgiveness of sin, and sin is wrong, right? In order to be forgiven, someone has to have fallen short of the glory of God, which may be as simple as having failed to be kind to someone, but which may also be as complicated as having killed someone.

BARBARA BROWN TAYLOR

Whatever the crime, very few of us would deny the possibility of forgiveness, but most of us would insist on penance, on the sinner's heartfelt confession and willingness to pay for the wrong that has been done. Then along comes this story of instant forgiveness with no strings attached, and we cannot miss the point: that the extravagant love of God both fulfills and violates our sense of what is right.

Preachers and teachers often insult this parable by turning it into a cartoon in which a sulking, mean-spirited older brother begrudges the love a father shows for a reckless, fun-loving younger brother who has come home. But that is entirely too simple, and Jesus said nothing of the kind.

Instead, he told a darker story, a story about a younger son who was so hungry to see the world that he wished his own father dead—at least symbolically—by asking him to settle his estate early and give both brothers their share. So the father—apparently valuing his child's freedom more than his own security—divided his livelihood and said good-bye to his younger son, who went off and squandered everything, until one day he “came to himself.” That was when he decided to go back home, composing a pretty calculated confession as he went, one designed to get him back with a roof over his head and food in his belly, even if it meant he had to live as a servant and not as a son.

WARD SMITH

He came home, in other words, to live off his brother's inheritance, having spent his own in loose living, and no sooner did his father see him coming down the road than the elder brother's fatted calf was killed and the celebration was on. There were no extra steps between the younger son's return and his welcome-home party, no heart-to-heart with the old man, no extra chores, no go-to-your-room-for-a-week-and-think-about-what-you-have-done, just a clean robe for his back, and a fine ring for his hand, and a pair of new sandals for his feet. The father did not even wait for his elder son to get home from work before beginning the festivities, “for this son of mine was dead and is alive again; he was lost and is found!” Then the elder brother came home from the fields, heard the music and the dancing—and I am glad that I was not the one who had to tell him what it was all about.

I am an eldest child myself. I know what it is like to break in parents, to step aside as they exercise their new and improved skills on younger siblings, and then to take the rap for the little criminals when they mess up. I remember one Saturday afternoon when I was supposed to be looking after my two sisters and my parents came home early. Within minutes they had hauled me by my elbow to the upstairs bathroom to show me my little sister, clutching a fat black crayon in her fist, putting the finishing touches on the claw-footed porcelain bathtub that had once been white. Did she get spanked? No, she was just a little baby who did not know any better. Did I get spanked? Yes, I was the older sister who should have kept her out of trouble.

Older siblings frequently get the raw end of the deal, as the elder brother apparently does in the parable at hand. My guess is that he was not incensed by his younger brother's return, or even by his father's forgiveness of him, but by the celebration. Let the penitent come home, by all means, but let him come home to penance, not a party. Where is the moral instruction in that kind of welcome? What about facing consequences? What kind of world would this be if we all made a practice of rewarding sinners while the God-fearing folk are still out in the fields?

The church thrives on its ministries to the poor, the broken, the sick, and outcast, but what about those of us who are holding our own? What about those of us who work hard to keep our jobs and stay in our relationships and take care of our health and pay our dues but never seem to get any credit for it, while the homeless and the addicted and the downtrodden get all the attention? What do you have to do to get a party around here? Do you have to go off and squander your inheritance before you can come home to be embraced, and kissed, and assured that you belong?

“Listen!” the elder son protests. “For all these years I have been working like a slave for you, and I have never disobeyed your command; yet you have never given me even a young goat so that I might celebrate with my friends. But when this son of yours came back, who has devoured your property with prostitutes, you killed the fatted calf for him!” God help the elder son. God help him, and God help all of us who understand his rage, who have felt so excluded and whose hurt has run so deep that we have cut ourselves off from the very ones whose love and acceptance we so desperately need.

“This son of yours,” the elder brother says, excluding himself from the family—this son of yours who is no kin to me, nor am I kin to you if you are going to choose him over me.

But here is where the loving father earns his title. He does not take a swing at his firstborn, as some of us might have been tempted to do, nor even remind him to honor his father. He knows that he has lost both of his sons. He has lost the younger one to a life of recklessness, but he has lost the older one to a more serious fate, to a life of angry self-righteousness that takes him so far away from his father that he might as well be feeding pigs in a far country. He wants his father to love him as he deserves to be loved, because he has stayed put and followed orders and done the right thing.

He wants his father to love him for all of that, and his father does love him, but not for any of that, any more than he loves the younger brother for what he has done. He does not love either of his sons according to what they deserve. He just loves them, more because of who he is than because of who they are, and the elder brother cannot stand it. He cannot stand a love that transcends right and wrong, a love that throws homecoming parties for prodigal sinners and expects the hard-working righteous to rejoice. He cannot stand it, and so he stands outside—outside his father's house and outside his father's love—refusing his invitation to come inside.

But his father turns out to be prodigal too, at least as far as his love is concerned. He never seems to tire of giving it away. “Son,” he says, reclaiming the boy, “you are always with me, and all that is mine is yours.” His love for one child does not preclude his love for the other. The younger one's recklessness cannot deflect it any more than the elder one's righteousness. They are a family; they belong to one another, and a party for one is a party for all. “We had to celebrate and rejoice,” the loving father says to his elder son, “because this brother of yours”—not my son, but your brother—“was dead and has come to life; he was lost and has been found.”

It is the elder brother's invitation back into relationship not only with the loving father, but also with the wayward brother. It is an invitation to recognize his own lostness and foundness; but the parable does not tell us how it all turned out. The story ends with the elder brother standing outside the house in the yard with his father, listening to the party going on inside. Jesus leaves it that way. I think, because it is up to each one of us to finish the story. It is up to each one of us to decide whether we will stand outside all alone being right, or give up our rights and go inside to take our place at a table full of reckless and righteous saints and scoundrels, brothers and sisters united only by our relationship to one loving father, who refuses to give us the love we deserve but cannot be prevented from giving us the love we need.

Barbara Brown Taylor, author of The Preaching Life (Cowley) from which this article is adapted, teaches at Piedmont College, Demorest, Georgia.

Rejecting the Prodigal

The early church debated whether apostate Christians could be forgiven again.

I have not suffered greatly for my faith. I worship God freely, where and how I choose to do so. My property has never been confiscated because of my convictions. I have never been threatened or harmed because of my faith. The greatest pain I have suffered as a Christian has been self-inflicted—sorrow over sins committed, discouragement over recurring temptations.

These minor sorrows are assuaged by the comfort the parable of the Prodigal Son offers. When I read this story, it is the image of loving, open arms of the waiting Father for his raucous, repentant son that leap off the pages. But this interpretation has something to do with the context in which I read the parable. If I had grown up as a member of a persecuted, endangered church, I might read and interpret it differently.

For the early church, persecution sporadically erupted against the Christian community, inflicting intense abuse and suffering. How, I ask myself, would I have reacted to an order to sacrifice to the emperor, particularly if I knew that simply a pinch of incense sprinkled on the coals of a Roman altar could save my life, family, and property? Or what if I were put on trial, as in the case of the beloved Bishop Cyprian in the middle of the third century:

The proconsul Galerius Maximus ordered Cyprian to be brought before him. . . .

Proconsul: "Are you Thascius Cyprianus?"

Cyprian: "I am."

Proconsul: "Have you allowed yourself to be called 'father' of persons holding sacrilegious [that is, Christian] opinions?"

Cyprian: "I have."

Proconsul: "The most sacred emperors have ordered you to sacrifice [to the emperor as a god]."

Cyprian: "I will not do it."

Proconsul: "Have a care for yourself. . . ."

Cyprian: "Do as you are bid. There is no room for discussion when the issue is so clear."

Proconsul: "You have lived for a long time holding sacrilegious opinions. You have gathered a large number of accomplices around you in your blameworthy conspiracy. You have proved an enemy to the Roman gods and their sacred worship. Nor have the pious and most sacred Emperors Valerian and Gallienus, the Augusti, and Valerian, the noble Caesar, been able to recall you to the observance of their rites. And so since you have been convicted as the instigator and ringleader in most atrocious crimes, you shall be an example to the accomplices in your crime. Your blood shall be shed in accordance with the law."

After saying this, the proconsul read the verdict from his tablet: "We command that Cyprianus be executed by the sword." Bishop Cyprian said, "Thanks be to God."

Cyprian persevered in his faith to the very end and received the martyr's crown.

But what of those who had lapsed in their faith

CHRISTOPHER A. HALL

If we continue to dilute Christ's call to holiness, will the world around us ever take us seriously?

and offered sacrifice to the emperor? Was a second chance, a new beginning, possible for those who had so gravely sinned? Could the ruptured and violated relationships between Christians—between those who had courageously confessed their faith and those who had rejected it—experience restoration? Could those who had lapsed in their faith be forgiven? What does the parable of the Prodigal Son have to say to this situation?

Same story, different perspectives

Some early Christians, many of whom lived under constant stress because of their uncertain status in the Roman world, reacted differently than I do to Jesus' parable.

Tertullian, a gifted theologian writing roughly 150 years after the apostle Paul, argued that the parable of the Prodigal Son must never be applied to Christians. Could a Christian sin in such a rebellious, high-handed manner and still be forgiven? Tertullian said no. To extend forgiveness so broadly would release a torrent of sin within the church. Not only "adulterers and fornicators," but "idolaters, blasphemers, and renegades . . . every class of apostates" would use the parable as an excuse for sin. "Who will worry about losing what can be so easily regained?" Tertullian asked. "Security in sin develops an appetite for it."

Tertullian's rigorous position appealed to some early Christians because it seemed to strengthen the church's resolve against sin, a resistance sorely needed in the Roman Empire. For many years the early church inhabited a wider world that viewed it with great suspicion as an upstart religion bent on undermining Roman society.

Others besides Tertullian agreed that the parable of the Prodigal Son didn't apply to Christians who turned apostate and then wished to return to the fold. The presbyter Novatian, while acknowledging that God had the power to forgive even Christians who lapsed in a time of persecution, insisted that those who had sinned in such a grave manner could not be readmitted to the church's fellowship. For Novatian, the church consisted of only the katharoi, the "pure." How could those who had tainted themselves with the sin of apostasy validly or safely rejoin Christ's spotless body?

Novatian's hardline position, though, was vigorously opposed by other church fathers, almost all of whom were pastors or bishops in the church. Ambrose, a leading bishop in Italy, argued that to deny people—Christians or non-Christians—the possibility of forgiveness, even for the gravest of sins, was to rob them of all hope. The Prodigal Son had found his way home by the path of repentance. Where would his repentance lead him if he could never go home again?

Jerome, a church father well known for his sandpaper personality, observed the context of the parable of the Prodigal Son in Luke's gospel, commenting that if Christ welcomed "publicans and sinners," how could the church refuse them? The very rhythm of the Incarnation demanded that the church be a forgiving, welcoming community: "What clemency can be greater than that the Son of God should be born a son of man, that He should endure the tedium . . . of gestation, await the arrival of birth, be wrapped in swaddling clothes, become subject to His parents, grow through successive ages, and after the insulting words, blows, and scourging become for us accursed on the cross, in order to free us from the curse of the law, being made obedient to the Father, even to death?"

Jerome insists that God the Father's foreknowledge encompassed and envisioned the return of his wayward sons and daughters, a journey home illustrated by Jesus' parable and made possible by the Incarnation. "God with whom all future events are already past and who knows beforehand all that is to be, runs forward to his coming and by His Word, which took flesh by a virgin, anticipates the return of His younger son."

Augustine, a contemporary of Jerome, readily admits the returning son did not deserve his father's love. Has there ever been a repentant sinner that did? Augustine reasoned that the younger son's recognition of his unworthiness demonstrated his once proud heart had become humble, malleable before God's glory and purposes. "This unworthiness, this glory we do not deserve, the younger son acknowledges when forced to by his need. The younger son, I repeat, acknowledges this unworthiness when wandering far from his father's home . . . he acknowledges God's glory, but only when constrained by want. And because through that glory of God we have been made what we were not worthy to be, he says to his father: 'I am not worthy to be called your son.' Unhappy as he is, he obtains happiness through humility and shows himself worthy by the confession of his unworthiness."

Gregory of Nazianzus, a church father writing in the East in the late fourth century, asked how Christians such as Novatian could withdraw the possibility of confession, repentance, and forgiveness from any person and still retain the gospel. What hope would such harsh judges possess if measured by their own standards? "Do you not accept repentance? . . . Do you not shed a tear of mercy? I hope you may not encounter such a judge as yourself! Do you not revere the kindness of Jesus, who 'bore our weaknesses and carried our diseases,' who 'did not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance,' who 'wished for mercy rather than sacrifice,' who pardons sins 'seventy times seven times'?"

What especially irked Gregory about those who refused to welcome home repentant sinners was the selective standard these moral rigorists seemed to apply in their judgments. Novatian, for example, apparently was willing to forgive those who struggled with greed, but he was much more reluctant to forgive those guilty of sexual transgression. Gregory wryly noted that Novatian "harshly condemned sexual immorality, as though he himself was not made of flesh and blood. What do you say to this? Do my arguments persuade you? Come on, stand here on our side, on the side of human beings; let us magnify the Lord together." Gregory reminded his reader of the forgiveness David received after his adultery with Bathsheba and his murder of Uriah; indeed, the forgiveness of "the great Peter, after he succumbed to human weakness at the time of our Savior's passion," demanded that the church mirror that same mercy, compassion, and forgiveness.

Spiritual blindness engendered by pride, Gregory insisted, rather than a concern for holiness, lay behind the rigorist party's unreasonable demands. Had they forgotten that they, too, were mere human beings, apt to succumb to temptation if left to themselves? Gregory openly acknowledged his own weakness apart from Christ: "I confess myself to be a man, a changeable creature of unstable nature. . . . I know that I am myself 'beset by weakness,' and that I shall receive in proportion as I give."

Second chance forgiveness

Let us not be too quick to dismiss the moral rigorists. In ways I echo Tertullian's misgivings about blanket forgiveness. Hasn't such a message encouraged moral laxness and irresponsibility? Tertullian surely thought so. Many Christian leaders share my dismay over the spiritual health of the church today. I want to pronounce God's judgment on the church's shortcomings. I want the church to be a holy, pure, committed, sacrificial, righteous community. I want evil to be judged. I want to see Christ's kingdom established in power and purity. If this means that we must speak harshly to some and exclude those who have violated the community's moral standards, so be it. If we continue to dilute Christ's call to holiness, faithfulness, and commitment, will the world around us ever take us seriously? The moral rigorist in me says no.

But here is a different thought experiment: Where would I be today if I had applied Tertullian's perspective and moral standard to my own life? As I recall my attraction to the gospel as a college student in the late sixties, I remember two aspects of Christ's message raised my hopes: the possibility of forgiveness and the possibility of genuine moral change. While Tertullian might have offered forgiveness to me as a repentant pagan, his rigorism concerning postbaptismal sin would have discouraged me. Deeply ingrained sinful patterns dominated my life. They would not change overnight. I knew what I was capable of doing. What if I made a serious mistake after my conversion?

Was this hope? If so, it was a slim hope, one filled with doubt and anxiety. I needed a story that would encourage me to genuine confession, repentance, and change, without threatening me with expulsion from the family if I fell into sin and needed to find my way home. I needed a safe, secure context for facing the hard work that lay ahead for me—to face honestly years of self-deception and moral confusion.

Haunted by the elder brother

The attitude and language of the moral rigorists are eerily similar to the attitude and language of the elder brother in the parable—the brother who sees no reason to welcome the younger prodigal home. The elder brother complains to his father that he had been "slaving" for many years. He had "never disobeyed" his father's orders. Surely if any one deserved a fattened calf, it was he. In other words, he was "pure."

The father's response no doubt shocks the older brother. "My son . . . you are always with me, and everything I have is yours." Calves, robes, rings—all belonged to the older son. Why? Because he was a member of the family, just as was the younger prodigal. Obedience and hard work were appropriate within the family structure, even praiseworthy, but the older brother's position as a son was not predicated on his hard work and obedience. The older son had not learned that family language is largely the language of love, forgiveness, and reconciliation, not that of moral obligation. Or, as Gregory reminds the followers of Novatian, calling them to reform their thinking and behavior: "Come on, stand here on our side, on the side of human beings."

The older brother's inheritance was guaranteed because he was a son, a member of the family. He could neither earn nor deserve it. Of course the fattened calf must be slaughtered and a party thrown for the younger son. He was a member of the family, not a hired hand or slave. Yes, the younger brother and son had made terrible mistakes, wounding his father's heart, but his status as son had never changed. It couldn't. He had thought he could return to the family circle as an outsider, a family slave, but that was impossible. Once a son, always a son, even when lost in a foreign land. All that the father asked and longed for was that the son would come to his senses, change his mind about his behavior, and come home.

It is this insight that church fathers such as Ambrose, Augustine, Jerome, and Gregory of Nazianzus grasped so well. They never denied the importance of integrity. They knew that unconfessed sin was spiritual poison and could contaminate individuals and the life of the church as a whole. They stressed the importance of church discipline. Still, the fathers clearly understood that moral rigorism and the language of moral obligation left too much unsaid. The family language of the gospel provided a different moral and linguistic context for dealing with sin.

Sons and daughters, the fathers realized, could make terrible mistakes. As Gregory put it, we are all "changeable" creatures "of unstable nature . . . beset by weakness." If so, only the gospel, with its offer of forgiveness and restoration to the family's fellowship, could remedy the brokenness of the human heart. The entire story is one of grace, grace undeserved, unexpected, unearned. In Jerome's words, "grace, which is not a payment due to merit, but has been granted as a gift."

Only in Christ and within Christ's body, the church, can we experience forgiveness and freedom from the past's mistakes. Only within Christ's family can we learn to live as he desires. Only within the Trinity's embrace of love can we learn to face what needs to change. Indeed, as Jesus stressed in his parable, repentance, confession, and forgiveness are always possible—an occasion for celebration in heaven and on earth. CT

Christopher A. Hall is associate professor of biblical and theological studies at Eastern College, St. Davids, Pennsylvania, associate editor of the Ancient Christian Commentary on Scripture, and author of Reading Scripture with the Church Fathers (InterVarsity Press).

The Missing Mot

er

When my prodigal son left our world, it sent me on a sojourn as well.

*J*ournal entry, August 19, 1996:
Where is my son?

This question began what became a steady stream of notations documenting the disorienting passage in my life when one of my children left the world in which my husband and I had reared him—the world of faith. An unexpected aspect of this painful season has been the equally forbidding sojourn his pilgrimage has meant for me.

Before our son was born, my husband and I took “natural” childbirth classes. The pain was supposed to be “managed” by breathing techniques. But by the time I was pushing that boy through my loins (after 36 hours of labor), the classes didn’t mean a thing: Nothing could have prepared me for what that felt like. In the same way, nothing in all the parenting books I had dutifully read prepared me for the stages of pain and grief that having a prodigal child brought to my otherwise well-ordered, biblically packaged, evangelical world.

WENDY
MURRAY ZOBA

Early on, when I first began to wonder what was happening in my son, I pictured the saucer-eyed, silky-haired little helper who used to come to me as a four-year-old with pen and paper in hand and ask, “Mom, draw me an Ewok” (the furry creatures from The Return of the Jedi). I drew so many of them I could have marketed them.

Our son was the same age when he told us he was afraid of dying. We talked to him about his fear and tried to help him understand that, when we belong to Jesus, we don’t have to be afraid. He wanted that assurance, and my husband,

Bob, on the spot, helped him pray. Our son prayed the words after my husband, asking the Lord to come into his heart and free him from his fears. He prayed loudly, clearly, without mumbling.

When he was 10, he took Communion for the first time. He said he felt like he “was growing in God” when he took it. A year later, he asked his dad (a pastor) to baptize him. He was nervous at first, he said, but afterward he was “excited.”

When confusing things started to happen during his later teens—things that signaled a departure from our unwritten family “covenant” (the details of which do not pertain here)—I brought assumptions to the situation that operated out of the Ewok-era model of who my child was to me. (This is where mothers tend to lose all grounding in reality.) So the first leg of my sojourn as a prodigal’s mother involved general disorientation: I was trying to reconcile who this person is in relationship to who he was. What went wrong? What had I done to turn my son against me?

I found comfort in the prophet Isaiah, who became the mouthpiece for God’s own laments over his wayward Israel: “This is what the LORD says, ‘The children I raised and cared for have turned against me. Even the animals—the donkey and the ox—know their owner and appreciate his care. But not my people Israel. No matter what I do for them, they still do not understand’ ” (Isa. 1:23 NLT; all Scripture references are from the NLT unless noted otherwise).

I thought that if God experienced this kind of heartache, then perhaps my son’s wanderings were not necessarily attributable to my failures alone.

My disorientation evolved into spiritual resolve to do battle for my son's soul—to wage a campaign to rescue him from the Devil. I arose early in the mornings to be alone with God, first to right myself in his presence, and then to storm the gates of heaven on my son's behalf. I fasted. I prayed. I even went so far as to go into his room and face down the myriad freakish posters and photos he had posted on his walls. I defied these people to try and steal my son's soul out from under me.

For all my resolve, I was shocked at my emotional disequilibrium: I was unable to predict or control my own tears, which erupted effusively at unexpected moments. Isaiah spoke to me again, revealing a similar intensity in the Lord's resolution: "Because I love Zion, because my heart yearns for Jerusalem, I cannot remain silent. I will not stop praying for her until her righteousness shines like the dawn, and her salvation blazes like a burning torch" (62:1).

I was soon to discover, however, that the problem with the all-out combat mode is that battle fatigue sets in before results. The more I prayed, fasted, and otherwise pulled out the stops in spiritual warfare, the more I expected measurable effects. When it became painfully evident that results were not part of this picture (at least at this point), the peaks of inspiration eventually were followed by troughs of dejection. This sense of powerlessness framed the third phase of my sojourn: discouragement.

Journal entry, October 1, 1996: "Surely in vain have I kept my heart pure; in vain have I washed my hands in innocence" (Ps. 73). I am so utterly discouraged. I don't go right to sleep at night so it is hard in the mornings to get up. Almost consistently, I am not rested. I hear the Devil whisper in my ear: "It doesn't do any good. Why not just sleep in and be rested?"

My son's increasingly frequent and unaccounted-for late nights meant that sleeplessness became a way of life. This only exacerbated the many conflicting emotions that assaulted me. My disorientation at times degenerated into hostility; my resolve metamorphosed to dejection. All of these emotions conspired to weigh me down with doubt about God's "intimate acquaintance" with my mistress.

Again, late one night (always late at night) I got up and found an old copy of Augustine's Confessions. I saw in the contents the section titled "Grief of his mother Monnica at his heresy and prayers for his conversion."

Thou sentest Thine hand from above, drewest my soul out of that profound darkness, [as] my mother, thy faithful one, weeping to Thee for me . . . discerned the death wherein I lay. And Thou heardest her, O Lord; Thou heardest her and despised not her tears when, streaming down, they watered the ground under her eyes in every place where she prayed; yea, Thou heardest her.

The Lord sent Monica a dream showing her a vision of a shining youth coming towards her, cheerful and smiling upon her, herself grieving, overwhelmed with grief." Augustine recounted that the dream assured his mother that "where she was, there was I also." She told her son the dream and he contradicted her interpretation, suggesting that it meant she would one day be where he was—without faith. "She was not perplexed by the plausibility of my false interpretation," he said. Her assurance "moved me more than the dream itself."

"Now more cheered with hope," he wrote, "yet no whit relaxing in her weeping and mourning, ceased not at all hours of her devotions to bewail my case unto Thee." A bishop comforted Monica, promising he would speak to her son: "Go thy way and God bless thee, for it is not possible that the son of these tears should perish." And in fact, when her son was 32 years old, many years after the dream, he finally stood "where she was" in the Lord.

I had no visions like Monica's to comfort me that night. But reading a former prodigal's own account of his mother's travail enabled me to drop off to sleep hearing the words he recounted repeatedly in his remembrances: Thou heardest her, O Lord.

Momentary light

There were moments when the darkness lifted and God momentarily gave me his eyes. These moments were like lighthouses in a heavy fog—I was able to see past the immediacy of the pain and instead capture a glimpse of my son as a searching and wandering soul. Once when my heart had been so quickened I got up (long after everyone had gone to bed) and drew an Ewok. Scribbling in a frenzied flurry, the pen followed the same strokes and shading it had 14 years earlier, when my son would curl up next to me exulting in the near-perfectly rendered fuzzy arms, wrinkled boots, draping hood, and rusty spear. That night I captured just the right sparkle in the Ewok's eyes and the exact curl in the dark little lips.

I attached a letter to the picture of the Ewok and left it on my son's pillow. I told him that even though he no longer asks me, I would gladly draw him all the Ewoks he could ever want.

But for all the fleeting blessedness of these glimmers of light, they were not sufficient to quell the force of the pain of his course. My "combat fatigue" and discouragement eventually gave way to acquiescence. By his eighteenth year, it had become painfully apparent that the circumstances of our respective existences were incompatible. We arranged for him to study abroad for his first semester of college, giving us all some needed relief and distance from our turmoil. He was ready to go; I was ready to send him.

Journal entry, December 20, 1997: He leaves in a few weeks. At this stage of our relationship so much has been darkened by confusion and alienation that I don't know how it can be fixed short of both of us being miraculously wiped clean and given a fresh start.

We said good-bye in mid-January. The drive to the airport was quiet with only sporadic superficial chit-chat. He walked 10 steps ahead of us through the many corridors we had to trek to get to the ticket counter, passing through a corridor where glass tiles formed a wavy wall and a free-lance saxophonist was playing a sloppy version of "Somewhere over the Rainbow."

We stayed with him at the gate for the hour and a half prior to his boarding. Airport CNN was on, and I heard more than I wanted to about Oprah's trip to Amarillo, Texas, to take on the beef industry and Al Gore's antigenetic-discrimination legislation.

Marla Maples appeared on Larry King Live, and for a few minutes her blather lulled me into temporarily forgetting what I was there for. She talked about her conversation with Ivana after she and Donald Trump broke up; about how having a child out of wedlock disgraced her Southern Baptist sensibilities; and about how she was "really happy" about her new movie career (movie career?). Then, with shocking suddenness, the boarding call for our son's flight interrupted her mesmerizing inflections. Everyone started shuffling. "Well, son, are you ready?" his dad asked him.

He was.

He hugged his dad and thanked him for sending him. I honestly didn't think I was going to cry because there really hadn't been a lot of emotion welling up inside me up to that point. But my heart started pounding when he hugged me and thanked me too. I told him I loved him and he said it back. I handed him a note I had written him, and then I started to cry; but I kept it inside.

He passed by the ticket checker and started down the ramp. Then he dropped his tickets and had to interrupt the flow of people to pick them up. (I couldn't pick them up for him.) He gathered them and walked on. Bob belled over the heads of several people, "Good-bye, Son!" Our son turned back and saw me waving. There was no stopping the tears. I didn't even try.

My husband put his arm around me and we walked back through the corridors. Marla Maples said that you just have to keep putting one foot in front of the other, no matter how hard it seems. ("Life is full of ups and downs.") So we walked, one foot in front of the other, past the saxophonist (playing "Has Anybody Seen My Gal?") and beyond the wavy glass wall. "If you are walking in darkness, without a ray of light, trust in the LORD and rely on your God," Isaiah says (50:10).

A friend of Ruth Graham's once told her: "You have the right to ask the Mighty One to do more for your children than he could if you were with them. Open thy mouth wide." I decided to stop focusing on my son's choices and start focusing on God's trustworthiness.

This ushered in the next stage of my sojourn as a prodigal's mother: release and trust.

When I read Luke 15 and "The Parable of the Two Lost Sons" (as my husband calls it) soon after that moment, I approached it not as a seminary graduate, but as a struggling mother looking for some help. I was struck by the complete omission of any reference to the Prodigal's mother in that parable.

Where is she?

Thinking about it from the vantage of a mother who, at times, has felt as lost as her son, her absence made perfect sense. Prodigals, I would think, by definition, assert their autonomy in a way that most dramatically severs the intimate parental bonds. And in many cases, that intimacy goes back to the heart of their mothers. That severing leaves mothers like me without a role. So we retreat, emotionally disoriented, physically fatigued, spiritually embattled. (Fathers probably do, too, but that's another article.)

I realized that I needed to subsume my role as tormented mother under that of being a trusting daughter—waiting on God in faith. That didn't mean I stopped praying and weeping for my son. But it helped me understand why, perhaps, "the mother" is not a player in this parable.

My guess is that she was there. She was probably where I have found myself throughout all stages of this sojourn: behind a closed door, looking out a window, waiting for her son to come home. CI

The truth about lies and why good people tell them.

(anatomy of a lie)

the truth about lies and why good people tell them

DIANE M. KOMP M.D.

Jesus said "I am the way, the TRUTH, and the life," yet as Christians, we allow ourselves to indulge in small lies and deceptions every day. Author Diane Komp, M.D. dissects this startlingly common behavior with surgeon-like precision in her new book Anatomy of A Lie. Find out how little lies are at the heart of a bigger problem and what you can do to stop small deceptions from becoming a spiritual cancer in your life. Call 1-800-727-3480 or visit your local Christian bookstore today.

Zondervan Publishing House

www.zondervan.com

Holy Land Oil Lamp

House of David Antiquities

OWN A PIECE OF BIBLE HISTORY!
Authentic Holy Land Oil Lamp dating to the time of 100 BC - 300 AD.

These clay lamps are from a recent discovery of ancient artifacts in the Holy Land. These are the kind of Lamps that Jesus spoke about in the Parable of the Ten Virgins in Mt. 25:1 - "At that time the Kingdom of Heaven will be like ten virgins who took their lamps and went out to meet the bridegroom."

Certificate of Authenticity!

Order today for just $69.95 plus $5.00 for S/H. Delivery in 2-3 weeks. Size approximately 3 in. but styles vary. Limited quantity.

Call 1-800-745-3241

Visa/MC/Discover/Amex

WILD CARD ELECTION

Christian Coalition

JOHN W. KENNEDY

Three months ago, Democratic leaders, buoyed by a humming economy and a popular President, envisioned recapturing the House of Representatives with a swing of 11 seats in the November 3 midterm election.

While pre-election polls show Americans continue to approve of the way President Clinton is handling his job—especially the economy—the release last month of independent counsel Kenneth Starr's report to Congress outlining 11 reasons for impeachment based on the Monica Lewinsky sex scandal has acutely deflated Democratic hopes of gaining in Congress.

Indeed, pollsters are predicting disillusioned voters will stay away in droves. But Alan Secrest, president of Cooper and Secrest, one of the nation's largest Democratic polling firms, says, "The angrier voters are, the more likely they are to turn out." He predicts those few who do end up at the polls will be voting with raw emotions.

John C. Green, director of the Blum Institute of Applied Politics at the University of Akron, estimates that less than a third of the electorate will vote, making it one of the lowest turnouts ever. Conservative Christians, who tend overwhelmingly to vote Republican, could tip the balance in tight races, resulting in a considerable gain for the GOP in Congress. While polls indicate moral issues are so Prayerful reminder: While several speakers at the Christian Coalition Road to Victory conference called for President Clinton's resignation, Rep. J. C. Watts stressed, "The greatest asset we have as Americans is our knees."

The Clinton factor and tensions with the GOP test the mettle of religious conservatives.

denly a priority for the electorate, Republicans run the risk of overplaying their hand and causing a voter backlash.

As the Clinton scandal has unfolded, the organizations that form the backbone of the Religious Right are in flux. The Christian Coalition has retooled since wunderkind Ralph Reed left to become a political consultant last year. Focus on the Family's James Dobson, after clashing with top Republicans earlier this year, suffered a mild stroke in June, blunting his public threat to leave the GOP fold unless Republican leaders refocused on the pro-family agenda. And Family Research Council (FRC) president Gary Bauer, mulling a year 2000 presidential bid, last month began running television commercials in Iowa calling on Clinton to resign.

GRASSROOTS STRENGTH: Despite changing faces and evolving roles at the top of several organizations, some believe the best days of the Religious Right are ahead.

Reed, now an Atlanta-based election consultant, told CHRISTIANITY TODAY, "The strength of the religious conservative movement has never been its leadership, but its grassroots," Reed, 36, says, "The names and the faces of leaders may change, but what never changes is the fact that there are 20 to 30 million committed, devout, conservative people of faith who are deeply concerned about the moral direction of our country."

But has the GOP earned the everlasting loyalty of religious conservatives? Christian conservatives in Congress and state legislatures have few achievements to show to their supporters. The U.S. Senate, state and federal courts, and the White House have in different ways blocked conservative initiatives on taxes, abortion, and religious persecution.

Nevertheless, Randy Tate, the Christian Coalition executive director, suspects that organizational skills will tip the scales in close races. "It isn't going to be TV and radio ads and attack pieces coming through the mail," he says. "It's going to be which organizations are motivated and can turn out their supporters."

The struggle between fiscal and social conservatives rages on within the Republican party. Some GOP operatives try to avoid discussing social issues; yet they realize turnout among grassroots Christian conservatives will be higher than in the nation as a whole. Thus, after 18 months of inactivity, congressional Republicans finally began to act on moral issues over the summer. But the GOP would rather stick to economic issues. A National Republican Congressional Committee "critical issues survey" mailed in July contained questions on government spending, tax hikes, the IRS, government waste, crime, and a balanced budget amendment, but nothing on abortion, homosexuality, school prayer, or the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA). Representative J.C. Watts (R-Okla.), the only black Republican in Congress, says such a strategy may backfire. "If you wait until six months before an election to bring up family issues, what's the Christian community going to think?"

After a February blast from Dobson, who vowed to abandon the GOP unless it acted on pro-family initiatives, fresh attention has been focused on the moral agenda, including removal of federal funding for Planned Parenthood, a ban on fetal-tissue research, an end to federally funded condom distribution, and elimination of the NEA.

Dobson, 62, says he is most frustrated with Republicans who pay lip service to family values at election time but have no commitment to winning in the legislative arena.

Bauer has joined Dobson in attempting to hold the GOP's feet to the fire, especially focusing on China policy and religious persecution (CT, June 16, 1997, p. 54). With faxes going daily to 400,000 constituents, the FRC—originally an arm of Focus on the Family—has become a potent force in calling attention to policy issues. Bauer, too, has threatened to bolt the GOP and take his followers with him.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRESS? Despite Dobson and Bauer's misgivings, Tate is pleased with the GOP-controlled Congress.

"This has been a banner year for the Christian Coalition," Tate says. "Our agenda is getting full attention; our issues are on the front burner on Capitol Hill."

Even though little Christian Coalition-supported legislation has been enacted, Tate sees value in getting legislators on the record for voters.

Several abortion-related issues have been addressed, including restrictions on partial birth abortion, a parental consent bill, and limiting funds for abortions overseas. A $500 tax cut for families has been implemented. Congress also has discussed educational savings accounts, religious freedom, school prayer, and welfare reform.

Tate, now 32, came to Washington as part of the 1994 GOP revolution. But he lost a 1996 election in Washington State and last year replaced Reed at the Christian Coalition (CT, July 14, 1997, p. 60). In spite of a financially rocky start under his watch that included dwindling contributions, layoffs, and downsizing of operations (CT, March 2, 1998, p. 74), the Christian Coalition has rebounded, and Tate finds himself more influential outside of Congress than he was inside.

The Christian Coalition will promote its largest get-out-the-vote program ever, encompassing postcard reminders and an automated phone message from Tate to vote. On Election Day, for the first time, Christian Coalition members will drive voters to the polls. A record number of voting guides—45 million—will be distributed just before the election, primarily at churches. Membership is at 2.1 million, although Christian Coalition spokesperson Molly Clatworthy says there is no formal "membership" and names are not removed. She says the number reflects those who have "volunteered their time and financial support over time."

The lineup of two dozen speakers at the September 18–19 Christian Coalition Road to Victory conference to energize 3,000 faithful members looked like a Religious Right roll call, including National Rifle Association president Charlton Heston, Liberty University founder Jerry Falwell, Empower America codirector William Bennett, Eagle Forum president Phyllis Schlafly, radio show host Oliver North, House Speaker Newt Gingrich, House Majority Leader Dick Armey, Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, House Majority Whip Tom Delay, Sen. John Ashcroft, and FRC's Bauer. Clatworthy says Texas Democrat Rep. Martin Frost and Colorado Gov. Ray Romer, Democratic National Committee chair, had been invited but declined to speak.

CRITICAL VOICES: Moderate evangelicals point out that the Christian Coalition does not represent all people of faith, yet alternative groups such as the Interfaith Alliance and Call to Renewal have not come close in mustering such grassroots strength.

Jim Wallis, convener of the Call to Renewal (CT, Oct. 28, 1996, p. 86), says Tate's group continues to misinterpret biblical mandate. "The most important public policy question that emerges from the Bible is how the poor, the vulnerable are being treated," says Wallis, executive director of Sojourners. "Any organization that is calling itself Christian must have poor people and racial reconciliation on the agenda."

C. Welton Gaddy, executive director of the Interfaith Alliance, says, "Many of the Republicans in Congress are growing weary of trying to satisfy the Religious Right, saying, 'Whatever we do, there's always more they want.'" Gaddy, 56, is one of several moderate and liberal religious leaders who has signed "an appeal for healing" urging Americans to forgive Clinton and let him lead.

The Interfaith Alliance, which published voter guides in 1996 but will not this year, criticizes the Christian Coalition for distributing guides at churches. The Interfaith Alliance is urging candidates to sign a "code of civility" pledging they will not use religion as a political tool.

An IRS investigation dating to 1990 on whether the Christian Coalition's voter guides violate a ban on partisan politicking by tax-exempt groups continues. The Federal Election Commission's (FEC) suit against the Christian Coalition alleges the group engaged in partisan politicking for Republicans (CT, Sept. 16, 1996, p. 115). On September 8, the Christian Coalition asked a federal judge to dismiss the FEC suit. Six days later, the FEC filed a motion reiterating its request to fine the Christian Coalition and halt further political fundraising efforts.

THE PRICE OF PURITY: Politically active pro-family groups face a perennial

Changing of the guard: Randy Tate, far left, finds his Christian Coalition platform more influential than his congressional one. Gary Bauer and Ralph Reed, center, as well as James Dobson, right, continue to be key players in the Religious Right.

dilemma: If they wish to rule, they have to compromise in order to gain a majority. But the act of compromise smacks of betrayal to hardliners. Pragmatists say concessions must be made to ensure input into the political process, while purists say morality and political compromise are often at odds.

Pro-family leaders disagree on whether the Republican party should be more inclusive, with some articulating the so-called big tent philosophy. "The Republican party remains the most pro-family party in modern political history," Reed says. "To walk away from that tremendous achievement would do tremendous and irreparable damage to the pro-family movement."

Yet Dobson believes big-tent backers are in control. "They believe they can avoid such controversial issues as abortion, homosexual activism, safe-sex ideology, school choice," Dobson wrote in an April letter to supporters. "They call it a policy of inclusion, by which they mean that moderates and liberals will be favored and conservatives will be taken or granted."

As analyst Green sees it, "If Ralph Reed wanted a place at the table, you could say James Dobson is very concerned about what's being served."

In the 1996 presidential election, Dobson and Bauer threatened to sit out the campaign if the GOP's Bob Dole followed an abortion-tolerance plank in the platform or failed to pick a pro-life running mate. While Dole appeased Christian conservatives on those two counts, his tepid response to other concerns caused many to stay away from the polls (CT, Oct. 7, 1996, p. 76).

Reed believes Christians who remain at home on November 3 will only help elect candidates with ungodly viewpoints. "While the marriage between the pro-family movement and the Republican party is imperfect, no marriage is perfect, certainly not in politics," Reed says.

Representative Watts, while no stranger to disagreements with GOP leadership, appreciates the constraints they are under. "If you try to measure your success in politics at the end of the day, you're always going to be frustrated," says Watts, who is also a Baptist pastor.

Tate has followed Reed's example as a firm believer in working within the existing system rather than threatening to reinvent it. "It's a recipe for disaster if Christians stay home, because then they have no voice and they become irrelevant," Tate says. "It's a marathon, not a sprint."

The Christian Coalition voter guides divulge which candidates do not toe the line on social issues. Nevertheless, Tate says it is important to forge alliances. Tate says, "We can find common ground with economic conservatives because we're interested in lower taxes and fewer regulations."

However, Rich Tafel, 36-year-old executive director of Log Cabin Republicans, a national organization of homosexual Republicans, may never find a place at the table. Organizers at the Texas state GOP convention in June denied the group a booth, even though they had 50 elected delegates participating.irate Christian protesters shouted at members of the group.

"They purvey hatred in the name of a God and a gospel that is all about love and compassion and forgiveness and generosity, and a God whose particular mission is to reach out to the outcasts," says Tafel, an ordained American Baptist pastor. The success of the Republican party depends on becoming inclusive, rather than using a strict interpretation of Scripture as a litmus test, Tafel believes. RNC cochair Pat Harrison agrees that Log Cabin Republicans must be welcomed. "You can't be a majority party without a lot of different people," she says.

MORAL ARGUMENTS: Both sides in the homosexual-rights debate are using moral arguments to try to shift public opinion to their side. Homosexual-rights advocates demand fairness and equality, while opponents argue that homosexual behavior is destructive to individuals and families.

Recent efforts to adopt clauses prohibiting sexual orientation in discrimination in housing and employment at the state and local level have been largely successful. On the other hand, Senate Majority Leader Lott in June likened homosexuality to kleptomania and alcoholism. In addition, congressional Republicans for months have blocked the nomination of homosexual Democrat James Hormel as ambassador to Luxembourg.

Perhaps no issue has so stirred the fresh wrath of Christian conservatives as Clinton's executive order in May adding "sexual orientation" as a protected class of federal workers against discrimination. Conservative Christians say the executive order will eventually lead to establishing affirmative action and quotas for homosexual workers. Even so, a House proposal in August to repeal the executive order lost 252 to 176, as 63 Republicans chose not to appear in favor of employment discrimination.

Dobson decried the absence of GOP critics when Clinton signed the order. "The wording guarantees that those who claim to be homosexuals will henceforth be given preferential treatment in hiring, firing, and job-related activities," Dobson wrote in his July newsletter.

Bauer warns of further implications. "If homosexuals become a protected class, then same-sex marriage, homosexual adoption, and gay curriculum in the schools can't be far behind," he told supporters in August.

Concerned Women for America chair Beverly LaHaye says "sexual orientation" is not defined in the order. "Will this allow all perversions of sexual behavior to qualify?" LaHaye asks.

Conservatives say the GOP is playing defense against the homosexual-rights agenda at the national level, pressing for same-sex marriage, adoption rights, and employment protections.

IDENTITY POLITICS: Though they are not courting homosexual voters, some GOP candidates are starting to pitch their pro-family message to African Americans and Latinos for the first time.

Republicans have long ignored black voters, who cast nine out of ten ballots for Democrats in some states. But Florida gubernatorial candidate Jeb Bush found out four years ago that ignoring 20 percent of the state's electorate can result in defeat. This year, in his second campaign, he has been venturing into poor inner-city black neighborhoods with great frequency, and he is expected to win.

Moreover, RNC "freedom riders" around the country have been visiting urban black churches, where they have found advocates in the school choice debate after Clinton vetoed education savings accounts.

"We make a mistake if we don't make parental choice an issue, especially in large urban areas," Watts says. "It's going to be the civil-rights issue of the twenty-first century."

Watts says he has repeatedly told Republican leadership that not all African Americans agree with the old guard leadership typified by Jesse Jackson. Republicans can reach blacks, Watts says, because most have the same priorities as whites: lower taxes, safer streets, well-paying jobs, and better schools. "You can't just do outreach three or four months before an election; you have to have a long-term plan," Watts says. "In politics, people don't care how much you know until they know how much you care."

Hispanics are the fastest-growing group of entrepreneurs, and African Americans are developing a middle class, factors that contribute to their interest in the Republican party. But so does a belief in traditional values, according to RNC cochair Harrison. "Hispanics and African Americans are leaving the Democratic party because they believe in faith and family," says Harrison, 56. "If you're not communicating to your customers, they go someplace else."

Watts, 41, is cosponsoring the "American Community Renewal Act of 1998" to spur economic development in urban areas. The measure would require state and local government groups to relax zoning, housing, tax, and business regulations in providing incentives for the working poor.

In the same way that Republicans will no longer write off blacks, pollster Secrest says Democrats will not concede the evangelical vote—an estimated one-third of the electorate—to Republicans. "Evangelicals are important because they are so numerous," Secrest says. "Democratic candidates often alienate evangelicals by inadvertently stiff-arming them by labeling them as extremist. Close to half of evangelicals are Democrats or independents." Secrest is advising Democrats to advertise on Christian radio. Bob Doyle, a Democratic consultant with Sutter's Mill Fund Raising and Strategy, has three clients advertising on Christian radio emphasizing their pro-life views. But they also stress personal accountability, trust, and character. "Democrats should not be ceding these issues to Republicans," he says. Doyle advises his clients to visit churches in their districts as part of the strategy to reach people of faith.

ON THE FRINGE: As Democrats and Republicans both tussle over middle-of-the-road voters, several fringe candidates are running this fall, using iconoclastic rhetoric that may appeal to Americans deeply alienated from electoral politics.

Political novice Geoffrey Fieger, a lawyer who has successfully defended assisted-suicide practitioner Jack Kevorkian against three murder charges, is the Democratic nominee for governor in Michigan. Fieger is known for his insolence, calling Republican Gov. John Engler "the product of miscegenation between barnyard animals and human beings" and Jesus "just some goofball that got nailed to the cross."

Margaret Cammermeyer, whose successful efforts to be reinstated in the military has been saluted by Hollywood in the TV movie Serving in Silence, is one of four Democratic lesbians seeking to become the first openly homosexual nonincumbent elected to Congress. Cammermeyer, a 56-year-old decorated Vietnam War veteran, is running in Washington's Second District.

Operation Rescue founder Randall Terry is running for a U.S. congressional seat from New York as a political outsider who has toned down the rhetoric. His speeches and television commercials focus not on the "baby killers" and "sodomites" that Terry passionately crusaded against only four years ago, but on making social security voluntary and abolishing the IRS.

"Everyone already knows my pro-life credentials," says Terry, 39. "The challenge is to show I'm not a one-issue candidate." In speeches to churches in 1994, Terry accused Christian Coalition leader Reed of selling out to the big tent theory of GOP leaders (CT, Sept. 12, 1994, p. 61). Now he welcomes Christian Coalition members into his fold.

Terry, who has been arrested three dozen times, urged supporters to shove a aborted fetus in the face of Bill Clinton during the 1992 presidential campaign. Dobson endorsed Terry, saying "he's been a great friend of the family" and "I wish we had a dozen more like him in Congress." To protect Focus on the Family's nonprofit tax status, Dobson makes his political pronouncements as a "private citizen."

Terry has raised $800,000, much of it from pro-lifers, and he continues to host a Christian radio talk show. Last month Terry finished second in the September GOP primary with 35 percent of the vote. Nevertheless, he will be on the November ballot as the Right to Life party candidate.

Meanwhile, 27 conservative politicians have hired Reed as a consultant. Reed may no longer be as pivotal as when he led the Christian Coalition, but as head of Century Strategies he could become as influential in a party that now has a majority in both houses of Congress and control of almost three-fourths of the governorships. In this year's primaries, 13 out of 15 of his clients won, and a half-dozen potential presidential contenders have inquired about his services.

"When I founded Century Strategies a year ago, my goal was to elect 100 pro-family, pro-faith, pro-free enterprise candidates at every level of government, but especially statewide and Congress," Reed told CT. "If we can do that over the next ten years, the transformation for the nation will be as dramatic as it was when African Americans and women candidates had their successes."

With reporting by Christine J. Gardner

Israel's Holocaust

A Jewish rabbi asks: Why shouldn't abortion in Israel be compared to the mass murder of Jewish children in Hitler's Europe?

Jacob Neusner

Rabbi Jacob Neusner has been called "the best friend Christianity has in this country" for his advocacy against public funding of anti-Christian art when he served during the 1980s on the national Council of the Arts (see "What the Rabbi Taught Me About Jesus," CT, Sept. 13, 1993, p. 27). A religion professor at the University of South Florida, Tampa, and Bard College, New York, he describes himself as "just a happy disciple of the sages of the Torah." Here the Harvard-trained author of 750 books (the Chronicle of Higher Education named him one of the most prolific authors in academia) turns his never-timid pen to an issue that hit him close to home—abortion.

My heart is broken. Just now, my wife's brother called from Jerusalem. He reported that his son's estranged wife the day before had aborted the baby they conceived two months earlier, on the very eve of the couple's final separation leading to divorce.

No law stood in the way of this act, no argument from morality. The Torah did not intervene. Lacking all legal rights—the child was not murdered, it was deemed a mere protoplasm to which my nephew had contributed—"it" had merely been "removed." The father was not consulted. Had he been, he would have confirmed that he wanted and would take paternal responsibility to raise the child. The grandparents had no say. They would gladly have welcomed the baby and, if asked, would have undertaken to nurture him or her.

Ah! phone calls from Jerusalem! That was not the first time the phone rang with news of family death in Jerusalem. More than 25 years ago, my brother-in-law called to tell us that my father-in-law had died in Jerusalem. As a tourist, he went swimming in the pool at the King David Hotel and, exhausted after a day of touring, drowned. The only difference was no one pulled him under and held him down. My brother-in-law's voice now, as then, was rich in sadness and pathos.

And why not? This perfectly healthy and normal infant in its mother's womb enjoyed every possibility of life, until the collusion of the mother and her physician took away any chance to live. It was an act of deliberation, with full knowledge of the consequence. I wish I could explain to myself why it is not comparable to an act of murder: deliberate, fully intentional annihilation of the life of another.

We Jews are experienced in suffering murder, and we preserve the memory of the victims and their murderers. That is why we build museums. That is why I ask, how is mass abortion in the State of Israel such as is practiced by the secular (but not the religious) portion of the Israeli population not comparable to mass murder of Jewish children in German Europe? The well-documented cases of Nazis murdering infants and children—more than a million of them—involved not only the born but the unborn, including forced abortions, the killing of pregnant women and their unborn children, and the like. Is not abortion on demand an act of wanton and deliberate destruction of life? I think it is. Does not the state's provision for abortion on demand, a choice made preferable by the state's omission of aggressive provision for mothers to carry their children to term, compare to the state's sponsorship of mass murder? I think it does. As the numbers mount up, when do considerations of volume enter in and validate calling the annihilation of millions of lives "a Holocaust"? I think they do. Here is a Holocaust today. Every Jewish child born in the State of Israel is a survivor of the Holocaust sustained by Israeli law.

The State of Israel rightly invokes the Holocaust as a primary cause in the creation of the state itself: a refuge and a hope for the victims of the Holocaust. But its liberal abortion laws, the prevalence of abortion as a medium of contraception, the routine character of decisions to abort as a perfectly ordinary medical procedure—these political facts of public policy constitute the counterpart to the race laws and state-organized offices and institutions of mass murder that shame Germany through all eternity.

The difference is, Germany has acknowledged its shame. But for the annual annihilation of tens of thousands of Jewish children, the State of Israel acknowledges nothing. And, here at home, American Jewry's consensus is one-sidedly pro-choice. In desperation I try to tell myself abortion is not a Jewish issue. But the Torah intervenes, teaching that human life comes from God. And, when it hits within a family, it becomes very much a Jewish issue, too, no less than it is a Christian and a Muslim issue.

The abortionists call themselves "pro-choice." Indeed so, and the Torah teaches, "Choose life."

Every Jewish child born in the State of Israel is a survivor of the Holocaust sustained by Israeli law.

Abraham Kuyper: A Man for This Season

The surprisingly relevant advice of a Dutch statesman for engaging postmodern culture.

Richard J. Mouw

The Dutch statesman Abraham Kuyper founded two newspapers, a university, a political party, and a denomination. Nor was he content to start something and then move on to quite a different project. During his career, which lasted from his ordination in the 1860s until his death in 1920, he regularly wrote articles for his newspapers; he taught theology at the Free University; he led his party both as a member of the Dutch Parliament and, for a few years, as prime minister; and he played an active role in the life (and controversies) of the Dutch Reformed churches.

Kuyper visited the United States in 1898, to deliver the Stone Lectures at Princeton Seminary. To observe the centennial of that visit, Princeton invited Yale philosopher Nicholas Wolterstorff to be this year's Stone Lecturer. Wolterstorff focused his lectures on political thought, describing his views as "in the line of Kuyper." The Princeton event, held this past February, drew an audience of over 300; it also featured two days' worth of seminars (cosponsored with Princeton Seminary by the Free University, Calvin College, and the Center for Public Justice) on Kuyper's thought, with presenters from the United States, Canada, England, the Netherlands, and South Africa.

The influence of Kuyper's thought has long been felt in the Reformed—especially Dutch Calvinist—branch of American evangelicalism, but the Princeton conference displayed a renewed interest in his thought, especially as it applies to contemporary challenges in public discipleship. His views were compared to the Puritan political traditions, the liberal "social gospel" theology, and recent themes in Catholic social thought.

Princeton ethicist Max L. Stackhouse, a principal organizer of the centennial celebration, saw the gathering as an important step in what he described as a "quest for a new public theology that will provide a viable alternative to both liberationism and a laissez faire ideology." Stackhouse, who was once an assistant pastor in a Unitarian congregation, describes himself as a "convert" to Reformed thought. "It happened when I began reading the Puritans," he says; "I now see the Reformed heritage as at the center of future ecumenical thinking about our Christian responsibilities in the world."

Abraham Kuyper also came to Reformed orthodoxy by way of conversion. Entering the pastorate steeped in the liberal theology that he had been taught at the University of Leiden, he encountered parishioners who exhibited a vibrant evangelical faith. One of them, Pietje Baltus, miller's young daughter, boycotted his worship services because of the content of his preaching. When Kuyper visited her, she refused to shake his hand. Instead of being offended, Kuyper listened carefully. Later he wrote: "I did not set myself against them and I still thank my God that I made the choice I did. Their unwavering persistence has been a blessing for my heart, the rise of the morning star in my life."

Having embraced evangelical Calvinism, Kuyper ever thereafter placed a strong emphasis on personal piety. In the midst of his busy public career, he wrote hundreds of meditations about the need for the individual believer to turn away from the demands of the active life and retreat into that very private sacred space where the soul is alone with her Maker.

In addition to his celebration of the experience of a Savior's love, he also placed a strong emphasis on the supreme lordship of Jesus Christ over all spheres of creaturely life. Kuyper's followers are fond of quoting the manifesto he issued at the Free University's inaugural convocation: "There is not a square inch in the whole domain of our human existence over which Christ, who is sovereign over all, does not cry 'Mine!'"

One of Kuyper's most original themes is his idea of "sphere sovereignty." God, he insisted, built into the creation a variety of cultural spheres, such as the family, economics, politics, art, and intellectual inquiry. Each of these spheres has its own proper "business" and needs its own unique pattern of authority. When we confuse spheres, by violating the proper boundaries of church and state, for instance, or reducing the academic life to a business enterprise, we transgress the patterns that God has set.

As a Calvinist, Kuyper also believed in the pervasiveness of God's sovereignty.

Abraham Kuyper

ive reality of sin. In our present fallen-ness, the state has a special obligation to patrol the boundaries that separate the spheres. But governments too are affected by sin. Indeed, the "antithesis" between sin and grace cuts through all the spheres. Nevertheless, the original glory of God's creating purposes has not been completely limned. Not only are Christians called to how forth obedience to God's rule in all areas of life, but the presence of "common grace" in the world guarantees that glimmers of created goodness will shine through even where Christ's lordship is not acknowledged.

Kuyper's perspective on social issues has much in common with the views being put forth today by thinkers who are concerned with the proper shape of "the good society." A number of North American social critics (Peter Berger, Robert Bellah, and Mary Ann Glendon among them) have emphasized in recent years the important role that "mediating structures" play in providing a buffer zone between the individual and the state. Families, churches, and service organizations protect us from the all-encompassing tendencies of the state, on the one hand, and an isolated individualism, on the other.

Like these contemporary thinkers, Kuyper was eager to curb the power of the state. The various cultural spheres do not exist by governmental permission. They are established by God, and no human authority has the right to violate the Creator's intentions. Kuyper would appreciate the emphasis these days on "mediating structures," but he would be nervous about any tendency to spell out their importance in purely pragmatic terms. Families and artists' guilds are useful, in Kuyper's scheme, not merely for their strategic importance in limiting the range of governmental authority, but because they play a positive role in God's designs for helping people to flourish.

Kuyper's contemporary disciples face the challenge of defending his emphasis on the multiplicity of created spheres in a time when the fragmentation of human life is all too obvious. Don't we already compartmentalize our lives too much? Do we really need an elaborate theological justification for doing so? The New Age movement responds to the fragmenting of our lives by inviting us to transcend apparent polarities—public versus private, science versus the mystical—with the promise of new experiences of "connectedness." The radical postmodernists, on the other hand, encourage us to embrace fragmentation by rejecting "totalizing metanarratives" and resisting "the tyranny of wholes."

Kuyper's perspective suggests a way of avoiding these conflicting prescriptions for our present-day ills. The created "spheres," as he saw things, are not completely disconnected. They are a part of a larger created reality whose unity we can fully grasp only by developing a comprehensive "biblical world-and-life view" (one of his favorite phrases). The diverse arenas of human interaction are ultimately coordinated and linked in their mutual relationship to the transcendent will of the God who reveals his creating and redeeming purposes to us in the Scriptures.

We will not grasp the unity, then, by positing the "inner" connections of things that seem polarized. Only God's authoritative Word can shed the light that is necessary to illumine our post-modern pathways. In the Scriptures we learn that the creation is a cosmos and not a chaos, and that while the structures of creation are presently fallen, God still sustains them by his power and redeems them in Jesus Christ, in whom "all things hold together" (Col. 1:17).

If Kuyper's thought is to contribute significantly, though, to the contemporary dialogue about public discipleship, it needs updating. He was given to racist comments and often used uncharitable terms in describing other Christian traditions. And he proclaimed the supreme authority of the ascended Christ in a manner that could easily encourage a Christian "takeover" mentality.

The resources for this necessary updating can be found within his own life and witness. In some of his writings he showed a remarkable sensitivity to the plight of the poor and oppressed—and he could even sound like a feminist at times! More important, his devotion to Christ occasionally demonstrated a deep sensitivity to nontriumphalist themes. The noted Kuyper scholar George Puchinger reports that a crucifix hung on the wall above Kuyper's bed. As he lay dying, no longer capable of speech, with his children gathered around him, Kuyper pointed to the image of the Savior on the cross. This is a picture of Kuyper's faith that should loom large in the much-needed effort to explore the contemporary relevance of his public theology. CT

Richard J. Mouw is president of Fuller Theological Seminary.

Those who wish to explore Kuyper's thought will find excellent resources in three volumes recently published by Eerdmans.

The first is Abraham Kuyper: A Centennial Reader (498 pp.; $45, paper), edited by James D. Bratt, a beautifully produced book that includes a helpful overview of Kuyper's life and work and a selected bibliography. This is the best available introduction to Kuyper. Near unto God: Daily Meditations for Contemporary Christians (240 pp.; $14, paper), adapted by James Calvin Schaap, is an abridgement of Kuyper's devotional classic. Schaap, a gifted writer of fiction with a sinewy style, has sought to make Kuyper's meditations accessible to contemporary readers.

Finally, for advanced study, Peter S. Heslam's Creating a Christian Worldview: Abraham Kuyper's Lectures on Calvinism (300 pp.; $28, paper) offers an invigorating in-depth engagement with Kuyper's Stone Lectures, setting Kuyper's thought in its historical context and underscoring its continuing relevance. CT

REFLECTIONS

Classic and contemporary excerpts

Talk Less, Listen More

Christian spirituality does not begin with us talking about our experience; it begins with listening to God call us, heal us, forgive us.

—Eugene H. Peterson in Subversive Spirituality

Where Jesus Isn't Lord

Non-Christians will insist that we should keep our religion out of the way of their politics. But the reason for that is not that Jesus has nothing to do with the public realm; it is that they want nothing to do with Jesus as Lord.

—John Howard Yoder in
The Death Penalty Debate

Divine Chains

As a Christian, I am a prisoner of hope.

—Cornel West, quoted in
The Other Side
(July & Aug. 1998)

Seeing with God's Eyes

Here lies hidden the great call to conversion: to look not with the eyes of my own low self-esteem, but with the eyes of God's love. As long as I keep looking at God as a landowner, as a father who wants to get the most out of me for the least cost, I cannot but become jealous, bitter, and resentful toward my fellow workers or my brothers and sisters. But if I am able to look at the world with the eyes of God's love and discover that God's vision is not that of a stereotypical landowner or patriarch but rather that of an all-giving and forgiving father who does not measure out his love to his children according to how well they behave, then I quickly see that my only true response can be deep gratitude.

—Henri J. Nouwen in The Return of the Prodigal Son: A Story of Homecoming

The Creator Is Preminent

"What is the object of my love?" I asked the earth and it said: "It is not I." I asked all that is in it; they made the same confession. . . . I asked the sea, the deeps, the living creatures that creep, and they responded: "We are not your God, look beyond us." I asked the breezes which blow and the entire air with its inhabitants . . . heaven, sun, moon, and stars; they said: "Nor are we the God whom you seek." And I said to all these things in my external environment: "Tell me of my God who you are not, tell me something about him." And with a great

Our Yoke Sharer

It is not easy to be a human being. Human life carries with it marvelous possibilities of joy, but there are, at the same time, untold ways in which it can go wrong. Even after we have learned all that we can of the literature of tragedy, we have but an imperfect sense of the sorrow and frustrations which occur in countless lives. . . .

The universality of human sorrow and need is one of the reasons for the great attractiveness of the words of Jesus which appear at the end of the eleventh chapter of Matthew. When Jesus says, "Come unto me, all ye who labor and are heavy laden," He is really speaking to all.

—Elton Trueblood in
The Book of Jesus,
Calvin Miller, ed.

voice they cried out: "He made us. . . . We are not God" and "He made us."

—Augustine in
Confessions, Book X

Making the Awesome Adorable

After centuries of technological striving, we finally got to Earth's strange sere sibling Mars—and found rocks named Yogi, Scooby Doo, and Barnacle Bill. Someone high up in NASA must have issued a firm directive: "Keep it cuddly, guys. We don't want Mars to seem like, you know, outer space."

We do it all the time, of course. Watch one of our shlockier televangelists, and you'll be introduced to an affable deity eager to be enlisted as your personal genie. . . . At least the ancient Hebrews had the good sense to make Yahweh unnameable and unseeable except in the flames of a burning bush—a permanent Mystery. . . .

We are insisting, in our pathetic provincialism, that there is nothing out there—either in the mythic past or the distant reaches of space—that can't be labled, depicted and potentially marketed by the late 20th century American entertainment culture.

—Barbara Ehrenreich in Time (Aug. 25, 1997)

Cosmic View

Congregations are not just places to be reminded of what one ought to do. They are spaces where "ought" is put in cosmic perspective.

—Nancy Tatom Ammerman in Congregation and Community

The Reconciliation Walk

"From the beginning of the Reconciliation Walk, the Holy Spirit has stressed to us that we must walk in the true spirit of the Cross. The Crusaders used the Cross as a banner for battle, but we are called to redeem its meaning among Muslims and Jews. We must do more than carry the message, WE MUST BE THE MESSAGE."

Lynn Green

The aim of the Reconciliation Walk is to mark the 900th anniversary of the Crusades by conveying a person-to-person message of apology from western Christians to Muslims, Jews and Orthodox Christians.

The Reconciliation Walk is an effective approach for defusing some of the suspicions in which Muslims, Jews and the Orthodox Church view western Christians.

Its effectiveness will be due to the indispensable value of meeting one another face-to-face and to prayer. You now have an unprecedented opportunity to participate and help defuse the bitter legacy of the Crusades.

You can participate for as little as 10 days or for as long as 3 weeks (depending on location); we recommend small teams of between 3-8 people, though you can apply as an individual.

Immediately before you start your reconciliation walk (to Syria or Lebanon), you will need to attend a 2-day orientation on location in Beirut.

All you have to do is contact us at either our US or UK office for application forms. Upon receipt we will then arrange accommodation for your Orientation time and help you with international/internal flights. The location/route you will take and accommodation, after Orientation, along that route will all be arranged and booked at Orientation. It's as simple as that and you'll soon be on your way.

"This is a wonderful idea, I compliment all of you on your largeness of spirit. This is very much needed, a very important project".

LEBANESE AMBASSADOR, USA

ORIENTATION DATES ARE AS FOLLOWS:

September 13th-16th
October 11th-14th
November 22nd-25th
January 17th-20th
February 21st-24th
March 21st-24th

(arrive Beirut 13th and depart for the rest of your trip on September 16th)
(arrive Beirut 11th and depart for the rest of your trip on October 14th)
(arrive Beirut on 22nd and depart for the rest of your trip on November 25th)
(arrive Beirut on 17th and depart for the rest of your trip on January 20th)
(arrive in Beirut on 21st and depart from the rest of your trip on February 24th)
(arrive in Beirut on 21st and depart from the rest of your trip on March 24th)

Extra

There is also a tour from October 29th-November 9th — Southern Turkey, Syria and Beirut. Visiting fascinating Crusaders sites, with visiting speakers opening up historical and spiritual insights. There will be opportunities to share the Reconciliation message in three countries, with worship and prayer being offered in the many locations which are of current, strategic importance.

Future

There will also be further opportunities to participate between April and the end of the project in July 1999. WATCH THIS SPACE!

FOR MORE INFORMATION/APPLICATION FORMS, PLEASE CONTACT:

The Reconciliation Walk, P.O. Box 38369, Colorado Springs, CO 80937
Tel: 719-540-0914 Fax: 719-527-2680 Email: recwalk@aol.com

OR

The Reconciliation Walk (SL), PO Box 61, HARPENDEN, Hertfordshire, AL5 4JJ
Tel/Fax: 01582 766019 Email: Reconciliation@compuserve.com

Veils, Kisses, and Biblical Commands

Q: Most evangelicals don't ask women to wear a head covering when praying or expect slaves to obey masters—because "that was just their culture." Yet many do forbid women to preach—because "this is a spiritual principle not bound by culture." How do I determine which directives are culture-bound and which are not?

—Dave Searcey, San Antonio, Texas

A: Everyone would agree that Paul's request for Timothy to pick up his cloak in Troas was a one-time request not addressed to all Christians always and everywhere. We also agree that biblical guidance to slaves addressed a specific cultural context and does not require us to reinstitute the practice so we can obey it. But we still disagree over women's ordination and even the head covering. Why? Because distinguishing transcultural principles from the cultural setting in which the Bible communicates them is sometimes difficult.

Some students I taught in Nigeria affirmed the practice of the women's head covering as described in 1 Corinthians 11. "The Bible commands it," they noted. But when I asked why none of them had greeted me with a holy kiss that day, they laughed. The temptation is to appeal to "common sense" as to what is time-bound and what is not. But our "common sense" often proves time-bound as well. In a sense, everything in the Bible has a cultural setting; yet everything in the Bible also remains God's Word. God inspired the biblical writers to address the issues of their day, and we will hear God's message when we properly apply their message to analogous situations today. This requires several steps. I will apply them here to the question of the head covering.

First, we need to understand what issues the biblical writers were addressing. The text itself helps us reconstruct some of these issues, but we can fill in many other gaps by learning what cultural matters the first readers took for granted (and therefore did not need to hear explained). Various tools, such as the new International Standard Bible Encyclopedia or the IVP Bible Background Commentaries, can help in reconstructing these backgrounds. We have learned that people covered their heads for various reasons, but women in the Eastern Mediterranean especially covered their hair when they got married. Because many people considered hair the chief element of female beauty, they believed that only a husband should view his wife's hair. Many thus associated uncovered hair with seduction. More wealthy women, however, paid a lot for their stylish hair fashion and often left their hair uncovered, possibly exacerbating tension between wealthier and poorer women.

Second, we need to examine how the biblical writer deals with the contemporary issue he addresses. Granted that the author addresses a specific issue of his day, what transcultural principles guide his argument? Paul certainly would oppose behavior that could appear seductive; he also warns against bringing dishonor on one's family. Paul also opposed ostentation and class division in the church.

The third (and most difficult) step is determining which situations today are truly analogous to the biblical situations. For example, could the principle Paul uses to support head coverings in Corinth ever require some women not to wear head coverings today? What if head coverings themselves become ostentatious objects of attention or attraction (like other adornments in 1 Tim. 2:9)? What if one lives in a culture where wearing such coverings proves more of a stumbling block than not wearing them? For example, in West Philadelphia, we usually associate such coverings with Islam.

The difficulty in finding accurate analogies becomes greater as our cultures move further and further from the biblical cultures. Yet one can trace different cultures even in the Bible: an ideal ancient Israelite woman might sell clothing in the marketplace (Prov. 31); in the Greek culture of Ephesus, however, an ideal matron might provide a better witness at home (1 Tim. 5:14). Is it possible that on some issues more than one practice is acceptable, depending on the culture we are addressing?

Doubtless, interpreters and faith communities will differ on specific cases of what is analogous and what is not, but most will agree on the principles of interpretation outlined above. That we sometimes come to different conclusions using the same method reinforces the need for charity on secondary issues and reliance on the Holy Spirit to guide us into a truth. But it also draws our attention to the central messages that always remain clear in Scripture, such as the saving message of the gospel and basic ethical issues. Much of Scripture simply contextualized these central points for their first readers' cultures, giving us examples for how we should contextualize the central biblical message for our cultures today. C

By Craig S. Keener, a visiting professor at Eastern Seminary in Philadelphia and author of The IVP Bible Background Commentary: New Testament. Send your questions for evangelical scholars to CTedit@aol.com.

The temptation is to appeal to "common sense" as to what is time-bound and what is not.

NOW WHAT?

Let Us Bring The Momentum To Your Church!

Man in the Mirror can help you create, capture, and sustain momentum with Success That Matters®. This exciting men's event has brought about proven results in hundreds of churches nationwide.¹

More than just an event...

MAN
— IN THE — MIRROR
www.maninthemirror.com

¹ 70% of the men who attend Success That Matters® seminars become involved in a six week follow up within their local church.

Are you a men's ministry leader interested in reaching men and keeping them?

CALL 1-800-929-2536 ext. 1 for a FREE information packet.

Moms in the Crossfire

Moms absorb insanely conflicted messages about what they should or should not do.

“Work or home? Breast or bottle? Spanking or spoiling?” asks the front cover of the New York Times Magazine. “No matter what they choose, they’re made to feel bad.” This “special issue on the joy and guilt of motherhood” is titled in big red letters: “Mothers Can’t Win.”

Is this a special issue from 1987? 1993? 1972? Does it matter? This story has had more lives than Shirley MacLaine. No matter how we fret about the situation, it never gets better, and it never goes away. It’s a bad rash, and we’re stuck with it.

A survey in the Washington Post not long ago asked respondents their opinion of “recent changes” in the status and role of women. What recent changes? I wondered. The trend of young women once more staying home to raise their kids? The emergence of “sequencing” a woman’s career around the child-rearing years? No, these changes are apparently too recent to be on the Post’s radar screen. By “recent changes,” the survey meant the entry of women into the professional workplace.

So why does a change heralded in the sixties still feel “recent”? Because it isn’t working. The fatal flaw in the feminists’ plan to reject traditional roles was lumping childrearing in with housework. Most women would gladly kiss a dustpan goodbye, but kissing Junior goodbye as he shrieked in the daycare worker’s arms proved more difficult. Women in the workplace isn’t the problem. Moms in the workplace is.

“No matter what they choose, they’re made to feel bad.” By whom? The government, the experts, their husbands, their in-laws? Nope; the prime culprit is themselves. It’s an inside job.

The more moms absorb insanely conflicted messages about what they should or should not do, the less able they are to tune in to their instinctive knowledge of how to handle a particular child at a particular moment.

Their confidence is shot. In a state like this, any decision (“Breast or bottle? Spanking or spoiling?”) dies the death of a thousand reversals.

Whatever they end up doing, they fear, is probably wrong.

Now comes the coup de grâce, in the form of (wouldn’t you know it) a controversial new book proposing that it doesn’t matter what parents do. Parents are irrelevant, says Judith Rich Harris in The Nurture Assumption. Half of a child’s makeup is genetic, and the other half, she says, comes mostly from peers. Why do the children of immigrants speak English without their parents’ accents? Why do twins raised separately show so few signs of their home parents’ influence? Social scientists presume they need to scrutinize parents more closely, but Harris claims the influence simply isn’t there. For all their guilt and fretting, moms don’t affect their children much. The child shapes himself in response to outside influences, and moms merely react. That, and do laundry.

This is liberating news, according to Harris. “A lot of people who should be contributing children to our society, who could be contributing very useful and fine children, are reluctant to do it, or are waiting very long to have children, because they feel that it requires such a huge commitment,” she told the New Yorker. “If they knew that it was O.K. to have a child and let it be reared by a nanny or put in a day-care center, or even to send it to a boarding school, maybe they’d believe that it would be O.K. to have a kid. You can have a kid without having to devote your entire life—your entire emotional expenditure—to this child for the next twenty years.”

Harris’s attempt to coax elite people into having children recalls the turn-of-the-century eugenics slogan, “More from the fit, less from the unfit.” But her promise that they can do so because kids don’t require much of an investment recalls similar promises about used cars. Moms usually find that they make a massive emotional investment in their children whether they expected to or not, and it lasts far more than twenty years. Knowing that outside forces can shape their children does not make moms carefree; it’s one more reason they worry.

What is missing in all this theorizing is respect for the depth of the mother-child relationship. In Scripture, mothers from Rebekah to Mary knew their children, and they gave instructions confident of how the child would react. That’s the secret weapon moms know. They know because they stand in a stream of mother knowledge that rolls back for millennia. They know because they stand in a community of experienced mothers of all ages, whom they respect rather than denigrate as “mere housewives.” They know because they know their kids, with the kind of knowledge gained only by quantity time. Some problems are easy and some are hard, and some you just have to wait and pray for resolution. The common theme is constant love, even when it suffers.

Harris says, “Don’t worry, be happy,” and the New York Times says, “Worry.” A third alternative to trust your instincts, know your children, and love ’em for all you’re worth. Parental love, after all, is the model God chose to describe how he loves us. That is a good time to go with the higher authority. C

Once Every Thousand Years Or So, Notable Opportunity Comes Along...

This One Features A Return Engagement At The Sea Of Galilee

Announcing JERUSALEM 2000 — The event of the millennium

Christians from around the world will travel to the Holy Land in the year 2000, for good reason. Where better to celebrate the millennial milestone of Jesus? But only relatively few will have the worship experience offered by Jerusalem 2000.

This unique, limited-registration event package will not only allow participants to tour the Holy Land, but will enable them to worship the Holy One as never before.

Jerusalem 2000 includes praise and worship, and on-location experiences produced for Christians by Christians. These include participation in dramatic reenactments of biblical accounts, staged in the natural setting of the land where the events occurred. Be a part of the story, when you join the cast in the reenactment of the baptism of Jesus in the River Jordan, Jesus walking on water at the Sea of Galilee, Ruth and Boaz gleaning wheat from the fields of Judea, carry the sheaves of the first fruits in a grand processional through the streets of Jerusalem, and take part in a grand worship service at Mt. Zion broadcast around the world.

Group reservations are now available.

Spaces are limited.

- Only twelve U.S. departures
- Attractive group leader incentives
- Flexible installment payment plan
- Quality travel arrangements
- Keynote speakers include

Dr. Don Argue, Dr. Pat Robertson,
Dr. Robert Schuller, Dr. Paul Walker and more

- Commissioned by The Millennium Council —
an inter-denominational coalition of Christian leaders

While all departure dates are open to everyone, some fellowships, associations and denominations have selected specific dates and are encouraging their members to travel during that time. To find out if your organization has selected a specific departure date, ask to speak to the group coordinator at the number below.

Call today for a complete information packet
(800) 477-2306 (561) 278-8113 fax

BOOKS

Stumped by Repentance

A dying Nazi asked concentration-camp inmate Simon Wiesenthal for forgiveness—and so he asks us, What would you have said?

The Sunflower: On the Possibilities and Limits of Forgiveness, by Simon Wiesenthal, with a symposium edited by Harry James Cargas and Bonny V. Fetterman. Revised and expanded edition (Schocken, 271 pp.; $24, hardcover, $13, paper). Reviewed by L. Gregory Jones, dean of the Divinity School at Duke University and author of Embodying Forgiveness (Eerdmans).

The story is gripping, moving, yet harrowing: a dying Nazi confesses his complicity in mass murder to a Jew imprisoned in a concentration camp, and even asks the Jew for forgiveness. How should the Jew respond? How could he be expected to respond?

This might make for an ingenious piece of fiction; alas, it is a true story that happened to none other than Simon Wiesenthal, the remarkable man most noted for his work tracking down Nazi war criminals. He is also noted for The Sunflower, his account of an encounter in 1944 with Karl, a Nazi, and Karl's deathbed confession.

The Sunflower begins with Wiesenthal, an educated

Jew, as an inmate in a concentration camp in Poland. He is part of a work detail that is sent from the camp to do cleanup work in a makeshift hospital for wounded German soldiers, a building that had once been the school that Wiesenthal attended. Along the way, Wiesenthal notices a cemetery for deceased Germans; he notices that each grave has a sunflower on it. For Wiesenthal, the sunflower signifies many contrasts between the fate of the Nazi dead on the one hand, and his anticipated fate and those of Jews like him on the other: individual graves, decorated with sunflowers, versus mass graves, unmarked and unmarkable. Continual connections to the living world versus a loss of all such connection.

Upon arriving at the hospital, Wiesenthal is ordered by a nurse—indeed, a nun—to follow her into the building. He is taken down the hallways, and then brought into a room where he encounters a dying Nazi, a 21-year-old SS man named Karl. Karl's body is wrapped in bandages, covering even his eyes and head, and he is barely able to speak. Yet before he dies he wants to confess a crime that has been "torturing" his memory, and more specifically, he wants to confess to a Jew. He wants to confess his shame at having become a Nazi.

Even more, he wants to confess a particular episode in which he killed a family trying to flee the building, crammed with hundreds of Jews, in which the Nazis had set fire. He cannot get the family's faces out of his mind; he covers his blind eyes as he retells the episode to Wiesenthal. After receiving his mortal wounds, he tells Wiesenthal, a later battle in which he could not bring himself to shoot another group of Jews. As the faces of the family he had killed earlier filled his consciousness, a shell exploded by his side, causing his blindness, and, eventually, his death.

As Wiesenthal listens to Karl's story, he is simultaneously attracted to the authenticity of the confession and repelled by the horrifying tale Karl is telling. Wiesenthal's thoughts continually return to the sunflowers, signifying the different worlds of dying Nazis and Jews. As Karl confesses, Wiesenthal does not leave, but neither does he speak. Wiesenthal has no doubts that Karl's confession reflects "true repentance"; Karl indicates that he wants to die "in peace

Begging for forgiveness:
The dying Nazi wanted to confess his crime to a Jew and die "in peace."
Wiesenthal walked away in silence.

and that he has "longed to talk about [his crime] to a Jew and beg forgiveness from him." Wiesenthal is moved by Karl's repentance, yet he concludes that the contrast between the dying Nazi and the doomed Jew is too great; "between them there seemed to rest a sunflower. At last I made up my mind and without a word I left the room."

Yet Wiesenthal is troubled, indeed haunted, by questions about what he did or failed to do. When he returns to the camp, he asks his fellow inmates what they would have done. After the war ends, he takes the time to go to see Karl's mother, wanting to find out from her more about Karl's character. The mother's words confirm Wiesenthal's judgment about the truthfulness of Karl's confession and the sincerity of his repentance. Yet Wiesenthal is also troubled by the lack of remorse shown by most of the Nazis who were brought to trial after the war. And so, at the end of the tale, Wiesenthal continues to wonder: "Ought I to have forgiven him?"

He notes that there are many kinds of silence, and he wonders whether his own silence perhaps was more eloquent than words might have been. He also indicates that "only the sufferer is qualified to make the decision" concerning forgiveness. Even so, while his own eloquent telling of the tale seems to suggest the impossibility of forgiveness and the significance of silence, he continues to wrestle with the question of forgiveness, struggling to find a way to tell the story that might offer hope that his future, and our future, might not be bound by the destructiveness of the past.

Finally, then, Wiesenthal addresses a question to the reader of his tale: "You, who have just read this sad and tragic episode in my life, can mentally change places with me and ask yourself the crucial question, 'What would I have done?'"

What would you say in response? What could you say? After the original version of the book was published in 1969, Wiesenthal invited 32 people to reflect on the question "What would I have done?" Those reflections were included in a "Symposium" that composed the second half of a 1976 edition of the book. The symposium included novelists, theologians, lawyers, judges, and other intellectuals; Protestants, Catholics, and Jews as well as agnostics and atheists. There were some well-recognized names: Abraham Heschel, Primo Levi, Herbert Marcuse, Jacques Maritain, Martin Marty, Cynthia Ozick. There also were some provocative and moving contributions from less well-known writers, including Milton Konvitz and John Oesterreicher.

These reflections provided readers additional engagements with Wiesenthal's story: deeper reflections, challenging questions, and pointed objections to anyone's settled positions. Some said Wiesenthal should have forgiven Karl, and others thought he never should have; some interpreted his silence as a gesture toward forgiveness, and others thought it was a pointed refusal; some worried about the dangers of "cheap grace," while others worried about the effects of a refusal to forgive.

In 1997, a new edition of The Sunflower was published, complete with a revised and expanded list of contributors to the symposium, and this edition is now available in paperback. Some of the additions are particularly significant, most notably a reflection from Albert Speer, a member of Hitler's inner circle whose memoir Inside the Third Reich reflects a sense of repentance for his Nazi past. Other additions are less significant for the content of the reflections than for the writer's stature in popular religious awareness: examples include Matthew Fox and Harold Kushner. Most notable, however, is the decision by the editors of the new edition to include reflections from people involved in other, more recent contexts of massive suffering and injustice: Sven Alkalaj, the ambassador of Bosnia and Herzegovina to the United States; the Dalai Lama; Dith Pran, the journalist whose wartime life and suffering at the hands of the Khmer Rouge was portrayed in the film The Killing Fields; and Harry Wu, imprisoned by the Chinese Communist government for 19 years in a labor camp.

The new edition reveals both the phenomenal, enduring power of the story itself and shifts in cultural and theological hopes and fears about the possibilities and limits of forgiveness in relation to massive evils and injustice.

What does this new edition tell us about how people's thinking about the legacies of the Holocaust, and about forgiveness, has changed over the past few decades?

In part, there is a deeper despair, and even cynicism, about the possibilities of forgiveness given the recurring realities of horrifying evils around the world. After all, humanity has not seemed to learn any lessons from the Holocaust's horrors. One needs only to mention the killing fields of Cambodia, shallow graves in Bosnia, brutal killings in Rwanda, or the cycles of violence and vengeance in the Middle East to wonder whether there is any hope for an end to unbearable, unspeakable human cruelty.

Some people simply give voice to that despair, indicating that we cannot afford even to think of forgiveness in the midst of such injustice. Yet this leads others to develop, or reinforce, a principled opposition to the appropriateness of forgiveness. World events of the last three decades seem only to have solidified judgments that forgiveness trivializes human suffering and gives license to unprincipled brutality and injustice.

Unsurprisingly, Christian contributors to the symposium, both in the 1976 edition and in this new one, seem more willing than others to speak of forgiveness. To be sure, there are risks here. After all, it was the Jews who were the victims of the Holocaust, and in many cases, the perpetrators (like Karl) or collaborators were people who had at least been raised as nominal Christians. To speak of forgiveness could be an offer of "cheap grace" that is deeply problematic for anyone, and especially for victims, to hear. Martin Marty's contribution, found in both editions, is appropriately cautious about Christians offering either cheap grace or cheap advice to Jews and other victims of massive suffering. Even so, he offers important reflections, grounded in Christian worship of the God of Jesus Christ, on how signs of grace and forgiveness may offer hope for a future not bound by the destructiveness of the past.

Marty's reflections may be offensive to Jews and others who have endured horrifying suffering. But they offer an important and, to my Christian mind, truthful gesture. It is perhaps a sign of the editors' own despair that the most profoundly hopeful and moving Jewish reflection in the first edition, by Milton Konvitz, was excised from this new edition. Konvitz was appropriately worried about forgiveness, but his proposed words

DREW UNIVERSITY PROGRAM IN WESLEYAN & METHODIST STUDIES, MA., PH.D.

DREW'S PROUD METHODIST HERITAGE, RENOWNED FACULTY, EXTENSIVE LIBRARY HOLDINGS, AND THE PRESENCE OF THE UNITED METHODIST ARCHIVE AND HISTORY CENTER ON CAMPUS, ALL COMBINE TO MAKE THE UNIVERSITY IN THE FOREST A UNIQUELY SUITABLE SETTING WITHIN WHICH TO EXPLORE THE THEOLOGY, SOCIAL HISTORY, & LITERATURE OF THE WESLEYAN HERITAGE.

Distinguished Faculty, Unique Resources

VISIBLE IN PRINT AS WELL AS IN OUR CLASSROOMS:

WESLEY ARIARAJAH, Gospel and Culture, Spirituality in Interfaith Dialogue
HEATHER ELKINS, Worshipping Women
DONALD DAYTON, Discovering an Evangelical Heritage, Theological Roots of Pentecostalism, Varieties of American Evangelicalism
DONALD JONES, The Sectional Crisis and Northern Methodism
THOMAS ODEN, Doctrinal Standards in the Wesleyan Tradition, John Wesley's Scriptural Christianity, The New Birth, Phoebe Palmer: Selected Writings
KENNETH ROWE, Methodist Union Catalog, The Methodist Experience in America (forthcoming), The Methodists, Perspectives on American Methodism, United Methodism in America: A Compact History, United Methodist Studies: Basic Bibliographies
LEONARD SWEET, Black Images of America, Communication and Change in American Religion, Eleven Genetic Gateways, The Evangelical Tradition in America, The Minister's Wife
CHARLES YRIGOYEN, JR., Historical Dictionary of Methodism, John Wesley: Holiness of Heart and Life, United Methodism in America: A Compact History

Wesley
Ariarajah (University of London)
missions,
ecumenics

Heather
Murray
Elkins
(Drew) liturgies

Don
Dayton (Ch
)
history, theo
Holiness
Pentec
st

Donald
Jones
(Drew) ethics

Thomas C.
Oden
(Yale) theology,
the Wesleys

James H.
Pain (Oxford), the Wesleys

L. Dale
Patterson
(Drew), history

Kenneth E.
Rowe
(Drew),
British and American history,
bibliography

Leona
Sweet (Univer
)
Roch
Amer and g Metho

Terry Todd (Columbia), American history

Traci West
(Union
Theological Seminary,
New York),
ethics

Charles
Yrigoyen, Jr.
(Temple),
the Wesleys,
history

FOR MORE INFORMATION CONT.

OFFICE OF GRADUATE ADMISSI

DREW UNIVERSITY • MADISON, NEW JERSEY 07

973/408-3110 • FAX: 973/408-3

E-MAIL: GRADM@DREW.EDU • WWW: HTTP://WWW.DREW.

Compassion for Karl are remarkably poignant:

It seems to me, though I say this with diffidence and hesitation, that in this encounter the spirit of the Jewish tradition called upon the narrator to say to Karl: "I cannot speak for your victims. I cannot speak for the Jewish people. I cannot speak for God. But I am a man. I am a Jew. I am commanded, in my personal relations, to act with compassion. I have been taught that if I expect the Compassionate One to have compassion on me, I must act with compassion toward others. I can share with you, in this hour of your deep suffering, what I myself have been taught by my teachers: 'Better is one hour of repentance in this world than the whole life of the world to come' (Avot, IV, 17). 'Great is repentance, for it renders asunder the decree imposed upon a man' (Babylonian Talmud, Rosh Hashana, 17b). It is not in my power to render to you the help that could come only from your victims, or from the whole of the people of Israel, or from God. But insofar as you reach out to me, and insofar as I can separate myself from my fellow Jews, for whom I cannot speak, my broken heart pleads for your broken heart: Go in peace."

Perhaps our culture's, and even our world's, cynicism needs the challenge of hope found in Marty's and Konvitz's reflections. We know all too well the horrors of the Holocaust, of Bosnia, of the Killing Fields, of apartheid in South Africa. But do we know as well the possibilities of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission in South Africa? What might Tutu, or Mandela, or many white South Africans, say at this point about the possibilities of forgiveness in the wake of systematic injustice?

We cannot avoid the challenges, and we dare not trivialize suffering with cheap grace. At the same time, we ought not become numb to the possibilities being offered by the Spirit of God who, we are told in 2 Corinthians, is making all things new. Alas, particularly with the absence of Konvitz's reflection, the new edition of The Sunflower seems to encourage numbness rather than hope.

Can we tell stories, and offer judgments, of compassion and forgiveness that shine personally without failing politically? Can we respond to hellish injustices in ways that offer hope for a new and renewed future? Some of us have staked our lives on following One whose life, death, and resurrection commits us to the conviction that we can. But we need a deeper engagement with the words of Micah 6 and Luke 24 to do so. Perhaps the next edition of The Sunflower's Symposium can move our reflection in a more profound, and a more hopeful, direction. CI

This Present Biopolitical Darkness

in a society strongly marked by "rights" rather than social obligation, everything becomes negotiable.

Bioethics and Population, by Michel Schooyans; translated by J. H. Miller (Catholic Central Union of America, 112 pp.; $10, paper); Power over Life, by Michel Schooyans; translated by J. H. Miller (Catholic Central Union of America, 75 pp.; $8, paper). Reviewed by J. Daryl Charles, assistant professor of religion and philosophy Taylor University and author of Virtue amidst Vice: The Catalog of Virtues in 1 Peter 1 (Sheffield Academic Press).

Reading these two volumes is akin to reading Solzhenitsyn—except with a bioethical twist. The author, a professor emeritus of political and moral philosophy at the Catholic University of Louvain and member of the Pontifical Academy of Social Sciences, observes in both works how utterly undemocratic are the considerable achievements in the fields of human reproduction and biomedical science. The ambiguous relationship that exists between science and political power—what the author calls "biopolitics"—does not, in his view, bode well for Western democracy. This relationship, which has already left its hideous mark on the present century, raises questions of momentous import as we approach the third millennium.

In his assessment of surging biomedical and biotechnological developments, the author is unsparing in his critique of the tendency to subordinate truth to personal freedom. This subordination can be seen in the triumph of committees of ethics, where procedure, not universally binding moral principles, dictates. Without reference to a transcendent good to be preserved, or an evil to be avoided, there remains no common morality that binds together the tissue of the human community. All the significant social movements since the nineteenth century have shared a common feature: they have contested the abuses of power committed against society's weakest members. But in a society strongly marked by "rights" rather than social obligation, everything becomes negotiable—from abortion and fetal-tissue research to mechanical procreation, from eugenics to euthanasia.

Schooyans's vision of the future might be deemed Orwellian to the extent that he understands the critical role language plays in preserving or distorting ethical/bioethical discourse. When language is forced to function in an environment of artificiality, it becomes the handmaiden of demagoguery. As Schooyans reminds us, it is the obligation of the Christian community, once this linguistic-moral slide has begun to occur, to discern, denounce, and resist such corruption.

Twentieth-century history demonstrates that a society's drift toward soft or hard totalitarianism is established at times by force, at other times by ruse. In the latter case, the transformation is gradual, frequently facilitated by procedural law. Evil may be consummated when law is invoked to remove protection for the defenseless en masse. At that point it is too late to ponder—and argue—whether or not a democracy has become a "regime." Ever reflecting on the past, Schooyans has little tolerance for wishful thinking in considering the future: that laws are presently voted on by parliaments and congressional bodies in the Western world does not alter the fact that "biopolitical" monstrosities of the past can repeat themselves or be transmogrified into new evils.

In viewing biopolitical developments as a seamless garment rather than as isolated issues, the author in the end leaves unanswered the most unsettling of questions: Has the church been penetrated by ultra-individualism to the extent that she is ultimately unable to address, much less resist, the biopolitical realities that confront her at the threshold of the third millennium? CI

THE MARKETPLACE

Cost: 46 cents per character (each space & punctuation counts as a character); avg. 45 characters per line. Min. $39.10 (85 characters). CT blind box number available at $6 each insertion; checkmark box ☐ $14 each insertion. Supply permanent street address and phone number. Ads set display style: $276/column inch. Combination package available for CHRISTIANITY TODAY, CHRISTIAN READER, & YOUR CHURCH: 2 magazines—44 cents per character per insertion; 3 magazines—42 cents per character per insertion. Display style: 2 magazines—$263 per insertion; 3 magazines—$252 per insertion. All classified ads will now be automatically placed on CHRISTIANITY ONLINE at no additional charge. IMPORTANT: Prepayment & written confirmation required to process ads. Visa, MasterCard, or personal check accepted; fax (630) 260-9401. Employment ads are given priority. All other ads will be placed in first available issue. Deadline for reservation or cancellation is seven weeks prior to actual issue date. Address correspondence to: Classified Advertising, Christianity Today, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

PRESIDENT/CEO

The National Association of Evangelicals (www.nae.net) is a voluntary fellowship of evangelical denominations, churches, organizations, institutions, and individuals, demonstrating unity in the body of Christ by standing for biblical truth, speaking with a representative voice, and serving the evangelical community through united action, cooperative ministry, and strategic planning. NAE is comprised of approximately 43,000 congregations nationwide from 49 member denominations and individual congregations from an additional 30 denominations and fellowships, as well as several hundred independent churches. The membership of the association includes over 250 parachurch ministries and educational institutions. These ministries represent a broad range of theological traditions, but all subscribe to the distinctly evangelical NAE Statement of Faith. Through the cooperative ministry of these members, the National Association of Evangelicals directly and indirectly benefits over 27 million people. The association is a nationally recognized entity by the public sector with a reputation for integrity and effective service. Nominations and résumés should be sent to: Dr. David LeShana, Chairman, NAE Presidential Search Committee, 5737 Charles Circle, Lake Oswego, OR 97035 no later than October 31, 1998.

DIRECTOR OF PRE-SCHOOL/CHILDCARE CENTER

Thriving church based pre-school/childcare facility, ages 0-K, located in community with urban feel, seeks director. Need an experienced, energetic, leader with strong people skills and administrative gifting to bring excellence to this ministry. Degree in early childhood education required and creativity a must. Candidates should be comfortable in a multiethnic, suburban setting, and be willing to view their work as ministry to a needy community. Competitive salary and benefits. Send résumé and cover letter to: Chestnut Street Community Church, 303 Chestnut Street, Roselle, NJ 07203, Attn: Pastor DeCan, or fax (908) 241-1664.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES: Advent Group Ministries, a Christian social service agency located in San Jose, CA, seeks resident counselors, night counselors, summer interns for adolescent residential treatment programs. Competitive salary, benefits. Residential positions provide room & board. Contact Carol Fryer: (408) 281-0708; (1-800) 98ADVENT; fax: (408) 281-2658.

CHALLENGING MINISTRY for Bilingual Senior Pastor. Established Presbyterian Church in America (PCA) bilingual (Spanish and English) congregation in urban location in Houston searching for senior pastor to carry on dynamic multifaceted ministry. Contact Dr. Will Grimley at (713) 921-5635 or fax résumé to (713) 921-2535. Send e-mail to Don German at dlgerman@ix.netcom.com

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

CALL TO RENEWAL NATIONAL COORDINATOR

Call To Renewal is seeking a national coordinator to help build this church-based movement to overcome poverty in the United States. Responsibilities include organizing on the national level, bringing new churches and organizations into the network, building bridges between the many constituencies, and overseeing a small staff. Salary negotiable, 4-weeks vacation, health-care policy. Send cover letter and résumé to: National Coordinator Search, Call To Renewal, 2401-15th Street NW, Washington DC 20009.

GRADUATING COLLEGE SENIORS are invited to apply for the 26th annual Pulliam Journalism Fellowship. Twenty journalism or liberal arts graduates in the August 1998-June 1999 class will receive ten-week summer internships. Stipend is $5,250. Early-admissions application postmark deadline is Nov. 15, 1998. By Dec. 15, 1998, up to five early-admissions winners will be notified. All other entries must be postmarked by March 1, 1999. For an application packet, write: Russell B. Pulliam, Pulliam Fellowship Director, The Indianapolis News, P.O. Box 145, Indianapolis, IN 46206-0145.

DIRECTOR of Institutional Advancement, Christian Heritage College. Oversees raising of financial resources, public relations, publications, alumni relations, and board development. Successful experience with capital and annual campaigns, grants and foundations. Master's degree or professional license. Strong commitment as evangelical Christian with creationist view of origins. Nominations and applications to President's Office, Christian Heritage College, 2100 Greenfield Drive, El Cajon, CA 92019.

MINISTRY PLACEMENT for pastors & associates or churches. Call (503) 357-7830 or Believer's Dynamics, POB 596, Forest Grove, OR 97116. Since 1977.

THE OWEN SOUND Alliance Church is seeking a YOUTH PASTOR with a proven track record to take a vibrant ministry on to the next level. The existing ministry, for 140 grade 7-OAC students, is Sonlife and small-group driven. Position requires pastoral heart for youth, good administrative skills, and volunteer management of the adult leadership team. Must be able to be accredited by the Christian & Missionary Alliance. Please apply to: Dr. Franklin Pyles, 440-7th Ave. E., Owen Sound, ON, N4K 2X3; phone: (519) 376-2026; fax: (519) 376-4497; E-mail: fpyles@bmts.com

TEACH IN JAPAN: Reach Asians for Christ. Teach in English. Several K-12 & ESL teacher openings. Mission school of 400; 2-year contracts. Must raise partial support. Write Dr. Bob Greninger, Okinawa Christian School, P.O. Box 14250, Gainesville, FL 32604; (1-800) 446-6423.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

MINISTER OF OUTREACH

Large downtown church in the Reformed tradition is seeking a visionary Minister of Outreach with a passion for the lost. We are looking for a candidate able to minister to the poor and the powerful, and to equip the members of our regional church to engage in friendship evangelism. Ordained or undained, male or female. For more information or to send your résumé, write to the Search Committee, LaGrave CRC, 107 LaGrave Ave. SE, Grand Rapids, MI 49503, or call Dr. M. at (616) 454-7204.

VICE PRESIDENT FOR BUSINESS AFFAIRS

Dordt College invites applications for the position of Vice President for Business Affairs. Serving on the president's cabinet, the VP provides leadership for all financial and business affairs of the college. Areas of oversight include financial accounting and reporting, contract management, budgeting, human resources, physical plant maintenance, construction, purchasing, risk management, and investments. Candidates should have significant experience in fiscal systems and operations management in higher education or similar setting and should have a minimum of five years of successful leadership of business, financial, and administrative functions. Effective communication and interpersonal skills are necessary, along with knowledge of the use of management information systems. A graduate degree in an appropriate field is preferred. Enthusiastic Christians with a commitment to the Reformed faith and the desire to help lead a dynamic and growing institution are invited to send a letter of application, a résumé to the office of the president at Dordt College, 498-4th Avenue NE, Sioux Center, IA 51250. Review of applications will begin November 1 and continue until the position is filled. Dordt College is an equal opportunity employer and encourages application from women, minorities, and disabled persons.

RETAIL OPERATIONS DIRECTOR

Experienced retail leader for Christian bookstore and resale shop supporting ministries of people with disabilities. 5 years related experience. Goal is creating inviting, engaging ministries, enhancing good Christian bookstore, and developing smaller ministries. Good salary, benefits. Résumé to Dave Rowland, Christian League for the Handicapped, 948, Walworth, WI 53184.

WRITER

Communications firm serving Christian ministries seeks a writer who believes in the power of words and knows how to use them—to gain attention and get a response. Minimum two years experience in direct mail fundraising (or proof that you qualify without that experience). Good salary and benefits. Great plus: live. Outstanding clients. Send résumé to Creative Director, 19265 Powder Hill Place, Poulsbo, WA 98370.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

NORTHWESTERN COLLEGE (Iowa) anticipates vacancies for faculty positions in the following areas beginning August 1999:

Art History
Business
Communication Studies
Composition
American Literature
Spanish

Affiliated with the Reformed Church in America, NWC is a Christian liberal arts college with almost 1,200 students. Candidates should have a completed or nearly completed doctorate, teaching experience, and a reformed/evangelical faith commitment. Apply to Dr. Robert Zwier, Vice President for Academic Affairs, Northwestern College, Orange City, IA 51041.

HEADMASTER

The Fourth Presbyterian School, located near the nation's capital, is seeking an outstanding individual to provide leadership for the successful implementation of its new school, opening in the fall of 1999 with grades K-3 and expanding thereafter to grade 8. The successful candidate will be a mature Christian who is committed to educational excellence, holds a master's degree or beyond, and has a demonstrated interest in Reformed Christian education leadership. The salary range is $2,000-$75,000; the compensation package is competitive. Send letter of interest, résumé, and statement of Reformed Christian educational philosophy to Betsy West, Search Chair, The Fourth Presbyterian School, 5500 Over Road, Bethesda, MD 20816; fax: (301) 303-6315. Screening begins on November 9. Applications remain confidential during the final phases of the search.

ACADEMIC DEAN

Biblical Theological Seminary invites nominations and applications for the position of academic dean with appointment to begin July 1, 1999. Biblical is an evangelical institution in the Reformed tradition. Applicants should have an M.Div. and Ph.D. or equivalent and experience with seminary education. Position description available on the seminary's Web site: www.biblical.edu. Please submit nomination résumé by November 15, 1998, to: David G. Hambar, President, Biblical Theological Seminary, 200 N. Main St., Hatfield, PA 19440.

DIRECTOR OF CHILDREN'S MINISTRY

The First Episcopal Church, a dynamic, growing church of 2,000 in metro Kansas City, is seeking a full-time Director of Children's Ministry. The church's vision is to "make disciples who make disciples for Jesus Christ." Working on staff team of 13, the Director's ministry will be to raise up leaders to provide an exceptional, innovative, and creative evangelistic and discipleship ministry for children. Committed Christians (from any tradition) with energy, vision, and proven experience in children's ministry leadership are invited to apply. Fax, mail, or send résumé to: Alison Barfoot, First Church, 5500 W. 91st St., Overland Park, KS 66207; fax: (913) 648-0854; E-mail: sonBar@aol.com.

EXECUTIVE PASTOR

A dynamic evangelical church of 2,000 members in north coastal San Diego seeks a trained Presbyterian pastor with 10 years in senior role. We are seeking someone with strong gifts in the areas of organization, program implementation, and interpersonal communication. Contact Denis Bohlman, Laguna Beach Presbyterian Church, 120 Stevens Ave., Solana Beach, CA 92075; fax: (949) 350-9652; E-mail: rrantzow@cts.com

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

FIRST REFORMED CHURCH, Schenectady, NY, is building a faithful and creative ministry team. Two full-time positions are available. For our ministries with children and youth, we seek an experienced professional, ordained or lay, with advanced training in education and faith development. For our ministries of pastoral care, adult education, small groups, and congregational fellowship, we seek an ordained person. Ministry team includes the current senior minister and a flexible structure to make optimum use of staff gifts for ministry in congregation and community. First Reformed Church is a diverse, ecumenical, and progressive downtown church of 800 members and seekers. Excellent salary and benefits provided. Women, racial/ethnic minority persons, and clergy couples are urged to apply. Job descriptions available on request. Please send letter of introduction and résumé or minister's profile form to FRC, Search Committee, 8 N. Church Street, Schenectady, NY 12305-1607.

ROBERTS WESLEYAN COLLEGE in Rochester, New York, anticipates the following faculty openings for the 1999-2000 school year: Business Management; Graphic Design; Philosophy; Old Testament; Teacher Education. Each will be ongoing tenure-track positions. A terminal degree is expected. Send vita to Dr. Burton Jones, Dean of Faculty, Roberts Wesleyan College, 2301 Westside Drive, Rochester, NY 14624-1997.

DORDT COLLEGE FACULTY POSITIONS

Dordt College is seeking Christian academicians for openings beginning August 1999 in the following areas:

- Art
- Business Administration: two positions
- Computer Science & Mathematics: potential two-year position
- Director of Graduate Education
- Economics
- Education: potential two-year position
- Health, Physical Education & Recreation
- Philosophy
- Spanish
- Theatre Arts: potential one-year position

Evaluation of applications will begin December 1 and continue until the positions are filled. To learn more about the position and receive application materials, qualified persons committed to a Reformed, biblical perspective and educational philosophy are encouraged to send a letter of interest that provides evidence of that commitment and a curriculum vitae to Dr. Rockne McCarthy, Dordt College, 498-4th Ave. NE, Sioux Center, IA 51250; facsimile: (712) 722-4496; e-mail: vpaa@dordt.edu. Dordt College is an equal opportunity institution that encourages the nominations and candidacies of women, minorities, and persons with disabilities.

looking for pastoral staff?
seeking a new ministry?
www.ministrysearch.com
e-mail version also available:
info@ministrysearch.com

MALE DIRECTOR needed for men's program (18 years and older). Teen Challenge like center in beautiful southern Oregon. Must have proper credentials and previous experience. Contact: Ron Boehm (510) 568-7001 or (541) 878-3400; fax: (510) 568-2014.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

YOUTH PASTOR

Shannon Forest (PCA), Greenville, SC. This contemporary/traditional worshiping congregation of 380 seeks a man to join pastoral team to evangelize and disciple jr. & sr. high (about 50) and their lay leadership (about 12). Primary duties include: biblical teaching, evangelism, visitation on kids' "turf," discipleship, counseling, organization of activities, events and mission trips, and communicating with parents. Previous exp. And seminary desired but not required. Contact: Smurphy@lg.com or send résumé to: Shannon Forest, 830 Garlington Rd., Greenville, SC 29615.

DIVERSE COMMUNITY-ORIENTED PC (USA) CHURCH of 250+ on rural San Juan Island, Washington seeks a PC (USA) Pastor-Head of Staff, a shepherd-leader to equip the saints, lead staff team and lay leaders, and preach/teach God's Word in a powerful way. Please send PIF to: PNC, Friday Harbor Presbyterian Church, PO Box 946, Friday Harbor, WA 98250.

THE FUND FOR THEOLOGICAL EDUCATION, INC.

The FTE is searching for a director for its Partnership for Excellence, a network to identify, recruit and support excellent candidates for ministry. The director will establish relationships with academic and denominational leaders and develop the Ministry Fellows Program to provide grants, conferences, and mentors for students. This person should be committed to the goals of FTE: excellence and diversity in ministry and theological education. The director must have both the capacity to connect with senior administrators in relevant domains as well as the ability to motivate and work collaboratively with persons from diverse racial, cultural, and religious backgrounds. Candidates must demonstrate an understanding of the challenges facing theological education, and preferably, leadership experience in this area. Master's degree in theological studies required; doctoral degree preferred. Travel is required. Send letter of application, résumé, and three references to: James L. Waits, President, The Fund for Theological Education, 825 Houston Mill Road, Ste. 250, Atlanta, GA 30329. FTE is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action institution.

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

☒ WORSHIP MUSIC RESOURCES print music and helps for the classically trained church pianist; recordings by William Phemister; phone/fax: (630) 665-9321; www.wheatonmusres.com

EVANGELISTIC MATERIAL IN ARABIC: books, tracts, cassettes. In English: The Bible and Islam ($4.95 U.S./$5.95 Canada). Write: Arabic Dept., Back to God Hour, 6555 W. College Dr., Palos Heights, IL 60463.

FREE BOOK. Comfort in Suffering is a very dynamic book for believers who come face to face with disaster. To receive a FREE copy with absolutely no obligation, please write to: Grace Evangelistic Ministries, P.O. Box 17246, Dept. 777, Nashville, TN 37217.

1000's OF CHRISTIAN USED BOOKS for sale. For free monthly lists write: Corey Smallman, PO Box 9626, Chattanooga, TN 37412.

JESUS DID NOT RETURN IN AD 70, a biblical refutation of preterist theology; 28 pp., $3. A Clearer View of the Rapture, premillennial; 110 pp., softcover; $6.00 postpaid. John E. Young, 6 Robert St., Rockaway, NJ 07866.

PUBLISH YOUR BOOK!

Our FREE step-by-step guide to Self Publishing gives you all features and prices up-front. You're ensured quality with in-house printing and bindery services. We offer low minimum quantities — only 200 books! Call or write for our FREE guide.

3212 E. Hwy 30
Kearney, NE 68847

800-650-7888, ext. CT10
http://morrispublishing.com

JOYCE LANDORF HEATHERLEY

Books & Tapes: Balcony People, Irregular People, My Blue Blanket, The Inheritance, Fragrance of Beauty, Changepoints, Unworld People, Richest Lady in Town, Silent September, Fragile Times, and others. Balcony Publishing, P.O. Box 340079, Austin, TX 78734; (1-800) 777-7949.

CHRISTIAN FICTION

Extreme Flashbacks by Ralph Thomas. The Christian conversion of a controversial lawyer is put to the test when he embarks on a desperate search to find the only woman he ever loved but lost during the Vietnam war. Send $8 to Marlton Publishers, PO Box 223, Severn, MD 21144. Order with credit card at (1-800) 929-7889.

THE FALSE DOCTRINE OF SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS: An Evangelical Resource, An Appeal to SDA Leadership, by Dale Ratzlaff: (800) 355-7073, www.ratzlaf.com

THE RAPTURE IS COMING! Prepare for this great event. Our exciting new book, Heaven Bound, teaches how to protect your possessions from the Antichrist, what the Great Deception is about, how to help those left behind, etc.: $10.00 ppd., Silos Publishing, Dept. CTR, PO Box 26115, Tamarac, FL 33320.

STORY SERMONS from the Book of Job. For free sample send SASE to Story Sermons, 303 W. Crawford Ave., Monterey, TN 38574.

INSURANCE

Missionaries Worldwide Health Plan

For Missionaries working overseas!

FHI Benefit Plans/Aetna Global Benefits
800-347-9547
www.rfdriver.com/fhigroup.htm

TRAVEL

JOIN THE INTERNATIONAL Christian Bed & Breakfast Network. Call (1-800) 881-1940, or write to ICBBN, 550-777 Royal Oak Dr., Box 139, Victoria, BC V8X 4V1 Canada.

EDUCATION

THE VIRTUAL CAMPUS of Reformed Theological Seminary now offers you a world-class theological education right in your own home. Take accredited courses through Distance Education. Find out more by calling (800) 227-2013 or by e-mailing us at: distance.education@rts.edu

SEMINARS FOR STUDENTS, January 1999. Join students from across North America, missionaries from several nations, plus international students and church leaders from Asia, Africa, and Latin America to explore global issues of church and mission. Cosponsored by OMSC and 28 seminaries. Credit available through the seminaries. Overseas Ministries Study Center, 490 Prospect Street, New Haven, CT 06511. E-mail: study@OMSC.org.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

CHRISTIAN BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY
Earn a living while spreading God's word. Join Scriptures. Call (1-800) 585-5873, option 3, to receive a free info pack. Leave my ID# 14113 at the end of message.

RETIRED PASTOR/ENTREPRENEUR/LAY LEADER type. Build a lucrative business with cutting-edge technology. My average managers earn $80K/yr. and other perks: cars, travel, profit sharing, & more! Investment required, 0 interest financing for credit-worthy candidates. Sales experience a plus. North America is your territory. If you're success minded, call Doug at Action Jackson Marketing, Inc. (1-888) 426-6826.

POSITION WANTED

EXP. MINISTER wants church to pastor or revivals. Prayer for lost and sick. Write today to: 240 E. Ruth Ave. 201, Phoenix, AZ 85020.

MUSIC

"STAR OF HEAVEN" Christmas CD. English/Scandinavian. John Harvey Johnson, baritone. Send $18.00 to P.O. Box 562, Redondo Beach, CA 90277-0562; http://home.earthlink.net/~johnhjohnson/starofheaven.html

AN OLD FASHIONED REVIVAL HOUR CHRISTMAS
Digitally remastered onto CD & Cassette from 2 decades of OFRH radio transcriptions. 25 Christmas favorites with the OFRH Choir, Quartet & pianist Rudy Atwood.
CD BONUS: Hear Dr. & Mrs. Fuller, "Jesus Saves," "Heavenly Sunshine" ... and much more!
Church Services & Supply Co., Inc.
1767 E. 28th St., Long Beach, CA 90804 (800) 350-3456

FUNDRAISING

GREAT FUNDRAISING IDEA! Need a fundraising project for your church or group? Call (1-800) 872-1278 now for a free color brochure on full-color commemorative plates offered by Preston-Hopkinson, P.O. Box 1, Lynchburg, VA 24505. Ask for brochure 2023.

MINISTRY OPPORTUNITIES

MINISTRY SERVICE, matching ministers/ministries. Connect with CCRS, P.O. Box 398, Sheffield, MA 01257. Phone: (413) 229-3627; e-mail: churchrectr@juno.com

PREACH CHRIST to nations via shortwave radio. (561) 697-4547; www.flinet.com/~grlmin

COMPUTER/VIDEO PROGRAMS

COMPUTERS built specifically for Christians. Pentium II LOADED with educational Bible software. Churches/students discounts. Covenant Technology www.covenantp.com; (860) 355-1277.

CHURCH MANAGEMENT SOFTWARE: Windows, MD-DOS; contributions & membership; financial; $85 each. Free trial. Vian Corporation (908) 537-4642; http://www.vian.com.

RECEIVE ALL religious networks, plus EXCLUSIVE 24-HOUR POSITIVE PROGRAMMING. Call (1-888) 530-8123.

DISCOUNTS: DENTAL, VISION, PRESCRIPTIONS! 50-80% for $29.95 per year; (1-800) 268-4333 # SEA.

Moving Interstate

The Service and Thrift Relocation Service offers discounted rates and other benefits to reduce your moving cost on moves within the Continental U.S. For a free, no-obligation estimate call Lewis, CORD northAmerica

1-800-873-2673

ICCA MC 167012

☒ TAX-EXEMPT NONPROFIT STATUS for your mission, ministry, church. Shaddai Ministries. Recorded message to free (1-888) 268-1635.

ORDINATION. International Ministerial Fellowship, an association of evangelical church and ministers, offers many services, including ordination, newsletters, networking, ecclesiastical endorsement, consultation in area of legal accounting, church planting, biblical/theological training, Internet services (FREE Web and E-mail address) and a missions sending agency. For free information, check out our Web site: www.i-m-f.org or write: P.O. Box 32366, Minneapolis, MN 55432; (612) 571-5900.

OUTREACH CENTER MINISTER

If you believe you are called to minister to people in small groups, the National Conservative Christian Church will provide you a course study, coaching, and assistance to begin a group, home church, or an outreach center. Write the N.C.C.C. at 4460 Northgate Court, Sarasota, FL 34234, or phone (941) 365-8111.

PRODUCTS

CONSIDER TV A VAST WASTELAND? your TV empower you and your family! (888) 876-8366.

GOSPEL TRACTS

Send $3 + $3 S&H for over 30 different tract. Unlimited Concepts Gospel Tracts, P.O. Box 24044 CTM, Ft. Worth, TX 76124.

BUY STORABLE FOOD NOW for hard times ahead. For catalog/info, call The Prepared Family toll-free (1-877) DRY-FOOD; E-mail: preparedfm@aol.com

REAL ESTATE

COASTAL MAINE MOUNTAIN TOP RETREAT FOR SALE

- ◆ Beautiful 3.5 stories on 21+ pictures-perfect acres
- ◆ Sleeps up to 50, plus conference/kitchen facilities for 200+
- ◆ Available for $1.1 million

CONTACT
TONY McDONALD
(207) 772-1333

BOULOS COMPANY
One Canal Plaza
Portland, Maine 04101
tonymcd@javanet.com
www.boulos.com

WANT SOME CANDY, LITTLE GIRL?

You wouldn't let her play unsupervised at the playground. Too dangerous. Strange people could be lying in ambush. The World Wide Web is no different. It's a great place to play and learn, but danger lurks there as well - pornographers, child stalkers, violent and evil ideas and propaganda.

But not with CleanWeb™'s premium filtered Internet access. It blocks out the repulsive, dirty side of the Web before it ever reaches your computer. CleanWeb™ wants to make the World Wide Web - and the world - a better place. Subscribe today and have 10% of your monthly fee designated to charity.

With CleanWeb™ you always get the sweetest part of the Internet.

Call Toll-free: 1-877-CLEANWEB (1-877-253-2693) ext. 122 • www.cleanweb.net • register@cleanweb.net

© 1998 Cleanweb.net, Inc.

Call to find out how to become a Sponsor or Sales Associate!

SIGN UP TODAY!

THE NEXT Great Spiritual Awakening

Be a vital part of the
Fasting & Prayer '98 Gathering
November 12-14

Originating live from Houston and linked
by satellite to every community in America.

FASTING
&
PRAYER

Technology will link us for three days—
prayer will unite us for eternity!

Available in Spanish on Satellite and Radio

JOINTLY SPONSORED BY MISSION AMERICA
AND CAMPUS CRUSADE FOR CHRIST

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE INCLUDES:

Dr. Don Argue
Northwest College

Dr. Larry Lewis
Mission America

Mrs. Kay Arthur
Precept Ministries

Mr. Bill McCartney
Promise Keepers

Dr. William R. Bright
Campus Crusade for Christ

Dr. Jesse Minambur
Azusa Pacific University

Dr. Vonette Z. Bright
Campus Crusade for Christ

Dr. Bob Record
Southern Baptist Convention

The Rev. H. David Bryant
Concerts of Prayer Int'l.

Dr. M. G. (Pat) Roberts
Christian Broadcasting Network

Bishop Roderick R. Caesar, Jr.
Bethel Gospel Tabernacle

Dr. Adrian Rogers
Bellevue Baptist Church

Dr. Paul Cedor
Mission America

Dr. Thomas E. Truett
Assemblies of God

Mr. Franklin Graham
Samaritan's Purse

Mr. Sid Wright
Fasting & Prayer

Join Fasting & Prayer '98 in Houston or
establish a satellite site in your community.

For details or to register, call today:

1-800-888-FAST

or www.fastingprayer.com

Preach With Power; Teach With Wisdom

We would like for you to join with over 4,000 students currently enrolled at Andersonville Baptist Seminary. Having an international student body with students from 5 different continents, we have preachers all over the world that proclaim that they have learned more from us than from the so-called "major theological institutions." Should you decide to enroll with us, you will receive approximately 80 to 120 hours of lecture on audio cassette tapes (in a typical 80 hour program). For example, 1 John - Jude has 18 hours of tape lecture, and like the great majority of our studies, it is done verse-by-verse! The main textbook is GOD'S HOLY WORD and we teach that IT IS WITHOUT ERROR OR CONTRADICTION! All of our graduate studies require GLA's (Graded Learning Activities) which are practical activities involving research by the student. Our 9,000 graduates have been taught to preach and teach the Word! The exciting part is that you keep all tapes for future use in your ministry. Don't you want the Word to come alive as you get fresh ideas and thoughts to share with your church? Remember, you do not have to leave home, for all work can be completed by correspondence, and when your work is completed, you will receive a beautiful DEGREE (not a certificate) by mail. God bless you as you LEARN THE BOOK and EARN YOUR DEGREE!

Dr. Jimmy L. Hayes, Th.D.
President, ABS

Associate - Doctorate
Monthly Payment Plans
Discounted Spouse Education

Accredited by Accrediting Commission International and by American Association of
Theological Institutions

Degrees Offered in the Following Areas:

- * Theology
- * Ministry
- * Divinity
- * Christian Counseling
- * Christian Education
- * Religious Education
- * Biblical Studies

Credit for Lifetime Experience
Transfer Credit Accepted
No On Campus Work Required
Work at Your Own Pace

Excellent and Demanding
M. Div. and Ph.D. Programs

Andersonville Baptist Seminary

P.O. Box 545
Camilla, GA 31730-0545

1-800-525-1611

Qualified and Certified Faculty!
Immediate Phone Evaluation.

International Academic & Administrative Offices
Camilla, GA, USA

Phone: 800-525-1611
Fax: 912-336-7000
Email: abskjbv1611@aol.com
Internet:
www.andersonvilleseminary.com

What's a Heaven For?

My pastor decided to pull a vacation surprise on his four children. "We're going to Junction City, Kansas," Peter told them. "It's where my dad used to pastor a church, and we can have lots of fun there." Meanwhile he made secret plans to spend one afternoon in Junction City, then drive on to enjoy the glories of Disney World.

Ever trusting, his children bragged to skeptical friends, "We're going to Kansas for vacation. It's great!" All during the long drive from Denver to Junction City, Peter kept up morale by describing the wonders awaiting them: playgrounds, a swimming pool, an ice cream stand, maybe even a bowling alley.

After touring Granddad's old church, the kids were ready to check into a motel and go swimming when their dad dropped the bombshell. "You know something, it's kind of boring here in Kansas. Why don't we just drive to DISNEY WORLD!" Mom reached in a bag and pulled out four custom-made Mickey Mouse hats.

Peter expected his kids to jump up and down in delight. Instead, they complained: "Ah, who wants to get back in the van?" "What about the swimming pool? You promised!" "I thought we were going to go bowling!"

The great surprise had backfired. For the next few hours Peter sat behind the steering wheel and smoldered as his children expanded on all the advantages of Junction City over Disney World.

Never one to miss a homiletical opportunity, Peter turned this fiasco into a fine sermon illustration, quoting C. S. Lewis: "We are half-hearted creatures, fooling about with drink and sex and ambition when infinite joy is offered us, like an ignorant child who wants to go on making mud pies in a slum because he cannot imagine what is meant by the offer of a holiday at the sea." In a letter to his friend Malcolm, Lewis added that "the hills and valleys of Heaven will be to those you now experience not as a copy is to an original, nor as a substitute to the genuine article, but as the flower to the root, or the diamond to the coal."

Yes, Peter said, our desires are too small. We stamp our feet and insist on a merry-go-round in Junction City when Disney World's Space Mountain lies just down the road.

This year is the one-hundredth anniversary of C. S. Lewis's birth, and among his many accomplishments was restoring heaven to a place of intellectual respectability. Before him, heaven was an embarrassment, a holdover of primitive wish-fulfillment, and Christians who took heaven seriously were accused of a "pie in the sky" mentality. Lewis himself admits to the nagging "fear that I was bribed—that I was lured into Christianity by the hope of everlasting life." Yet he went on to stress the moral necessity of heaven and to paint a wonderfully imaginative portrait of it in The Great Divorce.

Historically, every age before the modern assumption of an afterlife—a good thing, since much of what we know about ancient civilizations comes from what they stashed in their tombs—disagreeing only on the particulars of how best to prepare. "I am the tadpole of an archangel," wrote Victor Hugo. Nowadays, we get much advice on becoming the best possible tadpoles, but little on how to prepare for metamorphosis.

Philosopher and theologian Dallas Willard tells the story of a woman who refused to talk about life beyond death because, she said, she didn't want her children to be disappointed if it turned out no afterlife existed. As Willard points out, if no afterlife exists, no one will have any consciousness with which to feel disappointment! On the other hand, if there is an afterlife, whoever enters that next life unprepared will experience far more than mere disappointment.

I have a theory that heaven will offer faithful Christians whatever they sacrificed on earth for Jesus' sake. My mountain-climbing friend who intentionally lives in a slum area of Chicago will have Yosemite Valleys all to himself. A missionary doctor in the parched land of Sudan will have her own private rain forest to explore. (Could this be why the New Testament commends poverty while portraying heaven in such sumptuous terms?)

Joy Davidman, wife of C. S. Lewis, came to agree with Saint Paul that if we are wrong about resurrection, "Then we Christians are of all men the most miserable." Because then, you see, the only real good would be the good things of this world—which Christians must often give up."

Lewis and Davidman spent only four years together before Joy died of cancer. I have no doubt that Lewis's own views of heaven were both tested and strengthened as he watched his wife's agonizing battle. The longing she had answered in him, I hoped, was but a foretaste of a time when all longings would be fulfilled. The pain that wracked her body, he fervently believed, was like the pain of childbirth, a last loud announcement of new laboring. Lewis saw belief in heaven not as wishful thinking, but as thoughtful wishing.

The Spanish philosopher Miguel de Unamuno once tried out his theory of belief in God, but not heaven, on a rather simple-minded peasant. The peasant thought a minute and then replied, "So what's this God for?"

Lewis saw belief in heaven not as wishful thinking, but as thoughtful wishing.

SPECIAL ISSUE: Reports from Evangelicals Worldwide

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

NOVEMBER 16, 1998

Vietnam • South Korea • Sri Lanka • West Bank

Now That We're

Global

Real
Students.

Real
Stories.

"I decided I needed to attend seminary
when I realized I was in the ministry."

Linda is the Pastoral Assistant at her church; the Senior Pastor is Dr. Mike Armistead.
The Smith Family (from back):
Tanner, Cameron, Linda,
Morgan, Tom... and the dogs.

Linda McMillan Smith got the bad news while she was studying for a Master's Degree in Counseling at a state university.

"I was in an ethics class, and my professor said you should never share your religious faith with clients," remembers Linda.

She was incredulous: "I just found God—the key to everything—and I can't share it?"

Linda was so distraught that a classmate told her, "Take Clinical Pastoral Education (CPE) at a teaching hospital and become a chaplain."

She enrolled and soon found herself working with AIDS and heart patients.

Recalls Linda, "It was the biggest growing experience of my life."

But there was no time for rest. She followed CPE with hospice training, along with greater involvement in her local church. A friend, seeing Linda respond to the call to ministry, first said the word seminary.

"I came to Gordon-Conwell in Charlotte because—with classes on weekends—I can pursue a degree without giving up my family, my job, or my ministry."

"I quickly found that I am not alone. My classmates here come from many walks of life, but they all share a strong commitment to preparing for ministry."

At Gordon-Conwell, Linda's first class was Hebrew—the language—and she loved it. She is now on track to finish her M.Div. in the Fall of 1999.

"For me, getting involved in ministry has been the missing link in my life. It has made my faith come alive."

CHARLOTTE
North Carolina

BOSTON
Massachusetts

SOUTH
HAMILTON
Massachusetts
(800) 428-7329

Gordon-Conwell
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

(800) 600-1212

www.gcts.edu

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Volume 42, No. 13
November 16, 1998

A Magazine of Evangelical Conviction

FEATURES

45 Cover Stories: Now That We're Global
Greetings from the worldwide fellowship.

46 GLOBAL EVANGELISM: It's a Small Church
After All By Mark Hutchinson

52 GERMANY: Reform Us Again By Roland Werner

54 RUSSIA: Learning to Speak Russian
By Sergei I. Nikolaev

56 KENYA: Cursed by Superficiality By David M. Kasali

58 SOUTH KOREA: Bankrupting the Prosperity Gospel By Bong Rin Ro

62 SRI LANKA: A Light in Buddha's Shadow
By Ajith Fernando

65 SOUTHCENTRAL ASIA: Stripping Jesus of His Western Garb By an Asian Christian

66 VIETNAM: Jesus Can Still Mean Jail
By a longtime missionary to Vietnam

68 WEST BANK: Squeezed by Warring Majorities
By Bishara Awad

70 BRAZIL: Wrestling with Success
By Antonio Carlos Barro

72 MEXICO: Out of the Salt Shaker By Juan M. Isáis

74 AROUND THE GLOBE: What Part of the Great Commission Don't You Understand? By Luis Palau

PUTTING EVANGELICALISM ON THE MAP

*A Century of Growth
By David B. Barrett*

50

DEPARTMENTS

5 Inside CT: A Hidden
Mission

6 Letters

40 Editorials: The Truth About Lies; If It's Too Good to Be True

80 Directions: The Shroud of Turin: Cloaked in Mystery

82 Reflections

84 Pop Culture: The Great Escape

86 Arts: The Calling of
Elmer Yazzie

89 Books: Reality Is for Real

120 Charles Colson: Poster Boy for Postmodernism

NEWS

20 Unification Church: Inside Moon's Unhappy Family

22 Missions: Finishers Conference Kickoff Sells Out

24 Germany: Conservative Loss Distresses Evangelicals

26 Urban Outreach: Food Pantry Eyes New Ministry

30 Christian Reformed: Bankruptcy Threatens Investments

32 Washington: Religious Persecution Bill Nears Approval

34 Indonesia: Tribal Christians Buffeted by Modernism

17 North American Report

28 World Report

No message is more important.

relationship is everything.

RECENTLY, ONE OF OUR STUDENTS, JOHN-PAUL LOTZ, was struck and pinned in his car while entering the freeway. Several surgeries and many days in the hospital followed. Knowing that he was hundreds of miles from home, the Beeson Divinity School family responded with an outpouring of love and support. Reflecting on this, John-Paul, who was born in Switzerland and studied in Germany, summed up his experience in three German words, "Beziehung macht alles," "relationship is everything."

I CAN THINK OF NO MESSAGE MORE IMPORTANT for theological education today—"relationship is everything." The mission of Beeson is to prepare persons whom God has called to be ministers of the Gospel for service in the Church of Jesus Christ. This requires a serious engagement with the primary documents of the Christian faith, a deep understanding of our historical and theological foundations, as well as the ability to read the culture and boldly proclaim God's Word. But books, classrooms, and computers do not by themselves a theological community make! This requires regular worship of the Triune God and cultivation of spiritual disciplines for faculty, students, and staff alike.

NO ONE CAN BE A MINISTER OF the Gospel alone. All too often the culture of theological education reinforces patterns of isolation and competition. Our job is to nurture relationships so that every student may grow toward full maturity in Christ. Focus on relationality does not mean capitulating to the therapeutic culture with its "touchy-feely" techniques. It does mean taking time to listen, pray together, read God's Word, and celebrate His presence in worship. When this happens, the chapel will become as important as the library, the prayer closet as prized as the computer lab.

John-Paul Lotz

SAMFORD UNIVERSITY
Birmingham, Alabama

Timothy George

Dean

FOR INFORMATION ABOUT BEESON DIVINITY SCHOOL CALL 1-800-888-8266

Beeson is affiliated with the National Association of Evangelicals and is accredited by The Association of Theological Schools in the United States and Canada. Samford University is an Equal Opportunity Institution and welcomes applications for employment and educational programs from all individuals regardless of race, color, sex, disability, or national or ethnic origin.

Michael G. Maudlin,
Managing Editor

A Hidden Mission

INSIDE CT

Few evangelical organizations I hear about in my role with this magazine surprise me since most fit into ready-made categories—prison ministry, humanitarian relief, crusade evangelism, and so on.

So when I learned about Overseas Council last year, a 25-year-old ministry whose mission and scope was unlike any I had encountered before, I wondered how I had missed it all these years. Under the leadership of John C. Bennett, president of its American division (based in Indianapolis), this organization has set out to help local churches establish “flagship” graduate-level theological schools or training programs in 17 strategic regions in the Two Thirds World. These indigenous programs provide the caliber of theological and pastoral training for local churches that historically has been available to non-Western Christians only by traveling at great expense to Western institutions.

A big part of the council’s role is raising funds by establishing partnerships with individuals and organizations in Western countries. The funds they generate (the goal is $46 million by decade’s end) not only help local churches with the capital they need for buildings and faculty, but also allow needy students to meet tuition expenses. This year alone the council will provide over $1 million in student scholarships.

Two of the contributors in this issue of CT—

Antonio Barro in Brazil and David Kasali in Kenya—are the direct recipients of the council’s good work. The schools they serve as presidents, the Nairobi Evangelical Graduate School of Theology and the South American Theological Seminary, are able to run in part because of the partnership program.

Overseas Council’s current newsletter gives updates from schools in over two dozen countries. The very names and locations of some of these institutions seem miraculous—Jordan Evangelical Theological Seminary; Russian-American Christian University (Russia); Myanmar Evangelical Graduate School of Theology; Nusantara Bible Seminary (Indonesia); Evangelical Theological Seminary (Croatia); New Pines Seminary (Cuba).

The existence of these schools reinforces what church historian Mark Hutchinson notes in this issue (p. 46): evangelicalism’s centers of influence are no longer confined to Western institutions; and our evangelical movement needs exactly the kind of partnerships Overseas Council is creating if we are to thrive into the next millennium.

In the spirit of the council’s mission, we present this special issue devoted to letting evangelical leaders report—in their own words—on the state of the movement in their corners of the world. We think you will be impressed with the truth that God’s plan for his church is both global and local—and fascinating and diverse and surprising. CT

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Founded 1956

Editorial Directors: George K. Brushaber, Chairman; Charles I. Packer, Visiting Scholar; Timothy George, Senior Adviser; R. Kent Hughes, Earl F. Palmer, Marianne Meyer Thompson, John D. Woodbridge

Editorial Director: Harold L. Myra
Executive Editor: David Neff
Managing Editor: Michael G. Maudlin
Art Director: Carla Sonheim
Associate Editors: Richard A. Kauffman, Kevin D. Miller, Timothy C. Morgan, Wendy Murray Zoba

Administrative Editor: John W. Kennedy
Associate News Editor: John Wilson
Book Review Editor: June M. Gunawan
Associate Designer: Christine J. Gardner
Editor at Large: Philip Yancey
Senior Writer: Tim Stafford
Senior News Writer: Arthur D. Moore
Arts Editor: Karen L. Mulder
Editorial Coordinator: Paulette DePaul
Administrative Assistant: Lara Badalamenti

Board of Directors: Billy Graham, Chairman; Clayton Bell, Sr., Executive Chairman; Harold L. Myra, President; Miriam Adeney, John N. Akers, J.P. Briscoe, Stephen W. Brown, A. Kenneth Curtis, Susan S. Eames, Robert P. Evans, Eugene Habecker, Ben Haden, Pete Hammond, Michael Haynes, Oswald C. J. Hoffmann, C. B. Hogue, Jr., H. A. Huffman, Jr., Edward L. Johnson, Jay L. Lester, Dennis F. Kinlaw, Jack Modest, Jr., William Pendleton, Robert E. Reccord, Paul D. Robbins, Fred Smith, Jr., Howard S. Williams

Editorial Board: Billy Graham, Founder; Carl F. H. Henry, Editor 56-68; L. Nelson Bell, Executive Editor 1968-73; Harold Lindsey, Editor 1968-78; Kenneth S. Kantzer, Editor 1978-82; V. Gilbert Beers, Editor 1982-85; George K. Brushaber, Executive Editor 1985-91; Harry C. Muck, Executive Editor 1985-90

Contributing Editors: Miriam Adeney, Nigel M. de S. Cameron, Charles W. Colson, James R. Edwards, Nathan O. Hatch, Kenneth A. Myers, Mark A. Noll, Thomas C. Oden, Ben Patterson, David Schiedermayer, David A. Seamands, Howard A. Snyder, John R. W. Stott

Consulting Editors: Paul M. Bassett, Colin Brown, Harold O. J. Brown, Robert E. Cooley, David S. Dockery, William A. Dymess, Stanley J. Grenz, Christopher A. Hall, Walter C. Kaiser, Jr., Kenneth S. Kantzer, Donald W. McCullough, Alistair E. McGrath, Richard Mouw, Roger E. Olson, Haddon W. Robinson, Stephen A. Seamands, Aida Besançon Spencer, John G. Stackhouse, Jr., Donald A. D. Thorsen, Edwin M. Yamauchi

Corresponding Editors: Tokunboh Adeyemo, V. Elving Anderson, Donald G. Bloesch, Edith L. Blumhofer, Darrell L. Bock, Calvin B. DeWitt, Samuel Escobar, C. Stephen Evans, Ajith Fernando, Richard J. Foster, Vernon Grounds, Allen C. Guelzo, Christopher D. Hancock, Alan F. Harre, Roberta Hestenes, Arthur P. Johnston, Robert K. Johnston, David Livingstone, Paul L. Maier, George M. Marsden, David L. McKenna, Stephen V. Monsma, Leon Morris, Terry C. Muck, Nancy Murphy, Bradley Nassif, Armand M. Nicholi, Jr., Roger Nicole, C. René Padilla, William E. Pannell, Eugene H. Peterson, Richard V. Pierard, Robert C. Roberts, John Rodgers, Vinay Samuel, David P. Scaer, Bruce L. Shelley, Ronald J. Sider, Russell P. Spittler, Elmer L. Towns, Grant Wacker, Robert L. Wilken, J. Rodman Williams

Advisory Editors: Leith Anderson, Myron S. Augsburger, William Bentley Ball, David B. Barrett, Paul W. Brand, Michael Cromartie, Edward G. Dobson, James Engel, George Gallup, Jr., Charles E. Hummel, Diane L. Knippers, Steven T. McFarland, Dean Merrill, Bryant L. Myers, Richard John Neuhaus, Will Norton, Jr., Michael Novak, Matthew Parker, James W. Reapsome, Beth Spring, Joseph M. Stowell, Warren W. Wiersbe

CTH CHRISTIANITY TODAY, INC.

Harold L. Myra, President, C.T.O.
Paul D. Robbins, Executive Vice President, C.T.O.
Laurie Powell, Executive Assistant
Keith Stonehocker, Senior Vice President
Harold B. Smith, Corporate Vice President
David Hemstreet, Vicki Howard, John C. LaRue, Jr., Kevin A. Miller, David Neff, Linda Schambach, JoAnn Selander, Marshall Shelley, Carol Thompson, Vice Presidents

Advertising: Joyce Bardin, Karen Booker, Joel Carlsen, Lee Cunningham, Dorothy Dawson, Kevin Flanagan, John Grey, Carol Hayes, Jenny Jorgensen, Tim Platek, Daniel Poorman, Kathryn Stephens, Joel Stombres

Circulation: Charlene Perez, Production Director; Jo Ann Rosenbaum, Fulfillment Director; Leslee Baron, Norma Bormann, Bradley Dupuy, Tracy Griesser, Heidi Hall, Judy Harrington, Julie Kaminski, Sherry Kyle, Dianne Lambert, Debra Lane, Jeremy Long, Nancy Nance, Louie P. Parker, Karen Raad, Carol Schaley, Jennifer Stenzel, Elizabeth Tolentino, Bonnie Willman, Joy Windes, Philip Woods

Financial Operations: Terumi Echols, Manager, Cheri Peterson, Credit Manager, Gary Johnson, Sandra Johnson, Judy Van Zanten

Human Resources: Susan Cronk, Manager, Rebecca Bright, Kate Bryant, Bert Davidson, Philip DiCicco, Jane Hyeon, Lew Radabaugh

Internet Online Services: Judy Gill, Manager, Clayton Anderson, Kathy DePue, Sky Findlay, Wendy Harley, Michelle Hayes, Laura Hepler, Michael Herman, Todd Watermann, Aaron Welch

Market Research: Cynthia Solver, Manager, Grace Ferroni, Natalia Marandic, Douglas Zimmerman

Production: Cynthia Cronk, Manager; Technology: Les Smith, Manager, Jeff DiNanno, Ted Gysan, Kelly Johnson, Tim Ostermiller, Theresa Phillips, Rebekah Santos, James Smeenge

Special Sales: Glenn Bushong, Manager; Becki Bustin, Michael Fister, Rodney Heckler, Jared Johnson, Lynn Long, John Ramsell

Editorial/Advertising Offices: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188 630-260-6200; FAX: 630-260-0114. Advertising in CHRISTIANITY TODAY does not necessarily imply editorial endorsement.

Subscription Services: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, P.O. Box 37060, Boone, Iowa 50037-0060. Customer service: 800-999-1704.

Manuscript Policy: Unsolicited manuscripts are not accepted. A query letter must be sent first, describing a proposed manuscript (poetry is not accepted). Unsolicited manuscripts sent without a self-addressed, postage-paid envelope will not be returned.

Permissions: CHRISTIANITY TODAY grants permission for any original article (not a reprint) to be photocopied for use in a local church or classroom, provided no more than 1,000 copies are made, are distributed free, and indicate the source is CHRISTIANITY TODAY.

Australian Agent: MEDIA.COM, 14 Eton Road, Keswick 5061, South Australia. United Kingdom Agent: MASTERPLAN PUBLISHING CO., 63-67 Kingston Road, New Malden, Surrey KT3 3PB, phone 0181-942-9442.

Indexes: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is indexed in Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature; Christian Periodical Index; Religion Index One; Periodicals, Religious and Theological Abstracts; Book Review Index; and Academic Abstracts and Magazine Article Summaries. ISSN 0009-5753. © 1998 CHRISTIANITY TODAY INC.

Christianity Today (ISSN 0009-5753) is published monthly (semi-monthly in April and October), 14 issues per year, by Christianity Today, Inc., 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188. Periodicals postage paid at Carol Stream, IL, and at additional mailing offices. Postmaster: Send address changes to Christianity Today, P.O. Box 37060, Boone, IA 50037-0060; 1-800-999-1704. GST Registration Number R126028836. Canada Post Mail Product Sales Agreement #59536. Printed in U.S.A.

Subscription Rates: Regular subscription price: one year $24.95. Outside U.S. add $8.00 postage prepaid U.S. currency. $2.50 per copy.

Subscription Renewals? Gift Subscriptions? Address Changes? Call toll-free 1-800-999-1704.

E-mail: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is available electronically on America Online (keyword: ct); E-mail: CHRISTIANITY TODAY at CTed@al.com. ct is also on the Web at www.christianitytoday.net. For information on how to enroll in Christianity Online, call 1-800-833-8888.

"Tough Love" Toward Israel?

Thank you for the careful, thought-provoking articles reviewing evangelical attitudes toward Israel [Oct. 5]. Timothy Weber's cover article was instructive. Calvin Shenk's sidebar was pastoral, and the article on Brother Andrew was challenging! You mentioned an organization linking evangelical churches with Jewish settlements in the West Bank and Gaza; your readers might be interested to know that there is another program matching families and churches in North America with Palestinian families whose homes are threatened with demolition by the Israeli government. Christian Peacemaker Teams (Chicago) coordinates this program in cooperation with several Israeli groups (including Rabbis for Human Rights) who together form the Israeli Committee Against House Demolitions.

For those who want what is best for Israel, it is important to see that as distinct from supporting whatever the current government of Israel does; we must not lazily assume there is one Israeli point of view. The Bible shows us a God who loves all, and who consistently sides with the oppressed. Maybe it is time for us to practice "tough love" toward Israel. Rich H. Meyer Millersburg, Ind.

Weber cites Richard Cizik's belief that "most evangelicals simply have not thought through the issue of Jewish settlements in Palestinian territories." This troubling indictment grabbed my attention more dramatically than Weber's history of the dispensationalists' prophetic excesses. In our rush to help Jesus take his place upon David's throne, have we forgotten the gospel of peace?

David R. Darval
Fresno, Calif.

Christian Friends of Israeli Communities (CFIC) appreciates being labeled "one of the most innovative humanitarian organizations supporting Israel," but we protest three inaccuracies in Weber's cover story:

(1) I am misquoted as saying "God sending Jesus back to Israel to set up kingdom." The quote was that God sending "Messiah" back. (2) You said "By the end of the war the Jews were now well armed and ready to force the issue of statehood," and "by November [1949] the better-trained Israeli troops had prevailed." Jews who escaped Auschwitz (and other camps) to emigrate to their promised homeland were interned to concentration camps in Cyprus. Jews already in the Holy Land were harshly regulated, forbidden to own weapons, and not allowed military training. Instead, the Brits trained Palestinians, turning military bases and weapons over to them when they departed May 14, 1948, leaving the Jews defenseless. Pentagon generals gave Israel three weeks at the outside to succumb to the combined onslaught of British-trained Petro-provisioned armies of the seven surrounding Arab states. (3) It is an insult to be told one must be a dispensationalist to support the re-establishment of Israel.

I believe the way to get blessed is to find out what God is doing and coop-

Spiritual Leaders Wanted.

Provide support, guidance and a sense of direction to young men and women in the military as a member of The Navy Chaplain Corps. If you're a Protestant Minister, you could enjoy an unparalleled opportunity to take part in our unique participatory ministry. You'll live, work, and worship with members of your congregation and have the chance to collaborate with chaplains from a variety of faiths.

In addition to aiding in the spiritual and moral development of our young people, you'll enjoy excellent benefits: generous pay and allowances, comprehensive medical coverage and 30 days of vacation with pay earned every year. For more information, call the phone number below or visit our web site at www.navyjobs.com.

1-800-USA-NAVY operator 15

NAVY
LET THE JOURNEY BEGIN.

CRANMER THEOLOGICAL HOUSE

P. O. Box 52591
Shreveport, LA 71135

An Anglican School of Ministry in the Tradition of the English Reformation

FOR INFORMATION CALL:

1-800-REC-0910
(732)

www.cranmerhouse.edu
rsutton@morrisdickson.com

An outstanding opportunity for residence study with leading Christian Scholars. An EARN-WHILE-YOU-LEARN program is available for incoming students in the 1998-1999 academic year.

with that process. CFIC is trying to do that.

*Theodore Temple Beckett, Intl. Chairman
Christian Friends of Israeli Communities
Colorado Springs, Colo.*

Tim Weber's essay on the untold story of Israel and evangelicalism was eye-opening and convicting. He accurately described how some far-fetched evangelical eschatologies have directly affected the way Christians view the modern secular State of Israel today. Friends who are Palestinian Christians tell me they feel abandoned and wounded by our refusal to embrace them and recognize their suffering. And they are perplexed that we view everything through an "end time" lens, even Israel's failure to be faithful to its own covenant with God.

I was speaking with a British worker from an evangelical relief organization based in Jerusalem who summed up this perspective poignantly: "Genesis 12:2 says that those who bless Israel, God will bless. America is doomed if it does not love Israel everything it wants." And what about our Arab brothers and sisters in Christ,

I asked, who sometimes suffer in Israel? "They are simply in the way of God's plan for the ages."

*Prof. Gary M. Burge
Wheaton College
Wheaton, Ill.*

Weber performed a valuable service in tracing the impact of dispensationalism

"In the pastorate you don't really get to experience joy, but you get opportunities to pretend you do."

on evangelical attitudes toward Israel. However, the article cries out for the telling of another story—one which, so far as I know, has never been told in a mainstream Christian publication. This is the story of Arab attitudes toward Israel as expressed in the popular press, in books and pamphlets, and in other cultural forums. Like the story Timothy Weber tells, it involves a complex mixture of religious and political agendas, of scholarly (or pseudo-scholarly) and populist discourse. Many readers of CT, I believe, would be shocked not only by the virulence and the intransigence of these views but by their wide acceptance within the Arab world. The telling of this story would not provide a warrant for Israel to violate with impunity the human rights of Palestinians, or of anyone else, but it would provide a tonic dose of reality therapy.

*John Wilson, Editor
BOOKS & CULTURE
Carol Stream, Ill.*

Weber's assertion that dispensationalism has been the leading force behind evangelical support for Jews and Israel is a shock

At Beeson, Pastors Matter.

YOUR COMMITMENT AS A PASTOR IS TO MINISTER FOR A LIFETIME.
AT BEESON, IT'S OUR MISSION TO PREPARE AND SUPPORT PERSONS LIKE YOU.

BEESON'S DOCTOR OF MINISTRY DEGREE (D.MIN.) is designed to enrich ministry and seeks to enhance practical skills. With minimal on-campus study (two-week seminars in July and January each year), the D.Min. degree program is practical for ministers who are "in the trenches." Our commitment to be explicitly evangelical in an ecumenical setting on a university campus enhances our ability to provide you with ongoing opportunities to learn and grow.

Candidates for the program are admitted each July. The deadline for admission is March 1. For specific information, write or call Danny Blair, Director of Admissions and Recruitment, at 1-800-888-8266.

SAMFORD UNIVERSITY
Birmingham, Alabama 35229-2252
1-800-888-8266
<http://beeson.samford.edu>

Beeson is affiliated with the National Association of Evangelicals and is accredited by The Association of Theological Schools in the United States and Canada. Samford University is an Equal Opportunity Institution and welcomes applications for employment and educational programs from all individuals regardless of race, color, sex, disability or national or ethnic origin.

to the millions of evangelicals who don't believe its unbiblical tenets (e.g., that the church is a mere parenthesis in history).

It isn't doctrine or theological systems that make us love the Jew and Israel, but Jesus Christ himself. Furthermore, where would the church be without the Jew?

The beliefs of dispensationalists wax and wane. But Jesus Christ and his love for the Jew and for Israel remain forever!

Warren Angel

Congregational Christian Churches
Oceanside, Calif.

The forced admixture of faith and political ideology always results in a compromised faith. Evangelicals who support Israel should do so for political reasons alone. Otherwise, there is an inevitable, subtle diminishing of Jesus' claim to be the Messiah. Dispensationists who continue to rewrite the scripts for fanciful end-time scenarios should be reminded of the words of the Christ himself: "My kingdom is not of this world" (John 18:36).

Timothy D. Pyles
Carrollton, Tex.

☐ Is it a bad thing that God is moving across denominational lines to give the church a heart and love for Israel? Should we believe the replacement view and just forget about them since God [has their eyes] anyway? Yes, we are part of the grassroots "fringe" movement. I prefer to, and either support or directly participate in nearly all the ministries you mentioned. But isn't it just possible that God can still work outside the carefully patrolled confines of "the system"? I fear that "the system" is so concerned that there be no "strange fire" on the altar that there is for the most part no fire on the altar.

Norm and Annie Schaeffer
Cable, W. Va.

The Benefit of the Doubt

Your October 5 editorial ["The Prodigal President"] sets up a false contrast between sinner Clinton and sinner (Prodigal) Starr. "There is a huge difference between being found and being cornered." In our Lord's and wondrous parable of the prodigal, the Father is overwhelmingly gracious, grace-filled Father. We aren't told whether the Son was repentant. From the Father's standpoint, the Son is "found." But from the Son's standpoint, the trigger-motive is hunger (Luke 15:17, NIV, "starving to death"), repentance. He "came to his senses" (see the reverse) in realizing that his diet would improve if he returned home.

Clinton was cornered by Starr, the Prodigal Son was cornered by hunger. Each carefully crafted his cover speech. Neither is the other's moral superior. Starr and the Father are very different. The former kept demanding that the prodigal make full confession and grovel. The latter broke into the canned speech before the groveling.

You are right that "only God knows" whether Clinton's repentance is genuine. Grace, the graciousness of the American people, should assume it is. Let's give him at least the benefit of the doubt.

Willis E. Smith
Craigville, Mo.

☐ Thank you for the powerful editorial on why Clinton's apology misfired. I appreciate the courage and insight of the editorial. It is sad that Mr. Clinton appears to desire the power and prestige of being President more than he desires the grace and forgiveness of God. Seems to me there was another "Rich Young Ruler" who had a similar problem.

Rev. Gary Preston
Boulder, Colo.

Now accepting applications for:

THE SHERMAN SCHOLARSHIPS

Candler School of Theology will offer 90% scholarships to forty incoming students preparing for biblically based, evangelical parish ministry in the United Methodist Church.

When combined with gifts from the annual conference and the local church, Sherman scholarships will exceed tuition and fees.

call collect 404-727-6326
<http://www.emory.edu/CANDLER/candler@emory.edu>

EDUCATING

FAITHFUL

AND CREATIVE

LEADERS FOR

THE CHURCH'S

MINISTRIES IN

THE WORLD.

EMORY

ARE YOU SERIOUS ABOUT DISCIPLESHIP, BUT TIRED OF FORMULAS THAT DON'T WORK? WE CAN HELP.

Being a Christian isn't about following a formula. It's about living in a relationship—one that satisfies your deepest longings and develops Christ's own life within your soul. Unfortunately, many of us fail

The River Within by Jeff Imbach offers renewed passion for living your Christian life, giving you a liberating look at the tie between loving God and passionate living.

to enter fully into this life. Too often, we lead unfulfilled lives of quiet resignation. It doesn't have to be this way.

Drawn from the vast wisdom of classic spirituality developed by Augustine, A.W. Tozer, C.S. Lewis, Henri Nouwen, and others, the NavPress SPIRITUAL FORMATION LINE is designed to deepen your spiritual life by focusing on inner transformation—not external conformity. As Christ transforms your heart through His inner presence, you will increasingly learn to live and act as He did. As His apprentice, you will learn how to live every moment of life from the reality of God's kingdom.

Under the guidance of pastor, author, and teacher, Dallas Willard, the NavPress SPIRITUAL FORMATION LINE presents authentic discipleship to Jesus Christ as the greatest opportunity we have in

Soul Keeping by Howard Baker examines the classic practice of spiritual direction, making this important discipline accessible to everyday believers.

life and the only hope for humankind.

The Glorious Pursuit by Gary Thomas explores how practicing the virtues of Christ makes us who God created us to be and allows us to experience Christ in a new way.

Also available in this series:

- Follow Me* (Jan David Hettinga) $14
- In His Image* (Michael Wilkins) $14
- Love Your God with All Your Mind* (J. P. Moreland) $14
- The Transforming Power of Prayer* (James Houston) $10

NAV PRESS
BRINGING TRUTH TO LIFE
www.navpress.com

Get your copies today at your local bookstore, or call (800) 366-7788 and ask for offer #2190.

Don't look now but you're being followed

"This Bible will prove to be an excellent, hands-on resource for any leader who wants to motivate and empower others in a Biblically directed manner. I can't wait to get my hands on it!"

—John Maxwell

Pastor, author and founder of INJOY Christian Leadership Organization

From parents to presidents, we all have our personal following. People who look up to us. People who justify their own behavior by what we do.

Enter the Leadership Bible, the perfect resource for anyone who wants to get better at being the leader God intended. You'll get a sharp focus on the three most important areas of a leader's life: Personal development, leadership skills, and relationships with others. 52 weeks of practical study on leadership principles will help hone your skills in just 15 minutes a day. And words of wisdom from proven leaders like Bill Hybels, Pat Riley and Ken Blanchard will motivate you and those you lead to do great things.

Become the leader you were created to be. Call 1-800-727-3480 or visit your local Christian bookstore today.

Zondervan
www.zondervan.com

Home Field Advantage

Hundreds of missionaries, citizens of "mission field" countries, are ready to go.

Even if you're not an athlete or a sports fan, you probably know that most sports teams have a much better rate of success when they do battle on their home turf. This is called "Home Field Advantage," and it applies to missionaries as well as athletes!

Around the globe for more than 40 years, CHRISTIAN AID has been identifying evangelical indigenous mission organizations whose missionaries have this "Home Field Advantage," especially in countries that are closed to missionaries from America.

Thousands of these missionaries who have "Home Field Advantage" are doing spiritual warfare on their home turf, many without cash support. If people offer them food, they eat; otherwise they go hungry. They need support for food, lodging, travel, literature, and ministry expenses.

Christian Aid has contact with approximately 5000 indigenous mission groups that have tens of thousands of missionaries on the field or ready to go. Missionaries in rural areas can get along on $30 monthly. Those in cities may need $100. On average the amount of support needed is $50 monthly.

Send from $30 to $100 monthly and you will receive the name, photograph and biographical sketch of the missionary you support plus information about the indigenous mission board with which he or she serves.

More than 60% of unreached people groups live in countries closed to missionaries from North America. Christian Aid is your link to missionaries who have "Home Field Advantage" in evangelizing unreached people groups.

For information on how you can support a pioneer missionary call or write:

Christian Aid Mission

3045 Ivy Road • Charlottesville, VA 22903
Telephone: 1-804-977-5650
website: www.christianaid.org

- They already know several local languages, so have no need for language school.
- They typically work 52 weeks a year, and never take a furlough.
- They are fully adjusted to local climate, cultures, customs, food, water and living conditions.
- Their work cannot be stopped by visa problems or changes in the government or political situation.
- Best of all, they plant churches among unreached people where Christ is not known.

Christian
Aid

The Home Field Advantage® mission

Once Every Thousand Years Or So A Notable Opportunity Comes Along...

This One Features A Return Engagement At The Sea Of Galilee

Announcing JERUSALEM 2000 — The event of the millennium

Christians from around the world will travel to the Holy Land for the year 2000, for good reason. Where better to celebrate the millennium of Jesus? But only relatively few will have the worship experience offered by Jerusalem 2000.

This unique, limited-registration event package will not only allow participants to tour the Holy Land, but will enable them to worship the Holy One as never before.

Jerusalem 2000 includes praise and worship, and on-location experiences produced for Christians by Christians. These include participation in dramatic reenactments of biblical accounts, staged in the natural setting of the land where they occurred. Be a part of the story, when you join the cast in the reenactment of the baptism of Jesus in the River Jordan, Jesus walking on water at the Sea of Galilee, Ruth and Boaz gleaning wheat in the fields of Judea, carry the sheaves of the first fruits in a grand procession through the streets of Jerusalem, and take part in worship service at Mt. Zion broadcast around the world.

Group reservations are now available.

Spaces are limited.

- Only twelve U.S. departures
- Attractive group leader incentives
- Flexible installment payment plan
- Quality travel arrangements
- Keynote speakers include

Dr. Don Argue, Dr. Pat Robertson,
Dr. Robert Schuller, Dr. Paul Walker and more

- Commissioned by The Millennium Council —
an inter-denominational coalition of Christian leaders

While all departure dates are open to everyone, some denominations, associations and denominations have selected specific dates and are encouraging their members to travel during that time. Find out if your organization has selected a specific departure date, and speak to the group coordinator at the number below.

Call today for a complete information packet
(800) 477-2306 (561) 278-8113 fax

Although I didn't vote for President Clinton, it grieved me to see CT's editors take such a hard line against him. A publication for and by evangelical Christians should take the lead in forgiveness, regardless of the kind of confession or apology offered. Jesus did not come to condemn, so why do we think our role is to judge? A song we used to sing had the words, "They shall know we are Christians by our love." Does President Clinton now we are Christians by our love?

*Patty Gorton
San Diego, Calif.*

The President never confessed anything at the prayer breakfast or anywhere else, but he admitted to something only after getting cornered. What did he say he was sorry for? Was it even necessary for him to do it? No, it wasn't necessary for him to make this pious admission, and that is one big reason why I am so suspicious of his motives. He invoked the church in an age when we supposedly live in a separation of church and state. When it is convenient for him and many with a liberal ideology to invoke religious ideas, they do. When it's not, they stifle and inhibit religious ideas at will. All bets are off now until Bill Clinton stands for Jesus Christ and bans abortion.

David Hale Rockford, Ill.

Apologies or Repentance?

In his opinion piece, "Me? Apologize or Slavery?" [Oct. 5], Gordon Marino wrote that "many white students . . . are being asked to feel guilty and repent for racist institutions and actions in which they themselves had no hand." Marino then explains that we must apologize and repent for the privileges we enjoy today, benefits gained through centuries of suffering by African-American slaves. Good as far as it goes. But Marino fails to understand why guilt remains even when apologies are made. His piece fails to grapple with the deep meaning of repentance. Apologies are easy, repentance is not. Apology without repentance fails to address the problem of guilt.

The real problem is our desire to have our cake and eat it too. Is it any wonder that superficial apologies without restitution (restoration fourfold) only deepen our sense of guilt? We are as unrepentant for the American Holocaust, the atrocities committed against Native Peoples of North America, as we are for the institution of slavery. Apologies are cheap (though not unim-

- CONGREGATIONAL SINGING
- OUTDOOR MEETINGS
- HOME USE
- SOLOS AND CHOIR REHEARSAL

THE DIGITAL HYMNAL

NEW VERSION CP

Now With Acoustic Grand Piano Plus Over 650 New Titles Previously Unavailable

- Instantly plays thousands of new praise and worship music, contemporary selections, traditional hymns, gospel favorites, kid's titles plus wedding, graduation and memorial selections - already stored inside - and indexed to page numbers of popular hymn books
- Acoustic grand piano, pipe organs, choir, strings and brass plus other exciting instruments already stored inside for instant use
- You choose the key, number of verses and style
- Completely self contained - no costly keyboards or disks needed
- Includes remote control and built-in speakers, or use PA system - CD quality sound
- Rechargeable NiCad battery available
- Pre-program an entire service in memory mode

Ask for cassette demo, master list of song titles and color brochure

 Gulbrandsen, Inc.
800-677-7374

2102 Hancock Street, San Diego, CA 92110 • FAX: 619-296-7157

Columbia Institute of Muslim Studies

July 12-August 6, 1999

Essential preparation for ministry to MUSLIMS

Session I: July 12-23

Morning: Introduction to Islam
Women in Islam
Afternoon: Folk Islam

Session II: July 26-August 6

Morning: Church Planting Among Muslims
Islam in North America
Afternoon: Islamic Theology

THREE STUDY OPTIONS

CREDIT: Each course earns three semester hours of graduate credit that may be applied toward a master's of arts degree.

NON-CREDIT: Audit a particular course at a fraction of the cost (only $120). Participation in course work is limited.

DELEGATE: As a delegate, you may attend any class session of your choice on a non-credit basis.

Photo courtesy FRONTIERS

CALL US TODAY
1-800-777-2227

Ext. 3326 or E-mail us at <muslimstudies@ciu.edu>

Columbia Biblical Seminary
& School of Missions

A division of Columbia International University
7435 Monticello Rd. • P.O. Box 3122 • Columbia, SC 29230-3122
803.754.4100 • Toll Free 1.800.777.2227 • www.ciu.edu
Preparing World Christians To Know Him And To Make Him Known

SEEKING PEACE

Everyone's seeking peace, but few find it. Why? Most people are looking in the wrong direction.

In his fifth book Arnold plumbs a wealth of spiritual traditions and the wisdom of ordinary people who have found peace—sometimes in surprising places. There is a peace greater than personal fulfillment, he writes; a peace greater than nations no longer at war. It is waiting for everyone. But there's a catch: it can't be had without the readiness to "die to self."

Seeking Peace by Johann Christoph Arnold
$20.00, hardcover, 256 pp, 0-87486-958-7

AVAILABLE IN BOOKSTORES, OR CALL PLOUGH

1-800-521-8011

KEY CODE C0006

PLOUGH

portant) while Christian discipleship is costly. When will the church begin to talk about sacrifice, equity, and redistribution, if not restitution?

*Bruce D. Martin
Eastern Mennonite University
Harrisonburg, Va.*

Why single out black slavery or, for that matter, why stop with American history? Following his own logic, Professor Marino owes me an apology because his Roman forebears enslaved my British kin.

*Ben Brozovich
Tacoma, Wash.*

I am a peace-loving person and really don't have a quarrel with anyone, no matter the color of their skin. But what about the racism I have experienced through verbal abuse and sometimes under threat of physical abuse simply because I made eye contact with an African American in the hallway of my school? What always fails to be mentioned in articles and news reports on racism is that (believe it or not) racism goes both ways in America. How much repenting, sorrow, anguish, and even apologizing will it actually take for blacks and whites to be reconciled? Has anyone ever heard of a biblical concept called for-givenness? If I am a racist and responsible for horrible abuses that happened years ago, then I ask for forgiveness from every black person in America; but please accept my forgiveness by embracing it and putting the transgression behind us just as Jesus has forgiven all of our sins and doesn't keep throwing them in our face after we have asked for forgiveness.

Neal Korfha Glendale, W.

Casting blame over such a vast gap of time, space, and logic reveals a graceless scorekeeping spirit. Repentance is our mutual criterion for group identity; it runs far deeper than race. We need to condemn slavery and move forward on mutual terms.

*Joel Mark Sollid
New Haven, Conn.*

A Fresh Look at Hell

Sincere thanks for a fresh look at the issue "Is Hell Forever?" [Directions, Oct. 5]. Every evangelical should be disturbed by the millions continuing to reject Christianity because of its medieval and unbiblical portrayal of Satan and his angels as the eternal tormentors of souls in hell. For the lost souls, Christ plainly declares "Fear him [God, not Satan] who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

NORTHEASTERN

Seminary

at Roberts Wesleyan College

Accredited M.A., M.Div., & M.Div/MSW

Rooted in Classical Christian Faith

Responsive to Contemporary Need

Committed to Spiritual Formation

Integrative in Curriculum

Convenient Course Scheduling

For information contact:

NORTHEASTERN SEMINARY

at Roberts Wesleyan College

2301 Westside Drive, Rochester, NY 14624-1997

(716) 594-6800 or 1-800-777-4792

Jesus died to establish his right to justly destroy Satan and his angels—as he did Adam and Gomorrah!

The struggle does not end with Satan eternally torturing billions in hell, and Jesus left to reign over billions less in heaven. It is through God's lake of fire—the second death—that he silences the protesting wails of the lost. Then eternal harmony will extend across God's vast spotted universe.

Norman L. Meager
Sonora, Calif.

For thoughtful believers who recognize that the Bible clearly teaches the fact of hell, the crucial question has to do with duration. Where the duration of after-death punishment is expressed, the Greek word used is aionion, usually translated as eternal. However, the word literally refers to an age or ages to come, and an age has an end as well as a beginning and a middle. Thus, the "accursed" will go away in aionion punishment and the righteous to aionion life. Those deserving retribution will pay the penalty of aionion destruction/ruin away from the Lord's presence (2 Thess. 1:9). The only mention of postmortem punishment beyond aionion reserved for the Devil, the Beast, and the False Prophet. The Greek term for never-ending duration is used solely with reference to the bliss of Christians, when Christ comes and takes them to be ever with him.

Ruth Pera Dodson
Fairfax, Va.

Corrections

- A letter from Prof. Donald G. Bloesch in the October 5 issue erroneously contains an unintended letter s in the following sentence: "I oppose a gender egalitarianism that erases real differences between men and women but hold [not holds] to the full equality of both sexes under God and to women in ministry."

- The Web site address in the Arts article regarding the Christian Performing Artists' Fellowship [Oct. 5] should read www.ChristianPerformingArt.org

- The correct e-mail address for Shari Plunket in Conversations [Oct. 5] is sp1rsRt@dnai.com

CT regrets the errors.

Brief letters are welcome. They may be edited for space and clarity and must include the writer's name and address if intended for publication. Due to the volume of mail, we cannot respond personally to individual letters. Write to Eutychus, CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188; fax: 630/260-0114. E-mail: ctedit@aol.com (✉).

SERVE YOUR COUNTRY WHILE STILL IN SEMINARY.

The Army needs ministers and seminary students to meet the spiritual needs of America's soldiers and their families.

The Army and Army Reserve have even developed a special program for seminary students that won't interfere with your studies. It's called the Army Chaplain Candidate program. And it enables you to use your summer vacation to minister to the diverse needs of America's troops here in the U.S. or overseas.

The need is great, but the rewards are even greater. For specific information call 1 800 USA ARMY or visit the Army Chaplain website at www.goarmy.com

ARMY CHAPLAIN CORPS
BE ALL YOU CAN BE

REFORMED EPISCOPAL

Since 1887

Philadelphia Theological Seminary

Committed to training capable pastors, effective missionaries
and competent lay-workers.

Since 1887 we have been training Christ's people for Christ's ministry in Christ's way. If you are looking for a Seminary with a rock-solid commitment to the Bible as the Word of God, a faculty of scholar-pastors, fidelity to "the faith once delivered to the saints," and a seminary experience packed full of practical pastoral experience and training in preaching the Word of God, PTS may well be the Seminary for you.

Ask about our one-third scholarships for resident M.Div. Students

or

Talk to us about beginning with Seminary At A Distance.

We are Biblical, Episcopal, Liturgical, Evangelical and Reformed.

For more information call or write:

Philadelphia Theological Seminary
7372 Henry Avenue
Philadelphia, PA 19128-1401

1-800-899-5158
Associate Member of
The Association of Theological Schools

Jesus loves me, this I know.

Jesus loves every child. But the sad thing is, many children don't know it.

It is a tragic fact that millions of children suffer in relentless poverty and misery.

They are hungry, sick and hurting. They are the helpless victims of disease, war and ignorance. Their lives are an endless struggle to survive.

These are the children World Vision wants to reach in the name of Jesus. And by meeting their physical needs, we can share with them the love of Jesus.

This can be done when caring friends like you join us in helping children through Child Sponsorship.

Through sponsorship, you can help provide a needy child with improved health, nutrition and educational opportunities, as well as the chance to know the love of Jesus.

Your sponsorship gifts will also help your child's family and community become self-reliant.

For less than $6 a week—$22 a month—you can change a child's life forever.

To become a sponsor, just return the coupon below. You'll receive information and a photograph of a child who needs your help.

And you can follow his or her progress through personal letters and regular updates.

There are so many children who need to know the love of Jesus and the care you can give them. Please send this coupon today.

World Vision's ministry reaches across the globe to be the "hands and heart of Jesus" to suffering children. A charter member of the Evangelical Council for Financial Accountability, World Vision is the largest Christian international child sponsorship organization, improving the lives of over 1 million sponsored children in 43 countries.

1 800 448-6437

SPONSOR A CHILD TODAY

<http://www.worldvision.org>

In Canada write: P.O. Box 2500,
Mississauga, Ontario L5M 2H2
Phone: 1 800 268-1650

1650696

Jesus loves the children - and so do I.

I prefer to sponsor a ☐ boy ☐ girl living in ☐ Africa ☐ Asia ☐ Latin America
☐ Middle East ☐ where the need is greatest.

☐ Here is my first monthly gift of $22 to help improve the quality of life for my child and their entire community.

☐ Check (payable to World Vision)

☐ Bill my monthly sponsorship payment to my credit card:

☐ VISA ☐ MasterCard ☐ American Express ☐ Discover

No. _____ - _____ - _____ EXP. DATE _____ SIGNATURE _____

☐ Please bill me later.

☐ I cannot sponsor a child right now, but would like to give a gift of $ _____ 1300

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY/STATE/ZIP _____

PHONE (_____) _____

AB88AA

MAIL TODAY TO:

World Vision
Child Sponsorship
P.O. Box 70050

Tacoma, WA 98481-0050
1 800 448-6437

WORLD VISION
Acting on faith

WWJD UPDATE

Would Jesus Wear Leaded Necklace?

What would Jesus do? Probably not wear a lead WWJD cube necklace from a Pacific Jim jewelry manufacturer.

But a two-year-old Knoxville, Tennessee, boy who died of contracted lead poisoning, prompting the Tennessee Department of Health to issue a warning about the necklaces. On September 30, Kmart pulled WWJD $2.99-$3.99 necklaces, pendants, and crosses from 2,000 stores. Wal-Mart removed its $2.97 costume jewelry from 700 stores.

Diane Denton, spokesperson for the Tennessee health department, says the boy had worn the necklace only a dozen times over a two-month period—while in church. But by putting the necklace in his mouth, Denton says, the lead content in his blood rose to four times higher than safe levels.

Denton says the problem stems only from Korean, Chinese, and Taiwanese necklaces. The department notified the Consumer Product Safety Commission, which could order a recall. The grades of pewter most frequently used by the overseas manufacturers contain 65 to 80 percent lead.

Family Christian Stores, the largest Christian chain with 270 shops, does not sell the imports. "We've contacted each vendor and verified that all the products meet U.S. government standards," senior gift buyer Michael Hupp told CT.

Family teamed with Bob Siemon Designs of Santa Ana, California, to make the original WWJD cube jewelry. Siemon's products use 92 percent pewter, enough to be considered lead-free. "Quality isn't an accident," Siemon says.

His firm, which includes 325 employees in an 80,000-square-foot plant, has produced 4 million WWJD pieces of jewelry in the past year. The necklaces retail for $3.50 and are available in 6,000 Christian stores.

Siemon began making jewelry in 1970 as a 19-year-old message on jewelry that did not fall apart like the cheap products that characterized the industry at the time.

The WWJD phenomenon (CT, Nov. 17, 1997, p. 75) seemed to be an answer to prayer. Siemon tried to copyright the slogan but legally could not. Nevertheless, he carved out cubes to make a unique necklace.

In Asia, a manufacturer copied and modified his design and began selling the products to U.S. mass merchandisers. "They took a wonderful concept and plagiarized it," Siemon told CT. "They did the opposite of what Jesus would do."

Even though his company's sales have fallen markedly because of the lead scare, Siemon is glad the markets have been closed to copycats.

By John W. Kennedy.

Lead-free: In addition to jewelry, Siemon also makes WWJD key rings, coffee mugs, and even a New Testament.

college art student. As a newly born-again Christian, he vowed to reach the world with a form ceremonies "directly and unapologetically, following the example of integrity set by Jimmy Creech." Other clergy will permit laity to use church yards for the ceremonies and will "stand in honor as non-ministers read certain words within a ritual."

In response to the letter, Bishop George Bashore of Pittsburgh, president of the church's Council of Bishops, says the council must uphold the denomination's Book of Discipline. If charges are brought against any clergy in his area, they will be processed immediately. "I can't do otherwise," he says.

The letter calls on bishops to "receive the forgiveness of Christ" for "sins of omission." Instead of silence, the signers ask the bishops to teach the church how to address "misunderstandings about the nature of scriptural authority" so that members can learn how "a noncondemning acceptance of homosexuality is a legitimate position within our Wesleyan tradition." [CT]

UNITED METHODISTS

Letter Urges Same-Sex Union Support

An open letter signed by 363 United Methodist clergy and laity calls for the church's bishops to "move beyond silence and inaction" and allow same-sex marriages.

"Our church is adrift, buffeted by forces that seek to steer our course away from the prophetic, just, and compassionate course of Christ," states the letter, released October 11.

In August, the denomination's Judicial Council ruled that a Social Principle prohibiting homosexual marriages has the force of church law (CT, Oct. 5, 1998, p. 18). The decision came after Jimmy Creech, former pastor of First United Methodist Church in Omaha, Nebraska, performed a ceremony for two women (CT, June 15, 1998, p. 15). The 325 members who left Creech's church to protest his stance are forming a new congregation.

Despite church law, the letter states some clergy will per-

TELEVISION

Parents Group Targets Advertisers

A growing organization is convinced that consumer disgust directed toward advertisers will help improve the content of network television.

With entertainment personalities Steve Allen and Shirley Jones as honorary co-chairs, the Los Angeles-based Parents Television Council (PTC) has undertaken a national advertising campaign proclaiming "TV is leading children down a moral sewer."

Lately, the PTC has criticized Jif and Crest for advertising on the raunchy Howard Stern Radio Show (CT, Oct. 26, 1998, p. 15). Rather than sponsoring advertising boycotts as the American Family Association does (CT, Aug. 19, 1991, p. 14), the PTC, through ads, informs the public of the graphic contents of the shows.

"We try to get the attention of advertisers that have a responsibility to be family-friendly," says Mark Honig, 33, PTC executive director.

PTC's membership has grown to 20,000 since going national in 1995.

It is a project of the Media Research Center. Each year, PTC issues a summary of how religion is portrayed on the tube plus a family guide to programs (www.parentstv.org). Honig praises wholesome shows such as 7th Heaven on WB, Touched by an Angel on CBS, and Christy reruns on the new PAX TV (CT, Oct. 5, 1998, p. 15).

While the controversial ratings system implemented by the networks last year is partly a result of pressure from groups such as PTC, Honig does not see the guidelines as a solution to the real problem. "Garbage labeled is still garbage," he says. "There's no incentive to create better quality programs without cheap sex humor, vulgar language, and senseless violence." One of PTC's chief goals is to have networks voluntarily reinstate the "family hour," abandoned in the early 1980s.

CANADA

Plunging Dollar Imperils Ministries

Canadian mission agencies and organizations working overseas in relief and development are struggling to keep paying their bills with dollars that are worth a lot less than they used to be.

The Canadian dollar—known as the "loonie" for the waterfowl on the back of the brass-colored coin—fell in value to 63 cents U.S. in late summer before rallying to 66 cents.

The problem for Canadian organizations is that virtually all transactions overseas are paid in U.S. funds. That means money for salaries, rents, equipment purchases, supplies, and even monetary aid must be converted into U.S. currency. Agencies are faced with tough choices—cut back on overseas programs or ask donors for more money.

"The first thing we do is look at things that don't affect programs overseas," says Philip Maher, World Vision Canada's information officer. That might mean waiting until next year before buying new equipment for the Canadian office. Although WVC had budgeted for a devalued loonie this year, the dollar dropped lower than predicted.

Other organizations, such as Canadian Baptist Ministries, are preparing to ask supporters for increased donations. "We're reluctant to cut back on programs," says Blair Clark, CBM's director of resource development. "We're going after donors and asking them to dig deeper."

Asking for more money is not easy when supporters are already giving sacrificially, says Ken Reeve of Far East Broadcasting Associates of Canada. "Many of them are giving as much as they can." Despite the dollar doldrums, most Canadian agencies see little need for panic. "It's hurting us, but we won't call it a crisis to our donors," says Paul Carrick of Cause Canada, which does development work in Africa and Latin America. "It isn't the same as if a hurricane or typhoon wiped out a community."

By Debra Fieguth in Winnipeg.

Celebrating full communion: The 90-minute service melded elements of each of the four denominations participating.

Four Bodies Achieve 'Full Communion'

With a solemn, yet joyful worship service October 4, members of four Protestant traditions celebrated their entry into full communion, promising to live "day by day" into deeper commitment to one another.

More than 2,000 people jammed into the Gothic-style Rockefeller Chapel at the University of Chicago for the worship service bringing the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), Reformed Church in America, and the United Church of Christ one step closer together in the quest for Christian unity.

The denominations had previously approved the bold "full communion" venture that will enable each to share ministers, sacraments, and members. It also allows them to operate joint ministries while still retaining denominational identities.

The service opened with a four-way processional leading to a central baptismal font—the symbol of the basic sacrament of membership in each of the bodies. A common recitation of the Nicene Creed and a Renewal of Baptismal Vows emphasized common beliefs each tradition holds.

Religion News Service

FOSLS' Preserve Spurgeon Relics

As a teenager, Bill Lancaster began admiring Charles Haddon Spurgeon because he found the nineteenth-century English Baptist pastor's theology concise and lucid.

Now, at age 58, when he is not working as vice president of sales for Associated Grocers in Grandview, Missouri, Lancaster spends much of his time diligently restoring the books of the "Prince of Preachers," who lived from 1834 to 1892.

As president of FOSLS—Friends of the Spurgeon Library—Lancaster leads a corps of volunteers from around the United States. They work cautiously, knowing one false move could destroy the delicate material. They are archaeologists of sorts, preserving and repairing volumes from Spurgeon's private library.

"I believe the Spurgeon library represents a clear expression of the ministry of the gospel of Christ," Lancaster says. "It would be a shame to see this collection deteriorate; so we dedicate our time to making the books useful again—for students, scholars, and the general public."

Jerry Cain, vice president of William Jewell College in Liberty, Missouri, where the collection is housed, says volunteers repair about 50 volumes per year. Wearing cloth gloves, they pore over their subject, risking disease at every turn. "Many of the books are infected with a fungus that spreads to nearby books and to those handling the books," Cain says.

Housed on the lower level of the college's library, the Spurgeon collection contains 6,618 volumes. It includes many of Spurgeon's own works, as well as those of other noted Christian writers.

The library also contains collections of hymns by Isaac

Speaking volumes: Lancaster hopes to recruit more volunteer members from around the country to speed the rebinding process.

WILLIAM JEWELL COLLEGE

Watts, John Rippon, and Samuel, John, and Charles Wesley. Editions of the Bible include the Englishman's Greek New Testament, which provides the Greek text and interlinear literal translation, and The Prefaces to the Early Editions of Martin Luther's Bible, which illustrate the Reformer's principle of "justification through faith." William Jewell College secured the collection in 1906.

As preservationists gingerly thumb through the books, they search for Spurgeon's personal notes. "Any margin notes or underlined text give us insight into what Spurgeon found interesting," Cain says.

Some of the books date from the late 1400s; most are in desperate need of repair. Despite the daunting task before them, volunteers believe it must be done. "We're all busy people, but it's important to come together to achieve a common goal," Lancaster says. [CT]

In Brief

◆ The normally liberal American Civil Liberties Union and the Democrat-leaning AFL-CIO filed a friends-of-the-court brief September 29 in defense of the Christian Coalition, which is urging the dismissal of a 1996 Federal Election Commission (FEC) lawsuit (CT, Oct. 26, 1998, p. 82). The FEC suit contends that the Christian Coalition violated campaign laws by promoting the campaigns of Republican candidates. But the brief says the suit is a threat to free speech: "Citizens and labor organizations of every stripe will be severely restrained in their ability to speak out on policy issues of concern to their members and to the public."

◆ The Southern Baptist Convention (SBC) has started to gather information to see if there is enough interest to change the name of the nation's largest Protestant denomination. The SBC Executive Committee has two motions to consider from June's annual convention in Salt Lake City: to conduct a feasibility study on renaming the denomination or recommend a specific new name, the Baptist Convention of North America. Proponents of a switch say the Southern designation of the denomination's name hinders growth. Those who want to retain the status quo say a change would be too costly and could cause the denomination to lose its identity.

Gessner

◆ Meanwhile, the 1,350-member First Baptist Church of Raleigh, North Carolina, voted September 23 to end its 153-year relationship with the SBC. The 264-to-23 vote came three months after the denomination issued a statement that "a wife is to submit herself graciously to the servant leadership of her husband" (CT, July 13, 1998, p. 21). Members said the vote was in large part a rejection of what they called "authoritarian trend." First Baptist helped create the Baptist State Convention of North Carolina, and over the years many leaders at the SBC-affiliated Wake Forest and Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary have come from the church, which established 38 other Baptist congregations in the region.

◆ The Greek Orthodox Church of America sued Greek Orthodox American Leaders (GOAL) in September for using an "apparently misappropriated mailing list of the archdiocese." The litigation is in response to an eight-page mailing on "the crisis in the church" sent by GOAL in July to 122,000 households (CT, Sept. 7, 1998, p. 28). Spokesperson Dean Popp says "GOAL denies all wrongdoing" and plans "a vigorous defense."

◆ Lee Gessner is the new publisher of the Nashville-based Word Publishing, succeeding Charles "Kip" Jordon, who died in October 1997. Gessner has been at Word, a division of Thomas Nelson, since 1989. [CT]

Moon Struck

Church founder's ex-daughter-in-law pens grim tome about life on the inside.

Sun Myung Moon could take the Unification Church with him to his grave, says his former daughter-in-law. In her new book In the Shadow of the Moons (Little, Brown & Co.), Nansook Hong charges her 35-year-old ex-husband Hyo Jin with physical abuse, adultery, cocaine addiction, alcoholism, and neglect of their children. She accuses Sun Myung Moon of complicity in his son's behavior and charges that the 78-year-old founder of the New York-based Unification Church engaged in adultery himself, leading to an illegitimate child.

"Since his family is not anywhere near the ideal family, what does that say about Reverend Moon?" Hong asks. She fled the Moon "compound" in Irvington, New York, in 1995. Now living near Boston and divorced since last December, she has become the center of a recent media blitz about the Unification Church. Her book's damning profile of life at the top of the Moon empire has been defended by prominent ex-members Donna Collins and Un Jin Moon, Hyo Jin's sister. Collins's parents led the Canadian church, but she left six years ago at age 22. "Moon did not deliver on his promise of a utopia, either for his own family or the membership."

Unification leaders Tyler Hendricks and Chris Corcoran say the Hong book will not damage the faith of members. Corcoran, a public-relations spokesperson, says Hong's "full frontal attack" is "extreme." Hendricks, president of the U.S. church, says the book is "ideologically motivated" because of Hong's contacts with anticultists.

Both leaders acknowledge Hyo Jin's failures, although Corcoran says the son has a "brilliant philosophical and theological mind." Hendricks and Corcoran suggest Hong may have been partly to blame for the failed relationship. "Maybe she never figured out how to unlock his heart," Corcoran says.

Herbert Rosedale, president of the American Family Foundation, which monitors questionable religions, says, "That's the kind of nonsense that is used against every battered woman." He calls Hong "one of the most truthful people I have ever met" and believes the book will create havoc for Unificationists struggling to reconcile "the difference between their idealism and the actual way Reverend Moon lives." Moon preaches extremely rigid and demanding standards on tithing, church work, and especially sexual purity. In a 1975 sermon, Moon said "adultery is not forgivable at all."

PROVIDENTIAL ADULTERY? On the serious allegation about Moon's adultery, Hong claims that Moon and his wife, Hak Ja Han, told her of the affair and defended it as a "providential" act. Hong says the illegitimate child was raised by prominent Korean members who live in Virginia. Collins, daughter of the founders of the Unification Church in Britain, confirmed Hong's allegation. Corcoran calls the accusation of adultery "just a rumor" and says Moon "would not violate his own teaching." Hendricks adds that Moon is "absolutely sincere, righteous, and trustworthy. We exercise good faith and give him the benefit of the doubt."

However, two longtime Unificationists, who requested anonymity, told CT that rumors of the affair have circulated for years in the church and its verification would force many Unificationists to adopt a more realistic understanding of Moon's humanity.

In a phone interview from London, sociologist Eileen Barker, an expert on the Unification Church, says there is no reason to doubt Hong's account. She suggests the movement created the "providential explanation" only after rumors of the affair circulated among older Korean members.

Frank Flinn, adjunct professor of Religious Studies at Washington University in Saint Louis, contends that Moon "is not a model for his own sermons." He says that Moon's extramarital affair fits in with the earlier pattern of the 1950 where Moon "had spiritual, emotional and sexual relationships with more than one woman" in his quest for a new bride. Flinn, one of the earliest academics to study Unificationists, adds, "Moon should go back and read the temptation account in the Gospel of Matthew and pay attention to them."

Corcoran refers to Moon and his wife as "God's champions." He says Moon mu-

Nansook Hong

be viewed through the eyes of faith and be seen as a fully "biblical figure" who is "complicated" but "blameless." Corcoran says "nothing is going to defeat this man" and claims that the latest round of criticism has not hurt the church.

DAMAGE CONTROL: Hendricks notes that recent mass wedding ceremonies conducted by Moon in Washington and New York brought together hundreds of churches and representatives from many major religions. In addition, Moon has a long record of courting church leaders, including evangelicals, in an effort to achieve acceptance (CT, Feb. 9, 1998, p. 32). Moon's son Hyun Jin has recently been appointed vice president of the Family Federation for World Peace and Unification International, a move that clearly balances the negative image presented by his older brother Hyo Jin.

In a more direct assault on In the Shadow of the Moons, Unification leaders provided CT with documentation for the claim that some material in Hong's book is plagiarized from an earlier book by British scholar George Chryssides. The charge is directed toward Eileen McNamara, a Boston Globe reporter who ghostwrote the book. McNamara has denied the allegation.

THE MEDIUM IS THE MESSAGE? Meanwhile, Unificationists are directing their focus to two spirit mediums who are reportedly giving messages from Hak Ja Han's deceased mother and from Sang Hun Lee, a Unification scholar who died last year. Lee even provides a letter purportedly from Jesus to the "True Parents" (Sun Myung Moon and Hak Ja Han) in which the Son of God thanks them for this new bride in heaven and also expresses regret that Christians are still not trusting in Moon.

Hong has changed her beliefs since leaving the Moon family. "I believe in God and I also believe that Jesus is the Messiah," she told CT.

Barker predicts that Hong's book will have its major impact on members who are wavering in their faith and with academics who will now be more skeptical about participation in Moon's various programs. "Most Unificationists have been aware for quite a long time that their church is not that special." Whether that loss of idealism extends to the Korean "messiah" himself will determine the future of the movement.

By James A. Beverley in New York.

Who better than Jesus to share the Gospel?

Find out how God has used the JESUS film to save 46 million worldwide, and is now using it to save America, one neighbor at a time.

There is no tool more powerful in any ministry than the Word of God.

There is no medium more powerful in our world today than film.

The JESUS video joins the power of both. It's the straight Gospel of Luke on film.

Some pictures are worth a thousand words. This one's worth 46 million personal commitments.

Over 46 million individuals worldwide have declared their commitments to Jesus Christ as a direct result of watching the JESUS movie. Right now, we're focused on reaching America's neighborhoods.

There are over 100 million homes in America to reach

Our goal is to get JESUS in every home. That means there are over 100 million reasons for you to say "Yes!" to help the rest of America see the most true-to-the-Word film about Jesus ever made.

Your FREE "JESUS Video Vision Kit" makes it easy for you to convince others to partner with you in continuing the awesome work God has begun with the JESUS Video Project in your local community.

Why is this film so powerful, and so important?

It's pure, it's precise, it's compelling, and it is a very well crafted film.

The JESUS film is the result of thousands of people working together towards one vision: Show the Word. A team of 500 Christian scholars and leaders worked together for five years to insure the film to be archaeologically, historically, and theologically accurate.

Millions of Americans have seen the JESUS video. Hundreds of thousands have professed their decisions for Christ as a result. Find out how you can help reach the rest in your neighborhood.

Witness the pure Gospel of Luke at work in the JESUS video

- Call or write now for your free JESUS Video Vision Kit.
- The JESUS Video Vision Kit includes a 12-minute video explanation of the simple and easy-to-use process that has proven to be incredibly effective in getting, showing and helping bring individuals to Christ with the JESUS video in your local community. It's yours for the asking. Will you ask?
- Make the call to the JESUS Video Project (a ministry of Campus Crusade for Christ). Then watch God use JESUS to make the Call to eternal life.

Pastors, Church Leaders: call now, toll-free, to 1-888-JESUS31 (537-8731) ext. #874

Or write to: the JESUS Video Project, Dept #874
(a ministry of) Campus Crusade for Christ,
24600 Arrowhead Springs Rd., San Bernardino, CA 92414

© 1998 Campus Crusade for Christ. All rights reserved.

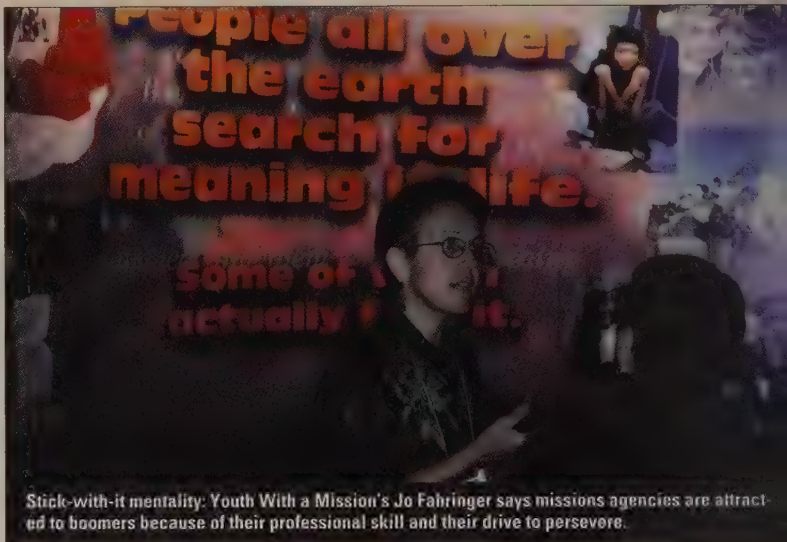

Located near Bozeman, Montana, Eagle Mountain Ranch offers a peaceful environment that strengthens the whole person—physically, mentally and spiritually. Residents and guests will delight in the Ranch's many activities and amenities, including the Grand Lodge. They'll thrill to breathtaking mountain views, and cherish the 9,000 acres of total privacy and serenity. This is a "once in a lifetime" ownership opportunity, so don't wait. Call now!

1 hour from Yellowstone. 1/2 hour from Bozeman Airport and major ski resorts.

A one-of-a-kind four-season ranch resort.

P.O. Box 10125, Bozeman, MT 59719-0125
Phone: 1-800-266-8104 • FAX: 1-800-266-8308
E-mail: info@eaglemountainranch.com
Website: www.eaglemountainranch.com

Stick-with-it mentality: Youth With a Mission's Jo Fahringer says missions agencies are attracted to boomers because of their professional skill and their drive to persevere.

Baby Boomers for Hire

Sell-out audience crowds first-time missions recruitment event.

Those considering a second career in missions may need to take a number. An overflow crowd packed the first missions conference of the Finishers Project, a movement aimed at sending baby boomers, now entering their fifties, out as missionaries (CT, Oct. 5, 1998, p. 72).

At some sessions of the October 1-3 Chicago gathering, nearly as many attendees sat on the floor, in the doorways, and out into the halls as were seated in the chairs. After conference planners realized they could not accommodate more than the 660 already registered for the Chicago conference, including 100 exhibitors, they turned away 300 people and 20 missions agencies.

The conference was so successful that the Navigators, an international discipleship ministry based in Colorado Springs, is considering hosting similar conferences every 18 months. The next one, tentatively planned for the spring of 2000, will be five to seven times the size of the Chicago conference.

LITTLE IMMEDIATE PAYOFF: However, representatives from some of the 30 mission agencies in attendance confirmed that few potential recruits seemed ready to go immediately. In addition, many participants were not retirees, but middle-aged workers weary of the rat race.

"Almost everyone here is looking toward the future," said Dave Hendry, director of Career Missionary Services for Operation Mobilization. "Most are two to five years away from retirement."

Another mission representative, Thomas Gibson, human resource director of Group Ministries for Campus Crusade for Christ, estimates that only a quarter of the participants will be ready to go soon.

Bill Mackie, 43, and his 46-year-old wife, Karen, of Valparaiso, Indiana, are not close to retiring. But they are dissatisfied with their existing careers—his at a library and hers at a restaurant.

"I've been a clerk at one library for 15 years," he said, "and it seems like all of the stuff I have, my private stuff, is practically an extension of work. I can't just be clinging to all this stuff anymore."

Instead, the Mackies are ready to quit and move into full-time ministry, preferably involving the puppet ministry they have done in their spare time for the past seven years.

"I think a lot of the excitement over Finishers is drawn from midlife crises," says Gospel Missionary Union's Kent Reinher. "These people are wondering, 'Is this all there is?' They've made it in the corporate world, and now they're worried about downsizing, and whether what

See FINISHERS PROJECT on page 3

Impacting The World... one person at a time.

...e expanding ripples from one drop
...er, one person eventually influences
...nds. Motivated ethical leaders spread
...andards of character and motivation
...-widening circles.

...roducing The Donald G. Soderquist
...for Business Leadership and ...preparing leaders through
...ive leadership training seminars
...ferences, undergraduate and
...ate degrees, and a resource
...for information and research.

Ethics

Integrity

Character

Leadership

Donald G. Soderquist
Vice Chairman & COO
Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.

...e Center is a recognition of
...Dr. Donald G. Soderquist.
...ample, dedication and integrity
...el the Center's purpose to this
...rsity and the greater worldwide
...business community.

The Donald G. Soderquist Center
for Business Leadership and Ethics

JOHN BROWN UNIVERSITY

Siloam Springs, Arkansas

For more information
call 1-877-JBU-INFO
or see us on the web at www.jbu.edu

Evangelicals Wary After Conservative Defeat

Many evangelical Christians have been caught off guard by the sweeping changes in national leadership as a result of the September 27 German election that saw Helmut Kohl, his conservative Christian Democratic Union (CDU), and allied parties lose power after 16 years. Along with the CDU's sister Bavarian party, the Christian Social Union, Kohl and company received only 35 percent of the vote, down 6 percent from the 1994 election.

The triumphant Social Democrats (SPD), with Gerhard Schroeder at the helm, gained 4.5 percentage points from 1994 results to win 41 percent of the national vote. The SPD immediately began building a coalition government with, for the first time, the environmental Green party. Together, those two parties achieved a majority in the new 669-seat federal Parliament.

The media-friendly Schroeder, 54, won over voters by pointing to high unemployment and suggesting that the 68-year-old Kohl had clung to power too long. With similar arguments, the Party of Democratic Socialism—the successor to the former East German Communist party—cleared the 5 percent hurdle necessary to be represented in Parliament.

In the wake of defeat, CDU leaders, one by one, dropped out to make way for a younger generation to modernize and reform the party that affirms a commitment to Christian values and a "Christian understanding of people and the knowledge of God's good creation."

The personal morality of the candidates did not play a role in the election. Schroeder, a Marxist-turned-moderate, is married for the fourth time.

EVANGELICAL RESPONSE: Many evangelicals, who represent only 3 percent of Germany's 81 million people, are concerned about an SPD-Green government. They say Christian values, especially the unique legal status of marriage

ROOTED
IN GRACE
FOR A LIFETIME
OF
MINISTRY

COVENANT
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

and the Francis Schaeffer Institute

1-800-264-8064

12330 Conway Rd. • St. Louis, MO 63141

Website: www.covenantseminary.edu

E-mail: admissions@covenantseminary.edu

THE BEAUTY OF CHRISTMAS

28 SEASONAL CLASSICS

The London Festival Orchestra & The Ambrosian

In the tradition of the highly successful Hymns, Triumphs and Majesty and Glory series, Billy Ray Hearn presents The Beauty of Christmas: 28 Seasonal Classics—a timeless collection of Christmas favorites. The carefully selected songs range from treasured Christmas Hymns such as "Silent Night" and "O Come Let Us Adore Him" to classic selections from such masterpieces as Handel's Messiah and The Nutcracker to memorable seasonal favorites like "I'll Be Home for Christmas" and "Winter Wonderland." Distinguished arranger Ronn Huff conducts London's esteemed orchestra musicians to create a sonic experience that invigorates these standards with new life.

AVAILABLE AT:

LifeWay
CHRISTIAN STORES

BAPTIST BOOK STORE
EVERYONE'S PLACE FOR CHRISTIAN VALUES

Democracy in action: Three nuns vote in Ursberg near Munich during the September 27 election.

could be challenged by increasingly liberal political winds blowing through the land of Luther.

"This will be the most unchristian Parliament in the postwar era," says Wolfgang Baake, director of the Conference of Evangelical Publicists. "There will be ethical implications."

Hartmut Steeb, general secretary of the German Evangelical Alliance, believes moral and ethical limits could be pushed back as more liberal politicians assume power. "The most absurd notions are becoming the norm," he argues in connection with a proposed SPD bill that would put homosexual and other "out-of-marriage" couples on equal legal and financial footing as traditional husband-wife unions.

Green Party legal spokesperson Volker Beck argues that "legal recognition and equal status of homosexual couples takes nothing away from families, but gives gays legal protection in a democratic society."

Steeb also is concerned about SPD-Green demands for dual nationality for foreigners who have long-term residency in Germany, particularly Turks. He notes that Muslim voters could one day outnumber evangelicals. There are more than 7 million foreigners in Germany.

"CHRISTIAN" ISSUES SIDELINED: Prior to the vote, the established large parties pledged more jobs while four small "Christian" parties alone spoke out on moral issues such as preventing introduction of the RU-486 abortion pill.

In a campaign urging a return to "ideals and values," the Alliance of Free Citizens, which came out ahead of other Christian groups with 121,220 votes, or 0.2 percent of the vote nationwide, called for the abolition of legal abortion and opposed any form of legalized homosexual marriage.

Party spokesperson Maria von Below says a new government may opt to replace religious instruction in schools with "ethics" training.

The pro-Israel Party of Bible-believing Christians (PBC) also deplored the "murder of children in the mother's body," which takes place in Germany at the rate of 1,000 a day, according to party leader Gerhard Heinzmann. Some 72,000 people, or 0.1 percent of the national vote, cast ballots for the PBC, which printed Bible verses along with slogans on its campaign posters.

Such issues, deemed important to conservative Christians, are far less pressing compared to unemployment and social justice, says SPD parliamentary group spokesperson Wolf-Michael Catenhusen. He told CT the new government does not intend to raise the issue of abortion and that both SPD and CDU members favor the RU-486 abortion pill.

LOW EVANGELICAL IMPACT: It came as no surprise to evangelicals that the small Christian parties combined received less than 1 percent of the votes cast. Demography and perhaps apathy have worked against new Christian political groupings. "Born-again Christians have for too long said we have nothing to do with politics," says the PBC's Heinzmann. He and other Christian party politicians say they have tried but failed to merge their parties because of deep theological differences.

"The political influence of the evangelical community is clearly very insignificant," Steeb says. To combat this, he says the Evangelical Alliance plans to establish a political lobby office by early next year. The Union of Protestant Free Churches intends to set up a similar office in Berlin.

By Richard Nyberg in Bonn.

GREAT GIFT IDEA! INSPIRATIONAL T-SHIRTS

KNOW GOD KNOW PEACE
(no God, no peace)

Style # 1 -
Know God, Know Peace
(no God, no peace)

give
GOD
WHAT IS RIGHT,
NOT WHAT IS LEFT.

Style # 2 -
Give God What Is Right,
Not What Is Left

Also available in the same style

Style # 3 -
Feed Your Faith and
Your Doubt Will Starve

100% cotton t-shirts available in sizes S-M-L-XL

CHRISTIANITEES.

T-SHIRTS

ORDER TOLL FREE

1-888-996-0808

MC, Visa and American Express are accepted

only $14.95 each plus

$4.95 Shipping and Handling

Allow at least 2 weeks for delivery

A series of 24, available individually or in a boxed set (ISBN 0-7363-0136-3)

New believers earnestly desire to know the Lord Jesus in a deeper way. They have a hunger for the Word of God and long to understand and fully experience the reality of salvation. In twenty-four simple yet profound messages, Watchman Nee guides new believers through some of the most pressing issues that they face, helping them to mature in the Lord and to be built up with other believers.

Topics in this series include:

Baptism Confession with the Mouth
Terminating the Past If Anyone Sins
Witnessing Separation from the World
Leading Men to Christ Consecration
Confession and Repentance Prayer
Reading the Bible Seeking God's Will
Forgiveness and Restoration Meeting
Rising Early The Discipline of God
Governmental Forgiveness Our Life
Deliverance Withstanding the Devil
Loving the Brothers The Priesthood
The Discipline of the Holy Spirit
The Body of Christ

Now Available
at Christian Bookstores from Living Stream Ministry
through Spring Arbor

Helping hands: Around 1,000 volunteers distribute 80,000 pounds of food to 8,000 Newark recipients in September at one of Convoy of Hope's Saturday events that brings churches together.

Food Ministry Seeks Bigger, Broader Impact

Convoy of Hope, a national food ministry to the urban poor, is expanding beyond one-day food giveaways to coordinate weeklong, citywide events that mobilize volunteers to shower inner-city neighborhoods with good works and the gospel.

The first event, called "We Care, L.A.," will unite churches and potentially thousands of volunteers on the last week of 1999 to blitz Los Angeles with acts of kindness. Christians will visit hospitals; clean up parks; paint buildings; comfort the lonely; and deliver free groceries, toys, or clothing.

"We want to be a catalyst," says David Donaldson, one of three brothers who helps lead ChurchCare America, the ministry that founded the Convoy of Hope. "God has already raised up an army of volunteers in Los Angeles. We Care, L.A. will integrate their efforts."

The foundation for We Care has been laid by Convoy of Hope, which has grown exponentially since conducting its first major food outreach in 1995. Convoy events take place on a Saturday, bringing together resources from the evangelical community and making them available to the poor at a gathering that is part food giveaway, part tent revival, and part carnival. The two consistent features of each event are a semitrailer full of food, bagged and distributed by volunteers, and a series of brief tent services conducted by a slate of local pastors. One of the ministry's goals is to "make the inner-city pastor a hero in his community," says Steve Donaldson, one of the brothers leading ChurchCare America, which has offices in Springfield, Missouri, and Sacramento, California. Follow-up events pull new Christians and potential churchgoers back to church on Sunday.

Convoy of Hope has distributed 4.5 million pounds of food to 311,000 people in most major American cities since its inception. Nearly 80,000 people have become Christians at makeshift altars where Convoys are held.

ROOTED IN COMPASSION: The ministry has its roots in tragedy. Before they were teenagers, brothers Hal, Steve, and David Donaldson experienced poverty after their father, Harold, a pastor and church planter, died in 1969 when a car driven by a drunk driver jumped the divider and hit his auto head-on. Their mother, Betty, disabled by the accident, raised them with the help of members from Bethel Temple Assembly of God in Walnut Creek, California. Hal is now editor of the denomination's magazine Pentecostal Evangel.

The Donaldsons have made dignity a pillar of the ministry, refusing simply to unload food off the back of a truck. At Convoy events, the poor are respected and honored guests. Volunteers serve hot dogs and soft drinks and distribute the grocery bags. While parents wait in line, children ride ponies and play in inflatable gym equipment.

Convoy of Hope has largely succeeded in bringing churches together across racial, economic, and denominational lines by using food and the basic gospel as centerpieces and by not addressing thornier doctrinal issues.

A BIGGER VISION: But Convoy's founders want to push the envelope of what suburban churches are willing to do in terms of serving the poor and performing community service. Recent Convoys have drawn on professional expertise within the Christian community to offer free haircuts, medical screening, dental consultation, legal counseling, and job training. The Donaldsons want to bring more of these workaday skills and services, plus compassion and long-term commitment, from affluent churches to the inner city.

"When Christians from suburban communities spend a day in a poor community, they discover that these are great people to know," Steve Donaldson says. "People imagine the poor as homeless men on drugs who won't work. These outreaches dispel those perceptions."

Can the principles that have succeeded on a local level work on a much larger scale? An early supporter of We Care, L.A. and one of the leading churches in Southern California is Templo Calvario Assembly of God in Orange County, a bilingual church of 3,800. The congregation held a Convoy outreach on Easter weekend, which has spawned several "mini Convoys," says pastor Daniel de Leon. Those events, made possible by the training his people received at the larger event (but planned without Convoy of Hope's direct input), have drawn thousands, bringing hundreds to faith in Christ and earning applause from city leaders.

De Leon's experience has convinced him there will be enough neutral ground to accommodate any evangelical church that wants to participate in We Care, L.A. "We had 40 churches of all ethnicities involved in the big Convoy event," de Leon says. "Not too many things can unite churches. Even crusades are difficult. But everybody cares for the poor. The pastors in this area want to keep working together."

We Care, L.A. is a natural extension of Convoy's ministry, de Leon says. People in his congregation plan to serve as coordinators, ushers, security guards, food distributors, and children's ministers during the outreach. "We Care is what the Convoy has shown they can do, but a lot bigger," de Leon says. "It's going to leave an impact on Los Angeles I hope will be lasting."

By Joel Kilpatrick in Springfield, Missouri.

"My Father's World"

Christian Outdoor Videos

Ideal for Sunday School, Home Schooling and Men's Outreach Programs

Wildlife Videos / Teaching Videos / Outreach Videos / Hunting Videos

An Excellent Gift Idea for Witnessing - Available Only Through Mail Order

Send Stamped Self Addressed Envelope for Free Brochure

Or Visit Our Web Site

"My Father's World" • Box 246 • Geneseo, NY 14454

www.myfathersworld.com

Browse
the Net

Shop
the Store

Books, Bibles,
Music and more!

By Faith Alone
Martin Luther

A yearly devotional collection of writings by Martin Luther, freshly translated from 16th century German into contemporary English.

Reg. Price $17.99

only $12.59 at

www.FirstNetChristian.com

FIRSTNET
CHRISTIAN

PENTECOSTALS

World Growth at 19 Million a Year

About 25 percent of the world's Christians are Pentecostal or charismatic, historian Vinson Synan, dean of the Regent University School of Divinity in Virginia Beach, told the triennial Pentecostal World Conference (PWC) in Seoul in September. An estimated 450 million are charismatic or Pentecostal.

"The continuing explosive growth of Pentecostalism indicates that the renewal will continue with increasing strength into the next millennium," Synan declared. "Not only is growth occurring in eye-catching megachurches, but in tens of thousands of small local churches that are planted each year in big cities and remote villages."

PWC chair Ray H. Hughes says two-thirds of Pentecostals live in Asia, Africa, and Latin America. "PWC offers Pentecostals an opportunity to be a unifying force in a divided world," Hughes said.

Missions expert David Barrett told CT that the Pentecostal and charismatic church is growing by 19 million per year.

On September 25 in Olympic Stadium, 100,000 Pentecostals from more than 60 countries gathered at a closing service sponsored by the Assemblies of God, the Church of God, and the Foursquare Gospel church in South Korea.

Keynote speaker, David Yonggi Cho (left), who pastors the world's largest church in South Korea, addresses PWC.

Church banners decorated the stadium, and hundreds of balloons formed a cross.

South Korean Prime Minister Kim Jong-pil expressed his government's gratefulness for the prayers and contributions of the Pentecostal movement. Christianity has surpassed Buddhism as the major faith in South Korea.

During daily sessions, prayers were offered for the economic situation in Asia, peace in the Middle East and Albania, and on behalf of the persecuted church.

The next world conference will be held in Los Angeles in 2001 and will be chaired by Thomas E. Trask, general superintendent of the Assemblies of God, based in Springfield, Missouri. The first such international gathering took place in 1947 in Zurich. [CT]

EVANGELISM

Latin Americans Target Continent

In a flurry of activity, Latin American Christian media and church leaders are linking to blanket their continent with the gospel by the century's end.

Dubbed "the Thousand-Day Plan," the campaign involves mobilizing Christians to pray and fast, saturating the airwaves with programs and commercials pointing audiences to Christ, conducting evangelistic campaigns, and training disciples. The plan blends mass media with personal contact.

In September, media and church leaders from across Spanish- and Portuguese-speaking North and South America convened in San José, Costa Rica, for COICOM '98, the confederation of Iberoamerican communicators. COICOM president Raul Justiniano, a Bolivian broadcaster and also the Thousand-Day Plan president, challenged coworkers to combine holy lives, evangelistic passion, and technological expertise to finish the task.

Justiniano says Iberoamerica has 600 million people in 300 cities in 26 nations. Latin America has 600 Christian-formatted radio stations, about 100 television stations, nearly 15 satellite radio networks, at least one satellite television network, 500 publications, and nearly 5,000 independent producers. COICOM believes the stage has been set for massive outreach (CT, Nov. 17, 1997, p. 82). Efforts to date have included a "World Cup" edition of the Jesus film featuring testimonies of Brazilian soccer players, prolonged citywide evangelism in Monterrey, Mexico, and stadium rallies in the Dominican Republic.

*By Rusty Wright
in San José, Costa Rica.*

INDIA

Gang Rape of Nuns Stirs Outrage

India's Christian leaders are putting pressure on the government to stop a tide of violence against Christian workers in the wake of the September 23 gang rape of four nuns in Madhya Pradesh State.

The assault occurred after 15 to 20 men dragged four Catholic nuns—all under age 35 and from Tamil Nadu—from their convent. One of the men earlier had feigned sickness in an unsuccessful effort to coax the nuns outside. The nuns operate a medical clinic as part of the work of their order, the Foreign Missionary Sisters.

Suspecting an attack, they barricaded themselves in the convent's chapel, but later opened the doors when the men assured them there would be no violence. The gang rapes then occurred in a nearby field.

Police arrested five people the following day. Christian leaders are pressing the government to protect religious minorities, noting a rise in anti-Christian attacks. Archbishop Alan de Lastic wrote a strongly worded letter to the nation's president warning that the Christian community is "feeling insecure and disturbed at this increasing violence against them." Protestants make up a third of India's 25 million Christians.

The attack came two weeks after the first National Consultation on Reconciliation, Religious Liberty, and Social Justice convened by the Evangelical Fellowship of India. More than 150 Protestant church leaders warned, "If we keep sowing the wind of hatred we shall reap the whirlwind of violence and destruction. The hatred, often spread by religious leaders, has already caused incalculable suffering to the families of the victims of riots, terrorism and religious persecution."

By Alex Buchan, Compass Direc-

Graham Unveils Evangelism Conference

The world's most famous twentieth-century evangelist has announced plans for a massive conference of preaching evangelists for the new millennium.

"In the midst of the rapid change in almost every phase of our lives, the task of worldwide evangelization remains a priority of the body of Christ," Billy Graham declared in announcing the event, to be held July 29 through August 6 in the year 2000 in Amsterdam. "Decay in the societies of the world, consternation in the governments, and a deep heart-cry for revival throughout the church of our Lord Jesus Christ all point to the need of the world for our Savior."

More than 10,000 participants, three-fourths of them itinerant evangelists, from 185 countries and territories, are expected at Amsterdam 2000. Theologians, strategists, and church leaders also will attend the conference, which will include daily prayer, worship, and seminars. John Corts, president of the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association (BGEA), will be general director of the conference.

"Though the message of the gospel and the need for that message will not change in the next century, the methods and delivery systems will be different," Corts says. "We can neither count on past victories nor look ahead to anticipate how evangelism will be done in the future."

Graham has been involved in similar conferences in the past, including the Berlin Congress in 1966, sponsored by CHRISTIANITY TODAY. The BGEA sponsored the Lausanne Congress on World Evangelization in 1974 in Switzerland. The BGEA also held international evangelism conferences in Amsterdam in 1983 and 1986. CT

In Brief

◆ Inclement weather and dense jungles have hampered search efforts for a Cessna airplane carrying a World Gospel Mission (WGM) missionary family in Bolivia. The plane disappeared September 28 en route from an Andean mountain village to Santa Cruz. Crews are combing the jungles around the Yapacani River in central Bolivia by land and air for signs of the plane. Passengers included John, 27, and Masako Trosen, 33, of Wadena, Minnesota; their children, Isaiah, 3, and Sophia, 8 months; Juan Carlos Zuazo, a Bolivian pastor; and Johny Mamani, a 25-year-old seminary student, and his wife, Lucy, 19. The Trosens were in their first year with the Marion, Indiana-based WGM.

◆ A Turkish court in September sentenced Mehmet Kurt, a member of the outlawed Islamic terrorist group VASAD, to life in prison for a September 1997 bombing of a Turkish Good News Publishing Company bookstand. A four-year-old boy died in the blast in Gaziantep, Turkey, and 25 people sustained injuries (CT, Nov. 17, 1997, p. 76). Seven other VASAD members received prison terms ranging from 45 months to 18 years for the attack. CT

Missing: The Trosens.

Church treasure: Saint Giorgis in Lalibela is one of 11 Ethiopian churches hand-carved from a single piece of solid rock during the twelfth century.

RELIGION NEWS SERVICE

Centuries-old Treasures Pilfered

Hand-carved from solid rock, the 11 churches of an impoverished Ethiopian mountain village are a wonder of the medieval ingenuity that created them. And their abundant treasures reflect the religious devotion that maintained the churches for centuries.

They also are the scene of a sickening betrayal that has left many wondering if there is something rotten at the heart of one of Christendom's oldest churches. An Ethiopian Orthodox priest, whose forefathers have preserved the Lalibela churches (see p. 87) since they were carved from the mountainside in the twelfth century, last year stole one of the church's most priceless sacred objects: a 15-pound solid gold cross that had been kept safely in Lalibela for more than 700 years. The priest and a market trader to whom he gave the cross are in jail, but no trace of the priceless cross has been found.

Home to Christianity since A.D. 34, Ethiopia has some of the most historically valuable Judeo-Christian relics, manuscripts, and art in the world. With increasing frequency, such priceless artifacts are disappearing from Ethiopian monasteries and churches. Concerned the nation is losing its heritage, the Ministry of Culture has proposed a plan to move the artifacts out of churches and monasteries into secure museums. Patriarch Abune Paulos, head of the Ethiopian Orthodox Church, agrees in principle but wants to build secure display places in each church and monastery. For now, neither side has enough money to do either, and parish priests and monks strongly resist anything denying them access to treasures they have guarded for centuries.

Patriarch Paulos says the isolation and simple life of the clergy has been warped by easy money bestowed by tourists. The crisis is not confined to remote churches and monasteries. In Axum, the most important cultural city in Ethiopia, a monk was dismissed after allegations that he stole items from the temple. A committee of the church synod was appointed to investigate allegations against the patriarch himself.

"The committee has expelled large numbers of appointees of the patriarch, who were considered a source of the problem," says Tadesse Tamrat, a religious historian at Addis Ababa University.

By Ross Herbert in Lalibela; Religion News Service.

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

Web Site Directory

Calvin College (Alumni)
www.calvin.edu
Campus Crusade New Life Publications
www.newlifepubs.com
Church Chair Industries, Inc.
www.churchchair.com
Gordon Conwell Theo. Seminary
www.gcts.edu
Trinity International University
www.tiu.edu

To list your Web address in a Christianity Today Web directory
phone (630) 260-6202 x239.

Check Us Out Online!

America Online keyword: CO
www.christianity.net

SOMETHING FOR EVERYONE

Chat • Message Boards • Music
Bible & Reference • Shopping
Magazines • Fun & Games
Ministries • Devotionals

- Women to Women
 - Daily Bible Study Chats
 - Today's Christian Woman, Marriage Partnership, Virtue
- Brother to Brother
 - Weekly Men's Bible Study
 - Promise Keeper's Links
- Student Hangout
 - Jr. High, High School Chats
 - Campus Life Cafe
- Kids of the Kingdom
 - AOL Kids Only Access
 - Monitored Chats & Message Boards
- Singles Connection
 - Male & Female Personals
 - Chat Rooms Categorized by Age
- Church Leaders Network
 - Christianity Today, Leadership & Your Church
 - Sermon Illustrations & Preaching Resources
- Christianity on the 'Net
 - Christian Net Search & Church Locator
 - Best Christian Site Reviews

Get unlimited access to America Online
and the Internet for $21.95 a month.
Call 1-800-633-8888 for a free start-up kit.

To advertise on Christianity Online call
(630) 260-6202 x 239

Vested interest: At a packed South Christian High School in July, Jim and Bertha VanderKodde listen to a proposal to rescue IRM investors from huge losses.

Real Estate Investment Failure Hurts Churchgoers

A year ago, the IRM Corporation sent letters to more than 1,500 investors, including Jim and Bertha VanderKodde of Grand Rapids, Michigan. The letter announced that IRM—Investment Research Management—could make no further payments.

"When we received that letter," Jim VanderKodde told CT, "we said, 'the Lord gave it to us, and the Lord took it away.' We never lost a wink of sleep over it."

For the VanderKoddes, the investment totaled $10,000, a relatively small part of their savings after he finished a 28-year career as a police officer. But for many other investors in IRM's $400 million real estate operation, sleep did not come so easily. Many are retirees who had placed most or all of their life savings in the private company.

IRM founder John O. Van Hofwegen and most of its investors are members of the Grand Rapids-based Christian Reformed Church (CRC). The CRC is one of the principal heirs of the Dutch Calvinist tradition in North America. The company's star salesperson, Jay Merron, formerly taught at the CRC-related South Christian High School in Grand Rapids. Besides the hundreds of individual investors, some of the largest CRC-related agencies, Home Missions Board, Calvin College, and the Back to God Hour radio ministry, invested a total of $11.4 million in IRM.

The Barnabas Foundation, another major investor, while independent of the denomination, has many CRC clients. Potential losses for all parties could top $130 million.

CALIFORNIA CONNECTION: IRM began in the late 1960s as a limited partnership real estate management venture and eventually acquired 59 properties, mostly apartment complexes in northern and central California. For more than 20 years, IRM paid investors dividends of 9 to 11 percent.

In the late 1980s, however, two factors started IRM on a troubled path. First, Congress changed the tax laws on limited partnerships, making them less attractive as investments. Second, and more ominous, the bottom fell out of California's once-booming real estate market.

What happened next is a matter of dispute. IRM "defrauded investors of over $100 million," asserts Ken Horjus, CRC director of finance, in a court affidavit. A lawsuit filed in July by a group of CRC agencies and individual investors charged IRM with running a "Ponzi-like" operation that "created and perpetuated a real estate investment pyramid scheme."

Not so, insists John Barnard, a lawyer specializing in real estate turnaround, hired by IRM management last winter. "There's no Ponzi or pyramid scheme here," he told CT, just a succession of business reverses resulting from a combination of a real estate recession, high interest rates, and financing problems. He notes that the Van Hofwegen family had most of its own capital at risk in the company, too, which is not the case with intentionally fraudulent schemes.

BLAME TO GO AROUND: Despite such reassurances, several other lawsuits followed, and in August IRM filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection. Regulatory agencies in both California and Michigan have opened investigations into IRM's activities.

Barnard still hopes that a buyer will be found for the IRM properties, and that a sale will recover much or all of the capital, especially of the smaller investors.

Jim VanderKodde is not as optimistic. "It's very unlikely we'll ever get our money back," he says. VanderKodde does not see IRM management as crooked. "They just messed up and lost the money. I hold no bitterness toward anybody."

Others are not so serene. Many think IRM might have been able to avoid bankruptcy if the CRC agencies had not insisted on court action. They became angry upon learning that the church agencies and the Barnabas Foundation had been reducing investments in IRM before October 1997. CRC officials did not help their cause when they reacted to the IRM letter by clamping a "no comment" order on all staff, including the denominational magazine, The Banner. The order was lifted after protests and the posting of leaked internal denominational documents on the Internet. The denominational synod in June extended its session for a day to hear from CRC staff about the IRM situation.

The Barnabas Foundation, a financial advisory company in Orland Park, Illinois, with 168 client groups—most of them CRC-related—also has been criticized. But executive director David Vander Ploeg says that he and others simply carried out "due diligence" they owed their clients. Vander Ploeg says the foundation uncovered IRM's financial disarray during routine audits in the early 1990s, and the reduction of investments was simply responsible fiduciary management.

SETTLEMENT SCUTTLED: The sense of outrage among many small investors escalated when Christian Reformed Church officials opposed a Grand Rapids businessperson's offer earlier this year to buy IRM's obligations for five cents on the dollar. CRC officials say they felt they could find a better offer. But hundreds of investors who crowded into meetings in Michigan and California during the summer tied up denominational phone and fax lines to pro-

Religion & ETHICS

NEWS WEEKLY

*Join Bob Abernethy
each week for
in-depth coverage
of the top religion
and ethics stories
in the news.*

Only on Public Television.

Check local listings.

We'd like to help you start a dialogue about religion and ethics in your community.

Call or write for our free

- Viewer's Guide
- Discussion Leader's Brochure
- "Talking About Religion & Ethics"
Guide for Teachers

Phone: (212) 560-2070

Fax: (212) 560-6948

E-mail: re@wnet.org

Web: www.wnet.org/religion

Funded by Lilly Endowment Inc.

A presentation of Thirteen/WNET in New York.

Thirteen · wnet

test plans for court action and to demand acceptance of the deal.

Christian Reformed Church officials also came under fire for ignoring biblical guidelines that Christians avoid suing one another. In a July letter to investors, CRC's director of ministries, Peter Borgdorff, responded, "This is a tragic misuse of Scripture. Of course it is true that we should not seek to use the law in an adversarial way. There is, however, no biblical admonition prohibiting one from seeking the rule of law and the protection of the courts when such rule and protection are sorely needed."

In August, the court approved an 11-member creditors' committee to consider new offers for IRM. Its chair is Grand Rapids businessman Jay Mol, who says he is the largest individual investor in IRM. Since his appointment, Mol has been fielding anguished calls from hard-pressed individual investors and trying to decide which are merely facing "hardship," versus those who are in "dire hardship."

Meanwhile, VanderKodde is not worrying much about the fate of IRM. "I do a lot of volunteer work in hurricane and tornado relief," he says. "I'll keep doing that as long as the Lord lets me."

By Chuck Fager.

Congress Approves Modified Religious Persecution Bill

The Senate ended months of political wrangling October 9 by unanimously passing a no-tolerance policy for religious persecution worldwide. The bill, which the House passed by a unanimous voice vote the following day, awaits White House approval. President Clinton opposed an earlier version, but he is expected to sign this one.

The International Religious Freedom Act (IRFA), cosponsored by Sen. Don Nickles (R.-Okla.) and Sen. Joseph Lieberman (D.-Conn.), requires the President to take action against nations that engage in "systematic, ongoing, and egregious" acts of religious persecution. A 1997 State Department report cites 77 countries—including China, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia, and Sudan—that oppress religious freedom. Lieberman says "millions of lives" will be saved because of the legislation.

The 98-to-0 Senate vote came after tense negotiations with economic conservatives who originally opposed the measure (CT, Oct. 5, 1998, p. 26). An earlier version of the bill required mandatory economic sanctions, which free-trade Republicans argued would hurt U.S. business abroad. Sen. Chuck Hagel (R.-Neb.), an opponent of the earlier version, told CT that terminating relationships with allies that have records of religious persecution, such as Saudi Arabia and Turkey, would not be in the country's best interest.

SELECTIVE SANCTIONS? But Stephen Rickard, legislative director for Amnesty International, says he believes most Americans want a values-based foreign policy. "They don't want [human rights] sold out for trade opportunities."

The revised bill allows the President to select from a broad menu of 15 options, including public condemnation, withdrawal of aid, and a variety of economic sanctions.

Some evangelicals fear punitive action could hurt the religiously oppressed b

HISTORY that Comes Alive!

Each vibrant issue highlights a particular figure or theme from the past with colorful illustrations, maps, and charts that make each copy a collector's treasury.

Subscribe now at no risk and take part in an exciting exploration of the people and events that have shaped a faith that continues to shape the world.

RISK-FREE TRIAL OFFER

- ☐ YES! Please send me the current issue of Christian History and an invoice for $19.95. After reading the issue, I'll decide whether or not I want to keep Christian History coming. If I do, I'll return your invoice with my payment and receive three more quarterly issues, a full year in all. If not, I'll write "cancel" across the invoice and return it. I'll keep the first issue regardless.

E8LD41

Name _____
Address _____
City, State, Zip _____
E-Mail _____

Clip and mail coupon to:
CHRISTIAN HISTORY
Subscription Services
P.O. Box 37060
Boone, IA 50037-0060

Outside U.S. add $6/year for delivery (U.S. funds only). Please allow 4-6 weeks for delivery.

Risk-Free Trial Issue

Leadership

Whether you're a pastor or a layperson, Leadership knows your unique needs and offers biblical insight and practical advice on issues important to you.

- ☐ YES! Please send me the current issue of Leadership. After reading this issue, I'll decide whether or not I want to keep Leadership coming. If I do, I'll return your invoice of $22 with my payment and receive three more quarterly issues, a full year in all. If not, I'll write "cancel" across the invoice and return it. I'll keep the first issue regardless.

E8LD42

Name _____
Address _____
City _____
State _____ / Zip _____
E-mail _____

Outside U.S. add $6/year for delivery (U.S. funds only). Please allow 4-6 weeks for delivery.

Clip and mail coupon to:
Leadership • Subscription Services •
P.O. Box 37060 • Boone, IA • 50037-0060

Order your trial subscription today!

angering their governments. Mark Alrecht, with World Evangelical Fellowship's Religious Liberty Commission, supports the bill, but says, "I get nervous when the U.S. starts throwing its weight around and determining policy for the church overseas."

Hudson Institute's Michael Horowitz, an ardent supporter of religious liberty, told CT he had been more concerned with the previous bill's lack of an independent fact-finding commission than economic sanctions. Now, he says, politicians cannot ignore the issue.

POST, PANEL CREATED: The IRFA creates an ambassador-at-large in the State Department and a bipartisan ten-member commission, which will produce a country-by-country annual report on religious persecution.

Based on the report, the President is required to announce to Congress the action he will take against violators. But the bill allows the President to waive action if "important national interest" is threatened.

Evangelicals provided leadership to the campaign against religious persecution, working together with a diverse range of religious groups, including Catholic and Jewish congregations.

By Christine J. Gardner.

Real Ministry for REAL LIFE

Dr. John J. Davis, Professor of Old Testament

Grace Theological Seminary offers M.A. and M.Div. programs in four tracks:
*Pastoral Ministries • Intercultural Ministries
Counseling • Youth and Family Ministries*

D.Min. programs are offered in two tracks:
Pastoral Ministries • Intercultural Ministries

Call today for more information.

1-800-54-GRACE

200 Seminary Drive • Winona Lake, IN 46590
www.grace.edu • gtsrec@grace.edu

At Grace Theological Seminary, we place a high value on ministry. Whether you're planning to pastor a local church, counsel troubled families, minister to inner-city youth, or plant churches in the Middle East, we have the programs and the faculty to help make your calling a reality.

Dr. Ronald T. Clutter's History of Doctrine Class

GRACE

THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

MORE FUEL FOR THE FIRE IN YOUR HEART.

Rutherford Institute founder John Whitehead believes a full-dimensional Christianity inevitably impacts culture. Here is motivation for you and your church to reclaim the Christian influence in society as the 21st century draws near.

A powerful, never-before published commentary on Romans 1-8 by the most influential Christian thinker of this century, the late Francis Schaeffer. Fresh insight and an arresting perspective on our own times.

Is the evangelical church in trouble? These essays from today's most knowledgeable voices take the pulse of evangelicalism — and show you how to promote the kind of change that leads to an uncompromised body of believers.

Encounter God's ultimate purpose in the world in John Piper's passionate exploration of Jonathan Edwards' incomparable classic, "The End for Which God Created the World." It's more powerful and relevant than ever.

CROSSWAY BOOKS

Making A Difference In People's Lives For Christ.

Available at a Christian bookstore near you.

Rain Forest Churches Brave Uncertain Future

The Mission Aviation Fellowship single-engine Cessna 185 flies low over the expansive rain forest in Indonesia's East Kalimantan Province on Borneo, the world's third-largest island. Pilot Dar Bone points out the wisps of smoke marking brush-clearing fires set by village farmers and then lands the Cessna on a tiny grassy plot. Because of drought, crops are meager and money from the sale of rice is scarce.

The cargo hold of the small plane carries supplies ordered by the Dayak villagers living in isolated settlements. With fuel costs rising, it is questionable whether these supply flights can continue. The Asian financial crisis has rippled into the remotest corners of Indonesia, a nation of 3,000 islands and 207 million people.

Despite the difficulties, even the smallest village supports a church. Evangelization of the 21 Dayak tribes began nearly a century ago. Formerly animistic head-hunters and cannibals making intervillage raids, the Dayak now live peaceably, and 95 percent of those in East Kalimantan are Christian.

SURVIVAL AND REVIVAL: In spite of the success of evangelism among the Dayak, economic hardship has threatened the survival of their villages. At the same time, church leaders are engaged in a second battleground for spiritual revival within their churches.

Dayak congregations are not immune from modern pressures. Church leaders say it is difficult to keep villagers focused on their faith, and pastors are not always accorded the respect they once received.

Ngau Ifung lives with his family in the small town of Long Nawang in the deep green thicket of rain forest along the Kayan River. Although a layperson, Ifung, a Christian since 1963, serves as a district superintendent to more than 15 village churches.

Mission outpost: A pastor and his family minister in Long Lebusan, Kalimantan, in Indonesia.

"My parents were animists, but they thought that if I became a Christian I would be able to go to school," Ifung says. He was pressed into service almost immediately as an overseer of the church. "In those days, a preacher was like an angel. Every word that a preacher said was ac-

Apply Advanced Technology to Biblical Theology!

Design an expandable electronic library from hundreds of titles.

Including the New International

Dictionary of Old Testament

Theology and Exegesis.

The Scholar's Library features 58 biblical resources and the powerful Logos Library System, providing seamless integration with over 600 additional electronic titles!

Save $300! Retail price is $599.95.
Our price is $299.95.

Word Biblical Commentary

Get instant access to the world's most widely acclaimed biblical commentary series! Features fifty-two volumes of commentary equipped with leading-edge Logos Library System technology.

Save $850! Retail price is $1499.99.
Our price is $649.95.

Or purchase the Top Five Volumes Edition and unlock additional Word Commentaries at any time!

Save $85.00! Retail price is $149.99.
Our price is only $64.95.

Save $195 on Hermeneutika's BibleWorks!
Retail price is $395. Our price is only $199.95*.

*Includes Free Shipping and The LLS Starter Collection (a $70 value!)

We also have products from Ages, Baker, Nelson, Zondervan and many more. For additional products and prices, or to place an order call 1-800-807-4803.

Rejoice Christian Software

1322 S. Pine Ridge Circle • Sanford, FL 32773 • <http://rejoicesoftware.com> • e-mail- RejoiceCS@aol.com

SEMINARS IN CHRISTIAN SCHOLARSHIP

Susan M. Felch, Director

June 21 - July 30, 1999

Realism vs. Antirealism

William P. Alston

Professor of Philosophy Emeritus, Syracuse University

God and Evil

Peter van Inwagen

John Cardinal O'Hara Professor of Philosophy, University of Notre Dame

The Faculty Summer Seminar program seeks to promote quality scholarship that reflects a Christian perspective by encouraging Christian scholars to pursue current research in their disciplines. Applicants must hold an earned Ph.D.

Made possible with funds from The Pew Charitable Trusts.

For more information or to apply contact:

Anna Mae Bush, Coordinator

Seminars in Christian Scholarship

Calvin College, 3201 Burton Street SE, Grand Rapids MI 49546

e-mail: abush@calvin.edu • fax: 616-957-6682

phone: 616-957-8558 • website: www.calvin.edu/fss

Deadline for applications is Feb. 1, 1999.

MICHAEL CARD

THESE SONGS REPRESENT A WORSHIPFUL CONVER-SATION OVER TIME.
MELODIES FROM THE ANCIENT CELTS, WORDS FROM THE LATTER PERIOD OF REVIVAL AND HOW
OUR OWN VERSION,
HOPEFULLY FULL OF THE SAME PASSION FOR THE SAME LORD WHO IS EVER ANCIENT, EVER NEW.

MICHAEL CARD

STAR KINDLER

celtic conversation across time

www.michaelcard.com

cepted. But now it is not the case."

Today, the educational level of the typical Dayak pastor and church members is almost equal. Ifung thinks that Dayak Christians have become accustomed to being instructed from outsiders and have difficulty trusting one of their own.

YOUTH FLIGHT: Dayak Christian parents watch as their children leave their village homes for postgrammar-school education or for work opportunities in cities. This conflicts with a tribal culture's main means of perpetuating itself: through the support system of the tribal extended family. Some young people lose their way and their faith. To help those facing an unfamiliar world, Ifung writes letters to pastors of churches that young people attend in cities. He also leads weekly prayer meetings on behalf of those who have left.

Some Dayak young people aspire to Christian service. In 1978, the Christian and Missionary Alliance and Dayak leaders helped launch the Theological School of Tenggarong, along Kalimantan's northeast coast. The school has a good reputation, and the government waives property taxes. Students and teachers gave money to support a building program. A new cafeteria and boys' dormitory have recently been completed with financial gifts and volunteer help.

Training converts: Evangelist Yohanis Sakai, with his wife, Betlem, started a Bible school for evangelists in Samarinda.

EXTERNAL PRESSURES: As a pilot for MAF, Bone knows that churches in the Kalimantan rain forest are subject to intense outside pressures. "There is nothing we can do to stop the process of globalization, because that is already in God's plan," Bone says.

Although the economic and political situation has caused strife, Dayak church leaders pray for revival within their churches and countrywide. Ifung, as he oversees village churches, urgently prays for "inspiration from the Holy Spirit" in facing the challenges posed by the global economy, which is opening up Kalimantan villages to economic development as never before.

"One of the things we struggle with in being here is how to help people with their [economic] needs," says missionary Eric Maxey, a teacher at the Theological School of Tenggarong. "Just giving money creates dependency. So we asked God to show us ways that we could help them. And God opened up a marvelous handicraft business."

Dayak leaders have trained 20 women to create beaded Christmas bells to be sold in North America through Bright

Study in Israel

it can make all the difference!

- MASTER OF ARTS DEGREES • GRADUATE OR UNDERGRADUATE SEMESTER ABROAD
- SHORT-TERM ACADEMIC STUDY TOURS • CREDITS TRANSFERABLE

Jerusalem University College

an evangelical Christian institution of higher learning celebrating 40 years in Jerusalem

formerly: INSTITUTE OF HOLY LAND STUDIES

For literature and free video: 1-800-891-9408
or (815)229-5900 in North America, all others 972-2-671-8628

Hope International of Wauconda, Illinois 847-526-5566).

Loly Dungau, the principal at Tenggarong, says his tribe has reserved the best of their art, dance, and beadwork. In turn, proceeds from selling beadwork may support a family, plus pay school costs.

Kelso Uleh, the student body president at Tenggarong, traces his commitment to Christian ministry to a time when he was nearly killed working for a logging company in Kalimantan. "I got stuck between a boat and a log on the river. The rapids were washing over me," Uleh relates. "I was released and the boat went into the rapids and was destroyed." Soon after that Uleh became a Christian. Now, at 31, he studies theology and is a student leader. The income his wife generates from beadwork allows the family to be self-sufficient and to pay for his education.

"It's a good time to pray for Indonesia" Dungau says. "When the institutions we think are secure collapse under us, many people start to question eternal things. We're praying that in this time of suffering, we'll see God use it for his glory."

By Kathi Henry in Kalimantan, Indonesia.

Generations 99

A CONFERENCE FOR SENIORS

Phoenix, Arizona
February 6, 1999

Orlando, Florida
February 27, 1999

Washington, DC
March 13, 1999

St. Louis, Missouri
March 27, 1999

Join us for this intense conference featuring some of America's most sought after speakers. This year alone, thousands will experience Generations 99. You will find value and esteem from our inspiring speakers. This special conference will lift your spirits.

This is one conference you will not want to miss...
BECAUSE LIFE IS JUST BEGINNING!

Ari Linkletter

Janette Oke

Paul Meyer, M.D.

Barbara Johnson

Mike Abeln

COST:

Ticket Price - $33/Person
At The Door - $43/Person

To Order Tickets Or
For More Information

Phone: (800) 851-9229

Fax: (314) 521-6380

www.cwba.net

Sponsored by:

THERE ARE MANY DOORS TO THE MINISTRY

FULLER CAN HELP YOU
OPEN YOURS

When Dave and Kim Zovak decided to pursue their Master of Divinity degrees, they realized that the people who had been most influential in their spiritual lives were all graduates of Fuller Theological Seminary. So it was only natural for them to enroll in one of the nation's largest M.Div. programs at the world's largest multi-denominational seminary.

"At Fuller, we found ourselves able to learn from perspectives all over the geographic and Christian map. The diversity of cultures and traditions and philosophies deepened our faith, clarified our convictions, and equipped us for our next steps."

—DAVE ZOVAK

With campuses in six Western cities, Fuller brings together people from widely divergent backgrounds to learn from outstanding faculty and from each other. This diversity, along with the seminary's vision of the church as a living, dynamic entity, makes Fuller especially effective at preparing students to serve as pastors in today's multicultural society.

Centered around a core of biblical studies, theology, and ministry, Fuller's M.Div. program offers students unprecedented flexibility in designing a curriculum based on their individual interests.

For more information contact the Fuller Theological Seminary Admissions Office.

"People at Fuller are involved in so many different things, it gives you a better picture of how big God is because you can see all the things God is doing."

—KIM ZOVAK

Dave and Kim Zovak, who earned their M.Div. degrees in 1998, are serving as interim pastors of evangelism and discipleship at the First Presbyterian Church of Visalia in Visalia, California.

FULLER THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

135 North Oakland Avenue, Pasadena, CA 91182

1-800-AFULLER

www.fuller.edu

Crowded opportunity: Bill Mancini of the Presbyterian Church in America's Mission to the World tries, along with 99 other mission agency representatives, to recruit boomers.

FINISHERS PROJECT

from page 22

they've done has significance and meaning."

Nelson Malwitz, founder and chair of the Finishers Project, does not believe attendees are motivated by a midlife crisis. "It's a demographic phenomenon where you say, 'I've done what I've done. Now what?'"

While some Finishers

may be looking at missions more to bring meaning into their lives than because of an interest in the lost, Malwitz is not concerned. "We're not questioning their motivation right now," he says. "Our calling is to give them the opportunity and challenge."

OPPORTUNE TIME: Because changing careers can take several years, Malwitz is glad most attendees were in their forties. "If it hits at 55, they won't be ready," he says. "At 42, you can build relationships, go on short-term missions, and prepare."

Such thinking is relatively new. Ron Linkenback, 49, and wife, Jan, 48, tried to go a few years ago. "Mission boards didn't know what to do with us. It seemed like mission boards wouldn't even consider you if you're over 35," says Jan Linkenback. "At this conference, we've been overwhelmed. There's an army ready to be recruited here."

As with the Mackies, who say they do not have much of a nest egg in place, the Linkenbacks are not waiting for their 401(k) to kick in. "Early retirement is kind of a cop-out," says Jan Linkenback. "I don't think it's really relying on the Lord to use his resources."

Ron Linkenback just changed jobs, and they are in the middle of a move from Cleveland to Springfield, Illinois. Still, they are ready to begin full-time ministry as soon as they can. "If God wants us to go, we'll go," Jan Linkenback says.

As with the Linkenbacks, many of the conferees have had previous overseas missions experiences. By attending this meeting, most sought more than the two-week blitzes they had typically experienced in the past.

SHORT-TERM PREFERENCE: Still, many mission agencies exhibiting at the conference are not counting on the years-upon-years of service the boomers have given to their careers.

"There are two crucial factors at work here: aging parents and grandkids," says Roger Shriner, director of recruitment for OMS International. "I'd estimate that about 75 percent of the people here are going to have to orient themselves around those bookends." As a result, he says, OMS and other mission agencies are hoping to recruit Finishers only for a year or two.

"But that's not new," he says. "Most missionaries today are short-term, and then they generally repeat. But even if they don't, they're better prayer warriors. They give more to missions. They're more holistically 'world Christians,' and the experience has made them new persons."

By Ted Olsen in Chicago

An Invitation to the Greatest Year of Your Life.

It's going to be a year you'll never forget. Because in just twelve months, you'll be able to read God's Word from cover to cover. With less effort than you ever dreamed.

The One Year Bible divides the entire Bible into 365 easy portions you can finish in just 15 minutes a day. And it's available in the warm, easy-to-understand New Living Translation—where every page reads like it was written especially for you.

Look for The One Year Bible at your favorite bookstore. And let the adventure begin.

Live It Now

WOULD YOU WANT TO CHAT WITH THESE GUYS?

... or be caught in a dark alley? Of course not! Nor would you ever want to run into them on the World Wide Web. The Internet has plenty of places to work and learn. It also has plenty of unscrupulous individuals prowling about ... pornographers, child stalkers, violent and evil ideas and propaganda.

But not with CleanWeb™'s premium filtered Internet access. It blocks out the repulsive, dirty side of the Web before it ever reaches your computer. CleanWeb™ wants to make the World Wide Web - and the world - a better place. Subscribe today and have 10% of your monthly fee designated to charity.

With CleanWeb™ you'll never have a chance run-in with these guys.

cleanweb.net
WE TAKE OUT THE TRASH

Call Toll-free: 1-877-CLEANWEB (1-877-253-2693) ext. 123 • www.cleanweb.net • register@cleanweb.net

©1998 Cleanweb.net, Inc.

Call to find out how to become a Sponsor or Sales Associate!

The Truth About Lies

For a nation in denial, it's time to tell it like it is.

Executive editor David Neff was hooked up by transatlantic telephone line to the BBC Radio 4 program The Moral Maze, a weekly ethics-oriented talk show on which panelists display their British wit and wisdom at its most caustic.

The first question the host fired at him was: "Is your American President a liar?"

Neff wished he had had the wit to say, "Well that all depends on what liar means." But instead, he told the BBC's listeners that the American people had plenty of evidence before they elected him that Bill Clinton frequently did not tell the truth. President Clinton is a charming person who inspires confidence. As a child in a dysfunctional alcoholic home, he learned to please, to avoid conflict, and to disarmingly reveal his vulnerability while denying any responsibility for a bad situation. He developed the sort of charisma that makes you want to trust him, even against your better judgment. The American people did not want a moral leader, Neff said, so much as they wanted a President they could identify with.

That helps to explain why the release of the videotapes of the President's grand jury testimony not only confirmed people's beliefs that he had lied to them, but also increased their sympathy for him. They squirmed with him, as they watched him try to wriggle off the hook of the prosecutors' questions.

Has the cult of victimhood come to this? exclaimed one panelist. Indeed. What we seem to have in the Oval Office is not so much a chief executive as a First Victim, the King of Vulnerability in the Land of Oprah.

Home of the whopper

We are in this autumn of our discontent, not because Kenneth Starr caught the President in a lie, but because the grand palace of spin and deception which this president has constructed to live in would no longer hold together. He could no longer be the great champion of underdogs and at the same time be someone who took advantage of an infatuated subordinate many years his junior.

We are troubled as much by the too-easy moralism that said, "The President lied; let's impeach him," as we are by too-quick calls for forgetting and moving on. This simplistic reaction to presidential prevarication reveals much about our culture, and about how little we know about lies. Presidential lies have not been limited to this one instance in this one administration.

As children, we think of lies as discrete untruths: "The dog ate my homework" or "I lost my lunch money." But as we grow older, we discover that lies exist in networks of belief, that most fibs, big and small, are synthetic threads woven in the fabric of how we see (or want to see) our family system or our national culture or our congregation's way of playing church. They are not simply whoppers told to exculpate and escape punishment.

If la Rochefoucauld was right in calling hypocrisy "the homage paid by vice to virtue," then these lies that form the fabric of our wished-for lives are a tribute to better days, to the possibility of improved lives, to a higher vision of what can be. When we cover for an alcoholic spouse by calling in sick for him or her, or attribute a bruise to clumsiness rather than to a parent's brutality, we say what we want to believe, hoping that in the speaking it will somehow be made true.

Unfortunately, these webs of hopeful denial often trap us in repeated self-defeating behavior patterns. Truly, they offer not hope but wishful thinking.

Painful memories

Whenever the bright lies of wishful thinking or the dark lies of oppression bind us, it is only truth that liberates: First, we need the facts—whether in a family intervention or an artful play or novel that belies human deception or political propaganda. Second, we need Jesus, who is Truth enfleshed and in whose grace we are free to acknowledge the bonds with which we have tied ourselves. And third, we need communities of memory who are committed to the unvarnished truth—who won't or don't conceal their own painful past. As Robert Bellah put it, if a "community is completely honest, it will remember stories not only of suffering received but of suffering inflicted—dangerous memories, for they call the community to alter ancient evils" (Habits of the Heart).

The kind of community Bellah describes stands in stark contrast to the reality of totalitarian governments, which fabricate Potemkin villages of fake prosperity and false contentment and require their citizens to live within an oppressive web of lies.

Almost immediately after the President's Lewinsky-related lies, half-truths, and misdirections became public, sympathetic clergy and public servants called for forgiveness. But, as the New York Times editorial page was quick to point out, "[W]e can afford to be a nation of forgivers. But we must not become a nation of enablers." The nation must refuse to endorse the President's personal lies and our cultural ones.

Truth, as a way of life, is hard. It takes courage and commitment not to settle for the comfort of the lies we tell about ourselves, to have the darkness of our souls made visible. Being truthful is a countercultural, gospel commitment, coloring how we relate to government, to culture, and to ourselves. Being truthful recognizes the way sin shadows everything human and proclaims the need to shine the gospel light on every life and institution. Still, the gospel brings freedom to say no to lies and to live in reality.

All this attention to perjury and misdirection has created a moment, a providential parenthesis in history, in which we can have some kind of national intervention, telling the truth about our cultural denial, pretensions, and wishful thinking. May God give us the courage to seize the day. CT

If It's Too Good to Be True . . .

It doesn't matter if you are a retired person on a fixed income with little knowledge of the world of high finance or if you are a college president accustomed to handling a budget of millions. You can get sucked into a scheme that will cost you dearly. It doesn't matter if you are an Evangelical Friend in Camano, Washington, a Nazarene in Wichita, Kansas, or a Dutch Calvinist in Grand Rapids, Michigan. You can get suckered, swindled, taken for a ride, and given a bath by a charming, Christian confidence man.

Jesus told us that the "children of this age are more shrewd in dealing with their own generation than are the children of light" (Luke 16:8, NRSV). And our news sources bear out his judgment. Our advice to you is this: Wise up. Don't get suckered.

Over the past few years, CT has published multiple news stories about godly people who have lost millions because they believed what were essentially unbelievable promises. Some of these losses have been the result of Ponzi or pyramid schemes in which high return on investment is promised over a short period of time. The illusion is created and sustained because new investors are constantly sought whose investments are used to pay handsome rewards to earlier investors. The trouble is, the universe for any such investment scheme is always limited, and when the point is reached where not enough new investors can be found, the pyramid collapses of its own weight. Thus, when the New Era Philanthropy scheme came crashing down, $551 million in liabilities were initially reported in 1995.

Sometimes such schemes fail when federal indictments bring them to a halt, as they did in the case of the Productions Plus "matching gift" ploy that drew in organizations and individuals in 21 states. Other losses (like the soured real-estate partnerships described in "Real Estate Investment Failure Hurts Churchgoers," p. 30) result from market reversals, bad management, or inadequate oversight.

Two factors lie at the heart of all these tragedies: first is the level of trust we Christians exercise as we deal with one another. This is important, and often healthy, in congregational life. Many Christians, skeptical of anything the unsaved have to offer, trust Christian publishers for "Christian" books on financial management, weight loss, and child discipline. They trust Christian record companies to provide them with "Christian" entertainment. And, unfortunately, they are sitting ducks when approached with "Christian" investment schemes that promise the moon. While we need to trust each other in our congregational lives, a dose of skepticism is always warranted whenever anyone else stands to profit from our trust.

The second factor is the enticing promise of something for nothing, or at least something big for something little. In this sense, the allure of Ponzi schemes is not unlike the allure of gambling. But in investments as in gambling, those who are foolish in small things often get caught being foolish in big things. Contentment is the cure for the gotta-have-it itch. Saint Paul preached contentment in material things (1 Tim. 6:8) and Jesus preached trust in Divine providence for what we eat and what we wear (Matt. 6:25f.).

Today's "radical simplicity" movement is a secularized strain of that message—which sorely needs to be informed by the gospel and its age-to-come dimension. But first, Christians need to refresh their own souls with the simplicity message of Scripture. Those who don't are making themselves marks for con men. Remember, having clean hands and a pure heart does not require getting taken to the cleaners. CT

Those who are foolish in small things often get caught being foolish
in big things.

For Every Believer, There's a Believer's Life System

No matter what you've been called to do in life, the Believer's Life System is designed to help you organize it. Because... And you God want in the center of it. In the Believer's Life System, there's a whole family of coordinated products, including the Classic, the Premier Edition... with its focus on personal finance. And the Compact Size, Women's Edition that fits easily into a purse. Either way, you'll enjoy everything from time management and devotional helps to tips on family life and personal finance—all in handsome, American-made binders guaranteed for life.

MOODY

www.moodypress.com

Look for the Believer's Life System family of products at your favorite bookstore or call 1-800-443-LIFE (5433). And get the best management system

BELIEVER'S that's just right for your life. For the Christian bookstore nearest you or 1-800-991-7747

Life|SYSTEM

The Believer's Life System®
Family of products to help you organize your life.
Classic Edition
Compact Size Edition
Premier Edition
Women's Edition
Life System is a registered trademark of Moody Bible Institute.

Helping Put God at the Center of All You Do

GLOBAL CONNECTION

"At Bethany, we found the education we were looking for."

When considering earning your degree off campus, Quality is what you should look for. It is important to have the knowledge that comes with the degree. Bethany, above all else, has placed emphasis on providing the student with a quality program of study. Moreover, Bethany will not take second place when it comes to offering excellence in education through off campus study.

Studying off campus is a good way to complete your seminary education without having to disrupt your family or leave your present ministry. With Bethany you can study off campus and on line via the internet. Whether you use the regular post-mail or e-mail you can have a dialogue with Bethany's faculty, other students, or alumni.

At Bethany you can earn your Bachelor's, Master's or Doctorate through external study where you can set your pace. Your concentration may be in Bible, Theology, Pastoral Ministry, Christian Education, Missions or Christian Counseling. Advanced standing is given for college transfer credit and Portfolio Learning Assessment for life learning experience. Monthly tuition arrangements are possible with no interest.

Here is one good reason for selecting Bethany as the seminary from which to earn your degree: Bethany is an independent, conservative, Baptist Seminary that accepts the Bible, the Authorized Version, as the inerrant, infallible Word of God. The student body is trans-denominational. Bethany is designed for educating pastors, evangelists, missionaries and those in Christian ministry.

For Catalogue Only Call Toll Free: 1 (800) 903-4487.

Global Connect Facilities:

Dean of Students: (334) 793-3189

Fax: (334) 793-4344

E-mail: bethany@ala.net

Website: www.bethanybc.edu

Bethany Worldwide
BETHANY BIBLE COLLEGE AND THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

2537 Hodgesville Road / P.O. Box 1994

Dothan, Alabama 36302 / USA

Want To Be World Class?

Grab A Towel.

It's a great paradox. If you want to be the greatest, become the least. At Bethel Seminary, we are committed to developing ministers who are world class in every sense of the phrase. And we know doing great things for God requires that we help prepare our students to serve others.

The church needs servant leaders, as all over the world people are coming to Christ in record numbers. They must be persons grounded in Scripture, growing in integrity, and increasingly reflecting Christ's character in all aspects of life. In addition, ministering effectively both here and abroad requires training that is sensitive to a host of cultural nuances throughout the world. World class training? You'll find it at Bethel Seminary.

Is God tugging at your heart? Do you sense His calling to ministry? If so, call Bethel Seminary today at 800-255-8706 for more information and a copy of our brochure.

Bethel Seminary

ST. PAUL • SAN DIEGO

CHANGE THE WORLD www.bethel.edu

When we asked a dozen international evangelical leaders to report on the state of the church in their regions, we didn't receive just cold statistics or idealized stereotypes. Instead, we heard from flesh-and-blood believers with attitude, telling their churches' stories from specific points of view. At some points, old hurts poke through (brace yourself for a bit more scolding on the failures of Western imperialistic missions); at throughout the world. He is not the heavenly CEO giving target figures to his regional directors to meet.

Rather, he is friend and partner to the local jungle pastor of Malaysia and the suburban missionary in Berlin. Our God is involved with the details.

One reason these reports reveal clay feet so clearly—unlike the glowing articles in old-time missions bulletins—is because of the

Now That We're Global

other places, joy for the work God is doing among them bubbles to the surface.

Perhaps the most practical reminder they give us is that the same problems and temptations that plague North American evangelicals—materialism, judgmentalism, evangelistic apathy, unchecked emotionalism, infighting—are found in full measure elsewhere in the church. From Russia we hear that the decades of persecution under communism have not automatically led to evangelistically effective churches now that there is more freedom. Religious fervor in Brazil has not directly translated into spiritual maturity. And material gain in South Korea has not necessarily turned into Christian generosity. The lesson: Christians everywhere walk their faith with feet of clay.

But we also learn that it is the clay-footed that God uses to do his work. Cutting through the fog of problems and issues is the clear sunlight of God's work, specific and local, unfiltered directness of the reports, thanks to e-mail and the rise of English as the lingua franca of the world. In our "global village," such unmediated directness keeps us from romanticizing the faith of faraway Christians and presenting our own faithfulness with ostentation. It also calls for greater measures of not just honesty, but charity, and not just openness, but respect.

The following reports necessarily represent only a sampling of the global evangelical fellowship. Whole regions go unmentioned, and in those regions we do cover, other worthy spokespersons could have described the state of affairs with a different interpretation. Still, we hope that the following pieces will help us both to see the big picture and to connect at a more personal level with our brothers and sisters around the globe. Most of the contributors have listed their e-mail addresses and welcome your comments. Let the conversations—and prayers—begin.

—The Editors

Mexico

It's a Small Church

Two decades later, the 300 Italian members of an immigrant church on the outskirts of Sydney, Australia, still talk about the visit of the "Brazilian brothers." In 1975, in the midst of rapid evangelical and Pentecostal growth in Brazil, Luigi Schilrò, a powerful preacher who came out of charismatic Methodism, and Mario Lindstrum, an engaging Assemblies of God singer and musician, received a prophecy from an Armenian woman in Brazil that they were to go to Asia, but on the way, they were to pass through Australia. So they began their journey.

Arriving in Sydney, they lodged in the central-city YMCA, where they prayed for guidance. Looking through the phone book they found a pastor named Anthony Foti at a church under the listing "Assemblies of God—Italian." They took a train out to the suburb of Yagoona in hopes of visiting the church. As Lindstrum tells the story: "We sat down on the footpath under a tree. People were walking past and looking at us. Then there arrived a man in a car. While still at a distance, I called out, 'Are you Pastor Foti?' 'Yes!' he replied. And thus we went into the garden, where he asked us questions and took us into his house to eat together."

Mark Hutchinson

Foti, an American by birth, invited Luigi and Mario to preach in his Italian church. But first he took them to visit a Slavic Pentecostal church in the area, where Schilrò preached in Portuguese (his native tongue), Lindstrum translated into English, and the Slavic pastor translated into Russian. The visit to Foti's church sparked four months of intense evangelism and spiritual blessing that the members remember to this day.

Consider the mix of labels in this one small story—Methodist, Assemblies of God; Brazilian, Italian, Armenian, American; English, Portuguese, Russian. In a small way, it illustrates how evangelical Christianity has moved out of its traditional nationalist and ethnic boxes to engage the world in a more global and universal way. It also illustrates the much-heralded shift in the center of evangelicalism and evangelical activity away from white, middle-class, North Atlantic believers in developed countries to believers in the Third World.

While this shift is not news for anyone who has paid any attention to religious demographics in the last couple of decades, what is less well understood is how this "globalization" of our movement affects who we are (identity) and how we do church (ecclesiology). Before exploring the effects of a shrinking globe upon our movement, however, we should keep in mind where evangelicalism fits in terms of world population and geography (also see the map on p. 50).

Three-quarter billion strong

About one-third of the world's population has some allegiance to Christianity, and about 700 million of these are what researcher David Barrett calls "Great Commission" Christians. These are Christians who believe in the centrality of the Cross, in Jesus Christ as Savior, the Bible as God's Word, and in the mandate to spread the gospel. It is to these Christian believers I am referring when I speak of evangelical Christians. Of these evangelical Christians, more than half are charismatic or Pentecostal.

After All

Globalization is changing how Christians do ministry.

Pentecostalism is the largest and most dynamic movement within evangelicalism. The explosive numerical growth and geographical expansion of Pentecostals in the last 30 years has given a new look to the religious make-up of the Third World—or the Two Thirds World, as it is more accurately and positively called. “Two Thirds” has become descriptive of not only non-First World countries (such as Germany or the United States) but also of where evangelicals are located around the world. Two-thirds of Pentecostal and charismatic members, says Barrett, are to be found in Africa, Asia, and Latin America.

In First World countries, the relationship of “evangelical” churches (that is, non-Pentecostal evangelical churches) with “Pentecostal” churches (evangelical churches that are Pentecostal in expression) is often tinged by suspicion and a sense of theological superiority. Not so in places like Brazil and other parts of the Two Thirds World. While only about two-thirds of evangelical churches in Greater Rio de Janeiro are Pentecostal in orientation, for example, 90 percent of those founded in the last three years are Pentecostal.

Statistics show that the Pentecostal/charismatic element in evangelicalism is becoming an increasingly larger percentage of global Christianity. At the same time, this growing force has generally (though not universally) combined the biblicism of “evangelicals” with the experientialism of “Pentecostals.” For our purposes, both groups will be considered overlapping traditions within the larger evangelical movement. With this picture of worldwide evangelicalism in mind, let us look more closely at how the dynamics of the modern phenomenon of globalization shape our movement as we ourselves become more and more global.

Straining to be one

One of the most visible dynamics of globalization is multiculturalism—the many straining to be one. The story of the Brazilian brothers leaping across national and cultural boundaries provides one such example—though I should finish the story to illustrate how completely multicultural it was. The musician, Mario Lindstrum, was the son of a Swedish immigrant to Brazil who was brought to a knowledge of Christ by two Japanese Christians in Brazil. The Italian immigrants to whom Lindstrum and Schilrø had preached in Australia in turn witnessed to their extended families around the world. This church eventually helped start a Portuguese assembly in Sydney and began sending missionaries to Spain, Portugal, and South America.

Such low-level, yet global-scale activity among evangelical churches has changed the way believers in Latin America and Asia see themselves. It has also changed how evangelicals in the First World view themselves and their Third World brothers and sisters. Western evangelicalism sprang from traditions that depended heavily on nation-states for their identity and strength. Denominations were called the “Established Church of Scotland,” for instance, or the “Dutch Reformed Church.” Even Wesley, who saw the world as his parish and would unintentionally found a church based on method and not national identity, died a minister of the “Church of England.”

Naturally, these groups assumed the cultural and ethnic assumptions of their cradle countries. Anglicans, it was perceived, were English (or in the United States, white, Anglo-Saxon, upper-middle class). Reformed people were Dutch and "plain." Lutherans held surnames like Simpfendorfer. But as the decades rolled by, and as these groups pressed out into the world, their national and ethnic identities became harder to hold together.

Today, an American Episcopal diocese searching for vibrant Anglicanism looks to Uganda to recruit a leader to oversee its missions program. Australian churches adopt Korean cell groups and Samoan prayer summits as models for congregational action while sending song leaders to American congregations. Because of cases like these, observers of the current evangelical/Pentecostal expansion (that began in the 1960s) no longer speak about "this church in that country," but instead use such odd-sounding terminology as "flows of cultural and theological influence."

How did this shift occur? Leading sociologists such as David Lyon and David Martin note that what many pundits thought was the death of the church in the 1960s through secularization was really its relocation and rebirth into the rest of the world.

"What many pundits thought was the death of the church in the 1960s through secularization was really its relocation and rebirth into the rest of the world."

When the river of evangelical faith in missionary-sending countries (particularly the United States) hit the logjams of modernism and individualism (gathering strength already in the last century), the evangelical river began altering its course by flowing sideways and around the obstructions. The results started to become visible in the last half of this century as evangelical Christianity seemed to burst out into a myriad different forms in a thousand places around the globe.

When communities become global, no forms or patterns remain unconnected, especially in a world where methods and ideas seem to move almost without reference to time and space. A good case study is the "church growth" movement of the last several decades. While widely criticized, the movement, in effect, brought the lessons of the Third World into First World practice, particularly through the books and teaching of Donald McGavran and C. Peter Wagner. Today, as a result, "every major Protestant denomination has adopted a church-planting project," says Chris Forster of Challenge 2000. The Lausanne-backed Discipling a Whole Nation project (DAWN), which was first used in the Philippines, has been highly successful in countries such as Zimbabwe and is now in 40 countries. The goal is to start 3 million new churches worldwide in the near future. The Willow Creek Association, the Alpha Course, and the Toronto Blessing are other examples of local evangelical events that have expanded onto the global stage. As these and other numerous programs spread, they bring in their wake new institutions and new patterns by which groups cohere and exert influence. "Our" world and "their" world become connected, making it impossible for any culture to remain a culture completely unto itself.

Riding crosscurrents of influence

The shift of the center of evangelical Christianity away from the Northern and Western Hemispheres into multiple hotbeds around the world has also created multiple centers of power and influence. As seen with the story of the Brazilian brothers, this has changed the nature of evangelical activity, whether the undertaking be training new leaders (such as the evangelical seminaries in Kenya and Brazil noted in this issue of CT) or doing missions.

Today, nearly as many missionaries are being sent out from Two Thirds World countries as are being sent to them. Evangelical ministries in South Korea and Brazil commission workers to immigrant populations throughout the First World. Islander communities in the Pacific, which were first evangelized by Australians, now support (through agencies such as the Deep Sea Canoe Mission and South Pacific Partners) outreaches in Australia, with a view to "taking the gospel back to Jerusalem." PM International, founded in 1984 by Mexican Pablo Carillo, currently supports 40 Latin American missionaries in three regions of the Muslim world. There are scores of other organizations sending out some 4,000 missionaries from the Latin world. The scene in South Korea, with 5,000 cross-cultural missionaries, and, to a lesser extent, the Philippines, is similar.

These new sending countries are not, however, simply reproducing the models of the traditional evangelical mission programs that originally reached them from the First World. They instead operate using a more flexible approach (many using short-term workers and "tentmaking" methods), are church-based rather than agency based, and are often not one-directional. For instance, not only is Brazil the largest sender of evangelical missionaries in the Latin world, it is also the largest receiver—which makes it a lot easier to remember the Golden Rule as they do missions.

It perhaps goes without saying that multiple centers of influence also increase the potential for tension. Such tension can be seen in evangelical reactions to the South African "Truth and Reconciliation Commission." With strong input from evangelicals like Michael Cassidy of African Enterprise, the commission is a rare example of Christian principles being applied to solve national problems. But not all evangelicals are happy with it. Why? Because the dual ideals of "truth" and "reconciliation" meet on equal footing—thereby exposing our deep-seated convictions about which of these two Christian and culturally shaped principles are given our tacit priority. Missiologist Rosemary Dowsett points out that Western traditions have emphasized the "justification" elements of the gospel as well as related "truth" aspects of the text. More communal cultures beyond Europe, which are less in debt to Roman legal traditions (Japan, for instance), have emphasized the "reconciliation" elements of the gospel. This is also true in places where the church struggles under the weight of civil war, endemic disease, famine, cultural and religious conflict, or political dictatorships. For some First World evangelicals, the Truth and Reconciliation Commission's approach doesn't give a proper pride of place to truth. But who—and this is the point—in South Africa is waiting for a North American's advice on this controversy?

The globalization of evangelicalism means that the tradition-

l locus of power, the First World, no longer has the ability to control the conversation. By virtue of controlling the theological colleges, voluntary associations, and church fellowships that have energized missions and given identity to the church, Northern Hemisphere Anglo leaders in the past could and did set the terms of debate. Identity questions were settled in a similar way. You knew who you were by whom you excluded—charismatics, ecumenists, evangelical entrepreneurs who have meetings with the pope, and so on. Most noticeably, some evangelical leaders built small organizational empires by judging how “biblical” this TV evangelist is or how orthodox that doctrine on inspiration might be.

So what happens when these traditional holders of power hear a different set of issues being raised by evangelicals in the Two Thirds World, such as the question Bill Dyrness heard in the Philippines: “Why is there so much poverty in the part of the world where the Christian faith is growing most rapidly?” (How America Hears the Gospel). The danger is that the First World questioner will patronize Two Thirds World concerns with “reconciliation” theology by discounting them as weak or naïve, implying that the only good sort of truth is systematic, rational truth. On the other hand, there is great potential for both sides to learn from the others’ perspective and insights.

In a globalized movement, fault lines run not only between traditions but also through them. At any meeting of evangelicals, it seems two-thirds of those present are cheering the growth of the church, while the “biblical remnant” are bemoaning the fact that evangelicalism is going to hell in a handbasket. In an age of e-mail and satellite conferences, those who are disgruntled—on whichever side of the divide—can form their own centers of influence that have little to do with geographical location or organizational strictures. So Christian communities are driven apart as well as brought together by the spread of the global village (a phenomenon analysts are calling “glocalization”). Evangelicalism today, like Earth’s oceans, is composed of multiple currents and crosscurrents issuing from many unseen sources. How we adjust to these multiple sources of influence will determine much of our identity in the future as well as the reasonableness of calling evangelicalism a singular movement at all.

Clicking onto technology

Just as a Baptist evangelist like Billy Graham can touch millions in a crusade by satellite, so fundamentalist Baptists can form a worldwide community of those disgruntled with Graham’s “popularized” Christianity. Technology, for better or for worse, is the reason. It has not only fed the expansion of evangelicalism around the world but also fed the fractures within it. As a result, issue-based communities are formed on the basis of those who have come to know “the truth” that a particular group holds. To survive, such groups have learned to become lobbyists, taking their cases onto the world stage.

The difference today is that global technology makes the effects of such debates and fractures anything but confined. When one evangelical group attacks its opponents as, say, Luther attacked the Anabaptists, the words now echo instantaneously around the world and have unpredictable results. In an era when geographical distance has disappeared, we are no longer just in Germany, and the cost of our infighting is much higher for those evangelicals who—in Singapore or India or the Middle East or Africa—live in the context of the other major world religions. These Christians often do not have the luxury of the “no cost, no compromise” position typical of North American fights, and distinguishing the essentials from mere theological “trivial pursuit” is literally a matter of life and death for them.

To Third World Christians, for instance, the distinction drawn by many in the First World between religion and economic or cultural identity is confusing and potentially dangerous. While First World journals can distinguish between mere culture and Christian belief or between church and state, from the other side of the global engagement such compartmentalizing looks unintelligible to, say, the believer in Mexico whose friends have been stabbed to death with machetes or to the Christian in Indonesia whose house and shop were burned.

As the stories in this issue of CT illustrate, evangelicalism has become a global faith with all the problems and opportunities that come with participating in the global village. These are the problems of success for evangelicals, not failure, but they are problems all the same and demand our close attention. Because of the technologies that make the global village possible, the problems are unlikely to disappear by themselves. The challenge for evangelicals in a megaphone world is to address these problems in ways that will build up the unity of the church rather than let the differences drive us further apart.

Jesus is still Lord

How do we react to such a picture of global evangelicalism? We are believers in the sovereignty of God, and the fact that his people have burst their historic barriers and spread out into the world does not strain his capacity to remain the author and finisher of our faith. Jesus told his disciples, “Do not be afraid, little flock, for your Father has been pleased to give you the kingdom.” I dare to say that our Father will be pleased to give us the kingdom, even though the little flock has grown to become a global flock.

Standing, literally, before the world, evangelicals now experience both danger and opportunity on a scale we have never experienced before. The danger is that we will not pull together enough to grasp the opportunities we face. The opportunities arise because evangelicalism has internal limits in a world that is falling apart. While the rest of the world throws out its big stories, its “metanarratives” in a fit of postmodernity, evangelicalism is constrained by the biblical self-revelation of God in Christ and his command to “go into all the world.” As the world contracts, evangelicals must learn to be one people through the love of Christ. By this, as the story goes, shall all people know that we are his disciples.

Mark Hutchinson, 40, lives in Sydney, Australia, where he serves as director of the Centre for the Study of Australian Christianity at Robert Menzies College at Macquarie University and as chair of the church history department at Southern Cross College. His latest book is A Global Faith: Essays on Evangelicalism and Globalization, written with Ogbu Kalu. He is also working with historians John Wolffe, Mark Noll, David Bebbington, and director Brian Stanley on the “World Christianity Project,” which aims to rewrite church history from a global perspective. E-mail: 100026.3265@compuserve.com

A CENTURY OF

Percentage of evangelical Christians compared to general population, 1900–1998

Our Globe

Growth Since 1970

	of population	of evangelicals
World	60%	126%
Europe	11%	41%
North America	31%	57%
Oceania	53%	93%
Africa	114%	207%
Latin America	76%	233%
Asia	67%	326%

Latin America

*Evangelicals: 11% world population; a one-third of all Christians

All Christians (including nominal) compared to evangelical percentage of world population

GROWTH

The map shows the numerical growth of all people and of evangelicals (defined as all persons of evangelical conviction who are active in spreading the gospel) since 1900. In each chart, the top figures identify general population numbers on the continent, and the bottom figures (in italics) identify the number of evangelical Christians on the continent. We also indicate (in the red figures) the percentage evangelicals compose of the continents' populations in 1900 and 1998.

These figures were prepared for CHRISTIANITY TODAY by David B. Barrett, research professor of missiometrics, Regent University in Virginia Beach, Virginia, and author of the World Christian Encyclopedia, to be published in three volumes next year. Map and chart design by Richard Sears.

Ge

"We pray that a lost generation of Europeans will come home to the God of their forebears."

REFORM US AGAIN

Nine years after the Berlin Wall came down and eight years after the reunification of the two German states, the country of Martin Luther and of the Heidelberg Confession faces challenges as never before. Germany truly has a new face, one that people in both the east and the west of our nation still have to get used to beholding in the mirror. The same is true for the church.

Before reunification, just under half of the population in West Germany was Roman Catholic, and just over half was Protestant. We now are confronted with a three-thirds situation, the last third being unchurched or openly atheistic citizens. Under the rule of communism and the antireligious policies of the East German government, church membership dropped from 95 percent in 1945 to about 20 percent in 1990. Over a million people left the official church after reunification on October 3, 1990 (which is now our National Day). This was due in large measure to the reintroduction of the system of church taxation in the east. Today, only 5 percent of the Protestants and 10 percent of the Catholics bother to go to church on any kind of regular basis. In the east, many families have been unchurched and therefore untouched by the gospel for three or four generations. At a recent evangelistic outdoor event, young people were asking: "God—what is that? We have never heard about it."

Roland Werner

Nevertheless, there is a real—but by no means pervasive—evangelical movement within the traditional Protestant churches, as there is, of course, in what are called the "free churches." Free churches include Baptists (80,000 members), Methodists (almost 50,000), Free Evangelicals (30,000), various Pentecostal and charismatic churches (80,000), the Salvation Army, and a few other small denominations. Altogether, their membership totals only 300,000, which is less than half a percent of the total population. Even though attendance in these churches is sometimes double the actual membership, their numbers are still minuscule in relationship to the overall population.

Sadly, there is an unhealthy tendency toward in-house fighting among certain evangelicals. Some more fundamentalist evangelicals, who have stood their ground against liberal, neoliberal, Marxist, and feminist interpretations of the gospel, are now turning against their fellow evangelicals, whom they see as compromising culturally and dogmatically. They protest especially the

In Europe Today

■ Of the estimated 10 million Gypsies in Europe, over 200,000 are fervent Pentecostal Christians. They form the largest group of evangelical believers in both Spain and France.

■ French evangelicals have more than 200 missionaries in 30 foreign lands and operate 10 evangelical Bible schools and seminaries.

■ German evangelicals publish more than 150 magazines with a combined circulation of 50 million and publish more than 65 percent of all Protestant book titles.

■ Polish evangelicals use radio station TWR to broadcast Christian programming 24 hours a day.

■ An evangelical movement called Oasis in the Catholic Church in Poland now numbers in the hundreds of thousands. Reached through Bible-study groups, camps, and publishing houses, these believers continue forming Bible studies and informal fellowships throughout the country.

Source: Operation World (1998)

Roland Werner is a Bible translator, university evangelist, and the leader of an interdenominational church for students in Marburg. At 41, he serves as chair of the Christival evangelistic festivals and is a member of the German Lausanne committee. E-mail: rolwerner@aol.com inclusion of charismatics into the German Evangelical Alliance and cooperation in evangelism with renewal groups inside the Roman Catholic church.

Germany

But despite these internal problems, there is also a growing interest among evangelicals from the traditional, free, and charismatic churches to make the gospel known in Germany. The opening up of the Iron Curtain has opened up new avenues of outreach to sister evangelical churches in central and eastern Europe, which need our support. There are many partnership and exchange programs linking Christians from different European countries. Some of these links had been formed in communist times, when Christians from East Germany already shouldered the responsibility of helping their more eastern brothers and sisters.

Christians are also responding to the millions who have lost their jobs and find themselves in a psychological and spiritual vacuum following the breakdown of the Communists' centralized system. Under the motto "Come follow Jesus," Christival 1996—a five-day congress for young Christians—brought together over 32,000 young people from all over Germany, plus another 2,000 from neighboring countries, to the east-German city of Dresden. It helped define a new positive identity for young people of many different churches as followers of Christ.

In the wake of Billy Graham's 1993 "Mission to Europe," held in Essen and linked via satellite to 330 venues in Germany and throughout Europe, other similar events followed—in 1995 from Leipzig with 360 link-ups, and in 1997 from Nuremberg with 660 link-ups and a combined participation of 1 million people. In January of this year, a youth event trained and challenged young Christians to work together across denominational lines in witnessing to their friends. Two major evangelistic events are being planned for 2000, one of them involving youth at the World's Fair to be held in Hanover.

Although the fires of the gospel may not burn as high and as brightly in "post-Christian" Europe as in other areas of the world, and though most churches and ministries are small and regional, the fruit they are producing is real and will last. Christians here are confident that the tearing down of the physical walls is a sign of what God wants to do in the spiritual world as well. We pray and believe that a lost generation of Europeans will come home to the God of their forebears. For Germany is not only a country with a rich spiritual history, but also a people called to trust the God of the future. CT

Russia

JON WARREN

LEARNING TO SPEAK RUSSIAN

When the Communists fell and the door was opened, we thought we needed only a few years to convert Russia for Christ. We started very intensive evangelization. We preached to hundreds of thousands, started missions and Bible studies, distributed millions of Bibles and Christian literature, and planted a lot of churches.

What we discovered later was that we did not always speak the same language as secular Russians. For decades the church had developed its own culture in isolation—you cannot ignore the fact that Russia was closed to the gospel for 75 years. We held church services, but to have Bible studies we would sit around a table with biscuits, sandwiches, and cups of tea. But this big table was nothing but decoration for the secret police. If they would break in, it's a party. The main

Sergei I. Nikolaev

"When the Communists fell, we discovered we did not speak the same language as secular Russians."

purpose was to study the Bible and pray. That was our culture. So when we went and preached to secular people, we could not connect well with their culture. Even after ten years of openings, evangelical ministry in Russia is still both relatively small and very new.

This is why most people here still do not know what evangelical Christianity is about. They have heard so many negative stories about born-again believers that they are surprised to hear good stories. For many, evangelical Christians are still those who killed their kids and sacrificed infants, and all the other propaganda they heard. When they hear what evangelical Christianity is really about, it is a revelation.

When we preached the gospel, people responded enthusiastically. Our church had a front-row bench where we celebrated everybody new. But the next Sunday there was another bunch to celebrate. And then after 20 Sundays those who were in the first row moved to the last row and then just stopped coming.

These converted secular people thought, "If I come to the church I will find something I never found anywhere else." So you had teachers, doctors, lawyers, artists, actors eagerly listening to a pastor who was a shoemaker. Often, the level of teaching was homecooked, pastors were not educated enough and didn't know who they were talking to. These people started to go around the circle from this church to that church.

So not only do we need to convert people out there to Christianity, we also need to convert the church culture and build up the new generation of church leaders. Today we have to decide—and this is what is on the minds and souls of younger pastors—whom evangelical churches in Russia are going to serve. Are we going to serve old-style believers already in the churches, or we are going to be the kind of church that also serves those who are not church people yet? We need to find the forms that will not be radically different from our Russian tradition, but at the same time will be attractive culturally, intellectually, spiritually, theologically, and emotionally to those new to the church.

One example of the challenge we face is a class of people sometimes called "the New Russians." They represent a new mentality, an entrepreneurial and consumerist class. They madly accumulate a lot, but the values are not real life—more the product of Hollywood movies. So, with their new freedom, they seek opportunities without a moral core within their hearts. Many of them are good people who don't really understand what is going on. So many find that when they drive the new Mercedes, they did not change at all on the inside.

In building our seminary, we worked with a woman who is one of the new Russians. She is a president of a very successful company. In the process of helping us she found that she needed something else. I invited her to teach the course on management at our seminary. Later she called and said, "I manage my money; I manage my company; but I'm not managing my life." Now she is visiting our church, singing our hymns. There are a lot of people like that.

These New Russians value their time, they treasure their powers, and they will not go to the churches that will not give them what they expect. This is a great challenge for the church—to be ready for the actual needs of today's people. This is why theological education is so important for our leaders. In Russia, evangelical Christianity is young, but I believe it can be the spark of reform in mainline churches and the beam of hope for a hopeless country. Overall, I am very optimistic about the way evangelical Christianity is developing. Our numbers are small, but our opportunities are great. CI

The son and grandson of evangelical pastors, Sergei I. Nikolaev, 49, translated for Billy Graham's historic preaching tours in the Soviet Union.

He now serves as president of Saint Petersburg Evangelical Theological Academy and is pastor of Temple of the Gospel Church in Saint Petersburg. E-mail: thacadsp@aol.com

"Africa is a land of great potential, a sleeping spiritual giant."

Kenya

CURSED BY SUPERFICIALITY

The church in Africa has been compared to a lake that is a mile long and an inch deep. Because of the political and social turmoil that Africa is going through, the church has become like a hospital where people come to get hope. As a result, many people are coming to the Lord. But the teaching and the knowledge of the Bible are often superficial, and Christianity is not transforming people's lives.

This is graphically illustrated by looking at the powerful revival that started in Rwanda in the 1930s—the East African Revival. It had such a big impact that by 1994 about 80 percent of the population of Rwanda was Christian, either Protestant or Catholic. But sadly, Rwanda was the site of the 1994 genocide in which a half-million people were murdered. Christians were slaughtering Christians. How could this happen?

I am grateful for the missionaries who came to Africa. My father was converted by one from America. Only now is the African church waking up to the fact that we might not only be a receiving church but a sending one like the American church. But there are some things we should learn to do differently.

David M. Kasali

There is a saying among my people that missionaries don't cry. This perception grew out of the early missionaries' method of ministry. Typically, they would build their homes on the top of a hill and the health clinic or church down the hill. They would come down to minister to the people, then retreat to the hilltop to live in the security of their homes. This was not discipleship; this was not modeling, identifying, and living with others as Jesus did. To this day, Africa is in desperate need of open, transparent leadership that not only preaches but also models what is preached.

The missionaries also placed an unhealthy emphasis on being separated from the world. While being called out is biblical, it was sometimes applied in misleading ways. Up until the 1980s, the common understanding of African Christians was that Christians should not be involved in social matters—the “affairs of the world.” We learned not to play drums in the church, because that was worldly; and we stayed out of politics and business, because they were considered worldly. This stance would cost the church a great opportunity when independence came to many African countries in the 1950s and 1960s. During those turbulent years, African society desperately needed the contributions of Christians.

INTERNATIONAL MISSION BOARD

I recently presented a paper at a consultation of church leaders in Nairobi. In it, I made the point that the responsibility of the church now is to preach the whole counsel of God—a message of redemption, a message of rehabilitation, and a message of reconstruction. Christians should help build stronger societies by building churches, hospitals, schools, and businesses. Islam is very appealing to Africans today not because of its belief system but because of the material gains it offers. Muslims come with money from the East and build very good primary schools and high schools. They build some of the best hospitals around. They provide loans to governments and to people who want to start small businesses. They send young Africans to the Middle East to be trained in their religious schools.

Fortunately, the church in Africa is experiencing a healthy self-correction. In the midseventies and eighties, a new generation of church leaders arose who brought drums and our own songs into our churches. They encouraged Christians to become involved in politics, even to run for office. Today, more and more are doing that successfully.

Of course, it would be a mistake for the African church to swing to the other extreme and “Seek first the political kingdom, and all the rest will be given to you,” as the first president of Ghana urged fol-

In Africa Today

■ In 1900, there were 4 million African Christians and 60 million Muslims. Today 275 million Africans call themselves Christians compared to 129 million Muslims.

■ The largest Christian majorities in Africa live in the southern half of the continent. The following countries, in ascending order, contain between 70 and 92 percent Christian populations: Kenya, Swaziland, South Africa, Burundi, Rwanda, Congo, Lesotho, Gabon, Democratic Republic of Congo (formerly Zaire).

Sources: CHRISTIAN HISTORY (issue 5)
MARC Mission Handbook: 1998–2000

lowing the independence of his country. Politics alone has not brought solutions to the challenges of Africa. In fact, since independence, we have had more problems to deal with than ever before. Our problems ultimately are not economic, but spiritual. If we engage the world from this spiritual perspective, we will maintain a biblical balance of being in the world but not of it.

Not all of our problems are inherited ones. A lesson Christians in Africa could learn from those in America is about how to operate in a democracy. In many African countries today, people vote not necessarily for the best candidates or according to issues, but along tribal lines. If Christians in my country (where 80 percent are Christians) and other countries would rise above these tribalisms, they would make a tremendous difference in Africa.

I believe African Christians must also take an active part in forming democracies that are not defined by the West but by the African context. American-style democracy cannot work in Africa for two reasons. The first is that democracy is expensive. It costs a lot to maintain it, and we cannot afford it in Africa with our current economic situation. The second is that democracy can run well only where people are informed about the issues. We are not trained in democracy. Many people in my country have not even finished primary school. And so they depend on their leaders to decide for them what is good and what is right.

But Africa is a land of great potential. It is a sleeping giant spiritually. My prayer is that we can awaken this giant so that we can be a blessing not only to our own countries but also to others around the world. As Christians, we too are called to make disciples of all nations, both in Africa and abroad. CT

David M. Kasali, 44, is president of the Nairobi Evangelical Graduate School of Theology in Kenya. He holds degrees from the Nairobi Evangelical

Graduate School of Theology and Trinity Evangelical Divinity School in Deerfield, Illinois. E-mail: pnegst@maf.org

BANKRUPTING THE PROSPERITY GOSPEL

"Since the economic crisis, prayer mountains have never been busier."

DAVE BARTHOLOMEW

In recent years, the economy of Asia has been a speeding train, moving full-steam ahead toward modernization. I travel across Asia three months out of the year, and everywhere I go one scene stands out: tall building cranes dotting the skyline. They have become the hallmark of a continent on the move. Everywhere, high-rise apartment buildings are going up next to thatched-roof huts. Businesses are spreading their wings to new and bigger facilities.

The church in Asia has been aboard this speeding train. Especially in countries like South Korea, known as "the Tiger" of Asia, economic prosperity has brought astonishing amounts of material wealth to the church. The faithful keep the coffers full. One very wealthy businessman in Seoul gives up to half of his wealth to the church. I know of an elder who, when his church was embarking on a building program, sold his house and gave the money to the building project.

And the church has something to show for it. At least, outwardly. Churches have not only put up large, impressive sanctuaries, they have purchased whole mountains on which to build discipleship training centers and facilities where people come, day and night, to pray. The South Korean churches, which number among the largest in the world, often build and run their own schools. Recently, churches have even begun to purchase land for cemeteries—something new for the Asian church.

Bong Rin Ro

But now Asia's speeding train has entered a dark tunnel, and many see no light at the end. Long to be remembered as the year of economic bailouts, 1998 finds the East deep in the throes of economic depression. Countries such as South Korea, Indonesia, Thailand, the Philippines, and Malaysia are reeling daily from the devaluation of their currency, nose-diving stock prices, ever-increasing commodity hikes, and growing unemployment. South Korea alone is faced with at least $150 billion in foreign debt. According to a recent article in the Korean Daily Business Newspaper, one billion people in Asia are presently unemployed.

In North Korea, where I grew up, and in South Korea, where I presently live, one is quickly reminded of the early 1950s when our country was still smoldering from the Korean War. Since then, we have known amazing growth and prosperity, but many of us have not forgotten a past when one had to scratch and claw for the next meal. While we are not facing anything like the devastation of war, Asians are clearly shaken—and the church along with it. Amidst this economic gloom, the church is stopping to take stock, to ask itself some tough questions.

n Korea

The mood, especially in South Korea, has turned toward repentance. Listen in on almost any Sunday morning Protestant worship service in the urban areas—where the effects on the church of secularism and materialism are most keenly felt—and you will most likely hear prayers of confession, confession of arrogance and of indifference toward God in the face of affluence. Prayer mountains have never been busier. People are there to plead with God for healing, both spiritual and financial healing. While I have not noticed a particular increase in church attendance since the economic crisis hit South Korea, I have noticed a new fervency in prayer. Churches were calling for special all-night prayer sessions, and attendance in early-morning prayer meetings is on the increase.

It is not altogether surprising that the Asian church is turning toward repentance in the face of economic crisis. In Asian countries of great affluence, such as South Korea, "Prosperity Theology" has long been taught from the pulpits. At its core is this reasoning: The more you give to God, the more he will bless. Forget him, and hard times are bound to come. In South Korea, such thinking reflects a strong shamanistic influence.

As a child, I remember walking by the open door of a house and hearing the

"The South Korean church, with over 5,500 missionaries in more than 100 countries, is scrambling to come up with new ideas of how to continue funding its mission endeavors."

awful wailing of the Mudang woman—a kind of shaman witch doctor—who had been called into a home where there was a crisis. The woman would dance in order to drive out the spirit that had caused the crisis. As the Mudang danced, the members of the family would put money into her pockets. They believed the more money they gave, the more blessings they would receive. Now that the "blessings" are drying up for the Asian Christians, they are beginning to look inward.

For example, the church in South Korea is finally recognizing its materialism and secularism—trends that have been predicted by some who have charted the tremendous church growth in our country during the 1980s. To these ecclesiastical watchdogs it was just a matter of time until the South Korean church would be facing the kinds of things the church in the West is facing. They have been proven right. Decay has set in. Already in 1994, a statistical bulletin put out by the government's Ministry of Information posted a 4 percent decline in church attendance. That decline has continued, and pastors are feeling it at the grassroots level. One pastor of a 6,000-member church in Seoul recently told me his church has experienced a 43 percent decline in giving since the economic crisis became full-blown. That same church has laid off nine of its pastoral staff and cut a number of its projects for the year. Construction on a building project had to be halted for lack of funds.

Since the Asian churches, particularly the churches in South Korea and India, have become sending churches, missionaries have also taken a severe hit in the economic fallout. The South Korean church with over 5,500 missionaries in more than 100 countries, is scrambling to come up with new ideas of how to continue funding its mission endeavors. In November of 1997, the South Korean World Missions Association arranged meetings among the missions executive of South Korea to deal with the critical situation arising from the 100 percent devaluation of the South Korean currency. In January, the same group adopted a strategy that included seven recommendations to its 58 member agencies. Included among the recommendations was one that supporting churches raise 41 to 50 percent more support for each missionary, while the missionary in the field cut living expenses by 50 to 60 percent. They encouraged South Korean missionaries to send their children to local indigenous schools rather than to expensive foreign schools. And the South Korean World Missions Association recommended mission administrators reduce overhead costs and cut back on travel expenses for executives.

Pastors and denominational leaders are also hearing the summons. In the countries of Asia where economic prosperity has flourished, the pastor has also participated in the blessings. A long-time concern stemming from the rapid growth and economic prosperity of the church in South Korea has been the politics of money. Money has been the cancer eating away at integrity within the church. Bribery has been common in church politics. I know of one pastor of a large church who was running for the position of moderator of his denomination. At the annual convention, he paid the hotel bill for key delegates in return for their votes.

The current crisis has also been a reminder to the church about its social responsibility. Many Christian leaders in South Korea have forgotten that the South Korean church has flourished in part because of a document called "The Nevius Papers." In 1890, a British missionary from China, John Nevius, visited South Korea, bringing with him the three indigenous principles of missions upon which the South Korean church was founded: self-support, self-propagation, and self-government. While Nevius made the three principles famous for the South Korean church, another of his principles was that the church should offer help to those in economic need.

After the Korean War in 1950, it was the church that helped pick up the pieces, offering food and clothing to a nation that, basically, had lost everything. While much of the relief came from the West, it was channeled through the churches. The churches came to be known as the place one could go for help. Thousands of South Koreans flocked to the church to fill their empty bowls with rice. In fact, the churches grew so fast during that time that soon their members became known as "rice Christians"—giving rise to the concern about easy believism among the church members of South Korea. Nevertheless, during that time, the church established a strong reputation for its concern for the needy. But in recent years, the church in Asia has, to a great extent, forgotten the widows and the orphans, the underfed, the elderly, unwed mothers, prostitutes. Some have leveled the charge that the churches of South Korea were so busy with their expansionistic plans that they had forgotten people in need.

Because of the crisis, this is beginning to change. The church is calling believers to return to a renewed faith and practice, to a new purity of lifestyle, and to a new financial integrity. Foremost in many church leaders' minds is how to minister to the unemployed. Several churches I know of are making housing available for their members who can no longer afford to pay rent. Churches are setting up committees to plan programs for the unemployed—helping them with such practical matters as writing résumés and preparing for job interviews. Some churches are offering psychological counseling for the unemployed as well.

Recent months have brought a "gold drive" to South Korea, initiated by churches and civic groups. The citizenry was called upon to donate their gold—rings, bracelets, watches—to help pay off the national debt. Pastors announced the drive from their pulpits. Some even took off their gold rings during their sermons and placed them in special baskets. Many churches are sponsoring clothing drives and are recycling appliances and household items among their membership.

In Asia today, where only 8 percent of the 3 billion people claim to be Christians and where the traditional religions of Buddhism, Hinduism, and Islam are prevalent, many non-Christians are asking, "What are the real differences between Christianity and Buddhism?" Now, however, we have a chance to show the world the love and care for the community that has, for centuries, been a hallmark of Christianity.

In my early years, I lived in North Korea. My father died during the Korean War of complications from malnutrition. Before he died, he wrote in his Bible this simple request: "Please return to North Korea some day and establish a church." It has been the goal of my life to go back to North Korea someday and fulfill my father's request.

My story, I believe, represents where the Asian church is today. We are passing through a dark tunnel, but we have not forgotten our heavenly Father's request to build his church. God has chosen the Asian church to proclaim his message of salvation to the nations. Ours is a young church compared to the West's. But it is a strong church, one that I believe will rise to the challenge before it—that of using the current crisis as an opportunity for cleansing and renewal so that it may give itself more diligently than ever before to the task of world evangelization. CT

Bong Rin Ro was interviewed by Ruth Senter, a freelance journalist and a former editor of CAMPUS LIFE magazine, who lives part-time in Seoul, South Korea.

■ Asian evangelicals surpassed the number in North America in about 1987 and in the entire Western world (North America, Europe, and Australia) in 1991.

■ Buddhism and East Asian religions are the majority in Bhutan, Cambodia, Japan, Laos, Myanmar, Sri Lanka, Thailand, and Vietnam. Islam is the majority religion in Afghanistan, Bangladesh, Brunei, Indonesia, Malaysia, Maldives, and Pakistan. Christianity is the majority religion only in the Philippines but is rapidly growing in South Korea, Indonesia, China, and Singapore.

■ In 1949 there were 3 million Catholics and 1.5 million Protestants in China. Today reasonable estimates list 12 million Catholics and 63 million Protestants in the country.

■ In 1980, there were no known Christian believers in Afghanistan and Mongolia. Today these countries have growing churches.

■ The first largely Muslim country to see many Muslims coming to Christ is Indonesia. Some estimate a fifth of the population could be Christian today, though not all of these are of Muslim background.

■ South Korea has the world's largest Pentecostal, Presbyterian, and Methodist congregations as well as the largest theological seminaries. It is also the largest non-Western missionary-sending nation.

Sources: MARC Mission Handbook: 1998–2000; Operation World (1993).

Bong Rin Ro, 63, is academic dean and professor of church history and missions at the Torch Trinity Graduate School of Theology, Seoul, South Korea.

E-mail: ttmkleee@unitel.co.kr

A LIGHT IN BUDDHA'S SHADOW

Sri Lanka

"With no end in sight to the war, we persevere in seeking to be faithful to God."

Ajith Fernando

In the early 1980s, something good happened in the church here. Christians, especially in the newer charismatic churches, began taking the gospel to the rural villages (most Christians lived in the cities), and churches began springing up in areas where there had previously been no Christian witness. Many Buddhists and Hindus came to Christ—something that rarely happened in the past. This evangelistic fervor hit segments of the older mainline churches too, and they began planting churches in non-Christian areas, often creating new structures to accommodate these new churches.

This is a welcome development in a country where the number of Christians has dropped from about 10 percent of the population at the start of this century to 7.5 percent in the early eighties, with Protestants accounting for just 0.7 percent.

This is happening in a context where Buddhism—the religion of 67 percent of the population—is the national religion (though the Hindu, Muslim, and Christian minorities have the freedom to practice and propagate their faith).

There are several reasons for this growth spurt. The first is that Christians began to talk in a new way about practical ways of fulfilling the Great Commission. This reflects the influence of the emphasis of "reaching the unreached" in the great international conferences on evangelization attended by Sri Lankan Christian leaders in the sixties and seventies. Many had been praying for revival in Sri Lanka, and revival came in the form of a revived interest in evangelization. Larger churches have sponsored the starting of daughter churches in unreached areas, and giving toward such missionary activity by Sri Lankan Christians has increased markedly.

A second reason is that this fresh growth of the church coincided with the intensifying of the ethnic conflict in Sri Lanka into a full-blown civil war. About 100,000 people are estimated to have died in the two major conflicts in the past 15 years. In this time of uncertainty and fear, the idea of a supreme God who cares for us and meets our needs has become very attractive to the people. Most non-Christians have come to faith through friends taking them at a time of need to a Christian meeting where needs were prayed for.

A third reason for the recent church growth has been the disillusionment with Buddhism many have felt. After independence there were great expectations that with the country's possession of a pristine which helps them accrue good karma. Thus usually a monk who performs a service is given alms. The result is that alms becomes almost an essential payment if one is to receive their services. This makes it difficult for the poor, who may have to hire a taxi, provide a good meal, and give a gift if they want a monk to come to them. The Christian minister, on the other hand, will go to a place of need and offer his help to alleviate suffering.

Christians have been in the forefront of relief operations in connection with the unrest in Sri Lanka and also in connection with alleviating poverty. This has made the people receptive to the gospel. My wife and I belong to the majority Sinhala race, and over the years we have kept several Hindus from the minority Tamil race in our home during times of tension for the Tamils. I know of at least two of them who are now Christians.

Understandably, the growth of the church has resulted in much opposition to evangelism in the country. There is the constant talk of unethical conversion, where Christians are supposed to be winning converts by bribing them with financial and other inducements. Organizations have been set up to monitor Christian activities and oppose what they call "proselytization" resulting in these "unethical conversions." Attempts are being made to introduce legislation that restricts the freedom of expression of faith "in the interest of religious harmony." The opposition has also taken more violent forms with the torching of as many as 21 churches over the past few years and with assaults on Christian workers.

Some of those who joined the church have reverted to Buddhism as the opposition has intensified. Because of this, we are learning how essential it is that people attracted by the power of God are introduced to the other aspects of God's nature and salvation. Many churches in Sri Lanka seem to be weak in this area. Through ob-form of Buddhism (Theravada Buddhism), Sri Lanka would become the launching ground for a worldwide missionary thrust. But many have become disillusioned with the few numbers of people, even among the clergy, who actually practice the noble ethic of Buddhism.

A fourth reason is the witness and challenge of Christian servanthood. A Hindu journalist for an Indian newspaper attributed three reasons for the rapid growth of the church among the tribal people of India. First, he said, Christian missionaries (usually from South India) go where others don't go—to the most interior parts where these tribal people live. Even government census workers usually make their own estimate of the population living in remote mountain tribal areas without actually visiting the areas. Second, Christian missionaries hand over leadership to the tribal people very soon. And third, Christianity is a cheap religion because it usually costs nothing to receive the services of a Christian "priest," unlike in Hinduism.

These points apply to Sri Lanka equally well. The Buddhist monk is one who has renounced possessions to live on people's charity. But the people regard the giving of alms to a monk as a meritorious act serving the pattern of professed conversion and falling away, I am convinced that while most people come to Christ to meet a personal need, they stay with Christ because they know the gospel is true. After many followers of Christ had left because of his "hard teaching," Peter said that the disciples could not leave him because he had "the words of eternal life" (John 6:68).

Southcen

This lack of teaching of the "whole counsel of God" may also account for evidence of a lack of godliness amongst a significant portion of the leadership of the church. Leaders often leave the group they belong to and join another group when they encounter problems (and there are foreign sponsors who are waiting to grab them as their representatives in Sri Lanka!). It is heartening, however, to see the new churches taking an interest in theological education. This is evidenced by the rapid growth of the four-year-old interdenominational Colombo Theological Seminary here in Sri Lanka.

The difficulties encountered by the church have also been an opportunity for great heroism. Lionel Jayasinghe was a Buddhist monk whose quest for the truth resulted in his becoming a Christian. On completing his studies at Lanka Bible College, he went as an Assemblies of God "missionary" to an unreached area in South Sri Lanka. After the church he started had grown to about 35 converts, he began to get threats that if he didn't stop preaching he would be killed. His brutal murder was witnessed by his wife, sister-in-law, and one-year-old son. Lionel's wife, Lalani, did not leave the area. She stayed on and continued the work even though she has also received death threats. Ten years after Lionel's death, his church has given birth to four other churches with about 1,000 believers in the five churches. The sister-in-law who witnessed the death, with her husband, leads one of these daughter churches in one of the most difficult places in Sri Lanka for doing evangelism.

When the war was raging in the North we asked the Youth for Christ leader there, Suri Williams, to return to the South, where he was originally from, since it was not safe for him and his young family. He replied that he could not leave his people at that time, and he added that, besides, the safest place to be was in the center of God's will.

Arul Anketell was a brilliant young pediatrician who gave up bright prospects for a career in medicine to minister full-time with people in the health-care field. Five years later he lost everything when his house was burned down in a riot. The first time I met him after this incident, I was hoping that I could be a source of comfort and encouragement to him. I left that meeting with a distinct sense that the reverse had happened, and that I had been deeply ministered to!

So amidst the gloom that engulfs our land, with no end in sight to the war and the suffering of the people, we persevere in seeking to be faithful to God. We know that through the frustration and pain God is working out his purposes and answering the prayers that have gone up through several centuries that this beautiful island will indeed be filled with the glory of God. C

Ajith Fernando, 49, is national director of Youth for Christ in Sri Lanka, and the author of the NIV Application Commentary: Acts (Zondervan). A graduate of Fuller Theological Seminary, he was born and raised in Sri Lanka and is an active lay preacher in the Methodist church of Sri Lanka.

ral Asia

“‘You are more Christian than Christ,’ my Hindu friend told me.”

STRIPPING JESUS OF HIS WESTERN GARB

Greetings from your brothers and sisters on the other side of the world, people you will one day meet when we all get to glory.

I am a native of a Southcentral Asian country where many Muslims and Hindus live. I myself, though, was raised by a Christian mother and attended a church that encouraged us to take the gospel to the villages around us. My message has always been and will always be that Jesus is the only Son of God and the only way to the Father. I believe that with all my heart. But in my experience of sharing Jesus with those of different religions, I have learned something that I think Christians in the Western church should take to heart as well: it is not Christianity we have to offer, but Jesus himself.

I remember the first time I heard a Muslim man read the passage of Jesus' birth from the Qur'an. It hit me that there was a lot about Jesus in the Qur'an that I could agree with, which meant there was a lot a Muslim could share with my view of Jesus. With my evangelical theological training, though, I was predisposed to throw out all things Muslim, regardless of the good in them or of the potential bridge they might provide for witnessing to our Lord. This posture led many believers in Jesus in my country into absurd practices, such as our young women getting married in white dresses when the only women in my country who wear white are widows.

A childhood friend of mine who is Hindu and who had risen to an important government post once told me, "The problem with you Christians is you're more Christian than Christ." I began to see there was a lot of truth to that. We were, in fact, far too judgmental. I began to see the reality that if we would just lift Jesus up, he would draw all people to himself.

Soon after this realization I was given a dramatic reminder of its truth. I was sitting in my office in the city when a man came in and asked me, "Do you have any other book about Jesus other than John's Gospel?" Knowing from his dress and his language what part of the country he was from, I was sure there was no Christian witness there. I replied, "Sure! But how did you find out about John's Gospel?"

"One of our people was traveling here," he said, "and when he came back, he brought this book about Jesus with him." In his village in the evening, people gather around and somebody who is literate will read whatever he has gotten his hands on—perhaps a month-old newspaper or some comic book. To make a long story short, the reading of the Gospel of John touched this man I met, and he had accepted Jesus as his Savior. And in God's sense of humor, the person who had read aloud that tract of John was the Hindu priest of the village temple—not an ordained, theologically trained minister of the gospel. It reminded me that it is the message, not the messenger, that counts. That message is Jesus. It's not, "Forgive me, Christianity." It's not, "Forgive me, my denomination." It's not, "Forgive me, my home church." It is Jesus alone.

When the movie The Last Temptation of Christ came out, Christians made a small protest against it, but the only countries in the world where today that movie is legally banned—because of its blasphemy against Jesus Christ—are in the Islamic world. This reverence for Jesus provides me with a natural starting point for sharing the gospel. I begin by asking what the Qur'an teaches about Jesus. Muslims answer that "He's a prophet." When I ask what kind of prophet he was, they explain that he's a prophet like all the other prophets and that the Qur'an teaches them not to discriminate among the prophets. But then I point out that the Qur'an also teaches Jesus was miraculously born without a father and that he was born at God's command while all the other prophets had a physical father—so the Qur'an itself is discriminating.

Their strongest objection comes next: the Qur'an does not teach the Christian blasphemy that he was the Son of God. How then, I ask, does the Qur'an describe Jesus? I ask this knowing the Qur'an goes so far as to say Jesus was the "essence" and "breath of God."

After hearing this discussion one day, a government official stood up and said to the group, "We know there is a division between Christianity and Islam over Jesus being the Son of God. The more I come to know Jesus, however, the more I see him as being God. If he is the breath and essence of God, that means he is God." That's what it is all about: to help somebody come to the position that is not the "Christian viewpoint" or the "Islamic viewpoint," but the Jesus viewpoint.

Today, because of the faithful witness of local believers over the years, I'm happy to say that in the Parliament of my country and of several surrounding countries there are Parliament members who meet together weekly to study the Word and to pray. Naturally speaking, this could never have happened, for sociologically they are Muslims, Hindus, and Buddhists. But the barriers society and religion have built between them, Jesus has torn down. They are followers of Jesus Christ. Please remember these brothers and sisters in your prayers.

By an Asian Christian who wishes to remain anonymous.

JESUS CAN STILL MEAN JAIL

The plight of Vietnam's 700,000 evangelical Christians.

The crime scene was a simple village school in central Vietnam's Quang Ngai Province. The time was late 1997. A group of 12-year-old children were talking about a teacher from a nearby village who had come and told them stories about Jesus. Some of the children had decided to become Christians, and they began telling others about their discovery—until one of the teachers reported this “dangerous” activity to the local police. The police gathered the offending children and told them that they must stop talking about this “foreign superstition.”

Though subdued for a couple of days, the children soon resumed their “Jesus talk.” It wasn’t long before the police again showed up at the school and picked out the three “ringleaders.” These children were taken to a police camp and held incommunicado for a full week. The pleas of their parents for their immediate release fell on deaf ears.

When the children were released, they told how they were deprived of food and water for long periods of time, had been interrogated for hours, were pressed to reveal the identity of the teacher who had told them the stories, and had been lectured about the stupidity of the superstitions they believed. The boy who most resisted the questioning had had his head held under water in the toilet until he almost drowned. The families of the children were told that because their children had persisted in the religious faith, they would never be permitted to attend the public school again.

This event is not an isolated one, particularly in Quang Ngai Province, where it is often dangerous to be a Christian. Compared to the oppressive first decade of Communist rule beginning in the mid-1970s, the situation for people of all faiths has improved in Vietnam. Vietnam’s growing community of evangelical Protestants, now estimated at 700,000 believers, is four times the size of what it was only 23 years ago, in 1975, when Communists took control of all of Vietnam. The most remarkable growth has been among minority tribes. At least 120,000 Hmong along the Chinese border have become Christians in the last decade. Yet widespread harassment and abuses persist, from remote mountain villages to the big cities of Hanoi and Ho Chi Minh City (Saigon). The following list of religiousliberty abuses from just the last two years document this continuing persecution:

- At least nine Christian leaders are in prison, some serving three-year sentences and others languishing for months without formal charges or trials. Many more Christian leaders among Vietnam’s minorities, whose names are difficult to obtain, have been arrested and detained by security forces for various periods of time and often under horrible conditions.

- Church buildings are still being confiscated. A church in Thanh My in Lam Dong Province was bulldozed in December 1997. Currently the Evangelical Church of Vietnam in Ho Chi Minh City is appealing an action of the city’s People’s Committee to confiscate its valuable An Dong property.

- In Gia Lay, Kon Tum, Christian members of a minority group being relocated because of a government dam project were alone excluded from an offer of new land and new homes. In other locations, Christians in minority tribes are denied access to the public water supplies in their villages—specifically because they are Christians.

Vietnam

- Worship services in Vietnam's more than one thousand house churches are routinely "busted" by security police. The leaders and the homeowners are levied heavy fines—often in excess of $100. There is no guaranteed freedom of assembly, even though Vietnam's laws permit meetings of up to 20 people in homes. Christian literature is routinely seized in these raids, including Bibles with the official government imprimatur.

- Two pastors of the "open" churches, who have led their congregations' churches for 15 and 17 years, may be forced to leave them because their residence papers are said to be out of order.

- In the last 22 years, authorities have permitted only one class of 13 students to take a pastoral training course. Other than that small exception, no theological schools have been permitted. No ordinations are permitted. Any training of church leaders must be done in ways not visible to the public and the authorities.

- In northern Vietnam, leaders of the only church body in Vietnam with legal recognition, the Hanoi-based 20-congregation Evangelical Church of Vietnam, are being visited by representatives of the Bureau of Religious Affairs and the police. The church leaders have been asked about their thoughts on the need of holding another church conference (the last one permitted was nine years ago) and about who should be the next leader to succeed the Reverend Bui Hoanh Thu, the long-time and pliable leader who died last year.

Similarly, in southern Vietnam, authorities are trying to recruit a leader for the Evangelical Church of Vietnam to replace the seriously ailing 98-year-old Reverend Ong van Huyen. Eight preconditions are presented to candidates. One person who has seen the conditions says that they clearly require compromises unacceptable to evangelical believers. If a leader cannot be found, there is little hope the authorities will allow the organization to resume normal operations or hold annual conferences to choose leaders.

These are all reasons to pray—and to advocate appropriately—for religious freedom for the church in Vietnam. The story of the church in Vietnam is one of growth in spite of suffering. Anyone who has visited the church in person comes away humbled by the courageous faith of Christians in the midst of hardship. Theirs is a story to challenge and inspire all believers. CT

This report was first given on World Evangelical Fellowship's Religious Liberty E-mail Conference. The author, a long-time missionary to Vietnam, wishes to remain anonymous.

"We are a forgotten faithful, but not by the Lord."

West Bank

SQUEEZED BY WARRING MAJORITIES

An Arab Christian community has existed in this land since the Day of Pentecost (see Acts 2). Palestine and much of the Middle East were predominantly Christian during the Byzantine era. In spite of 2,000 years of wars and unrest, we see the faithfulness of the Lord in keeping for himself a living witness here.

By some estimates, the number of Arab Christians in the entire Middle East is 16 million, less than 7 percent of the total Arabic population. We are a forgotten faithful, but not by the Lord. An important head of state, also a Muslim, once put it this way: "It is important to keep the Arab Christians in the Middle East; they are the glue that holds the community together."

In the Holy Land, the situation is more precarious, with the percentage of Palestinian Christians today being less than 2 percent. This is a tragic drop from 17 percent at the turn of the century.

As a Christian who was born in the Holy Land and who can trace my ancestors back several hundred years, I don't feel that this land is only mine. People of all nationalities have deep spiritual, historical, and emotional ties to this land—the cradle of Christianity and Judaism. Pilgrims come from all parts of the world to walk in the footsteps of Jesus, to see the empty tomb, and to revitalize their faith in their Lord and Savior.

Bishara Awad

A colorful spectrum of churches comprises the Palestinian Christians in the Holy Land. Members of the historical churches—namely, the Greek Orthodox, Greek Catholic, Syrian Orthodox, Coptic Orthodox, and Latin Catholic—take pride in tracing their heritage back to the earliest church. Their monasteries, cathedrals, and churches stand as a physical timeline of their faithfulness to the Christian witness. In addition, the Protestant and evangelical churches are making their impact in this land. Most of these churches were started in the eighteenth century by Western missionaries. Baptists, Pentecostals, Nazarenes, Missionary Alliance, and other evangelicals work together as if they are one congregation. Their small numbers and the great challenges facing them draw them to each other as they serve their one Lord.

In keeping with the example set before them by the first church, Palestinian Christians have always been on the forefront in providing charitable relief to the needy. In 1948, an estimated 750,000 Palestinians were forced out of their homeland and became refugees. Today, 20 refugee camps are home to over a million people. All Palestinians, both Christians and Muslims are restricted to tiny areas of land within the West Bank. This continues to have devastating effects upon the Palestinian economy. Palestinian Christians, in cooperation with the church worldwide, are working to alleviate this suffering.

The church's influence is also felt through the spiritual encouragement it brings to the surrounding communities. Presently, under the Palestinian National Authority, the church has many opportunities to present the good news to the lost. Palestinian Christians freely distribute Christian literature, hold Bible studies, do correspondence courses, and advertise in the local papers. On several occasions, the Jesus film has been broadcast in prime time on Palestinian public television. Recently, in Bethlehem, an evangelical church was allowed to begin broadcasting Christian programs from its own local radio station. Soon the same church will have its own Christian television station. We praise God for these and many other opportunities. We see this as a clear signal that under the Palestinian Authority freedom of religious expression is tolerated—which is quite the opposite of rumors that the Palestinian Authority is persecuting Christians.

DAVE BARTRUFF

Nonetheless, the church in the Holy Land has not escaped the suffering brought about from nearly a century of political and economic unrest. The growth and outreach of the church is severely hampered by the ongoing conflict between the Palestinians and Israelis. On top of this, the Jewish and Muslim majorities, by their sheer numbers, are gradually squeezing out any Christian presence here, making the church very vulnerable and susceptible to changing political winds.

Another believing community in the Holy Land is the Messianic Jews. God is doing a great work among them, too, and the number of Messianic assemblies is growing. Some estimates report the number of Messianic Jews to be approximately 3,000. Like the Palestinians, they have their own congregations and institutions. Palestinian Christians praise the Lord for these brothers and sisters in Christ. It is not easy for them to express their faith openly. Israeli monitoring organizations have been set up to track their mission activities, and attempts are being made in the Israeli Knesset to pass legislation making it illegal for them to possess Christian literature or to evangelize.

Unless the world understands the precariousness of this remnant of faithful believers—Palestinian and Jewish—who are determined to keep the gospel light shining, pilgrims to this land of promise may visit our shrines and churches yet never meet a local Christian. Christians here believe that despite the darkness of the hour there is still hope for the Middle East, for Palestine/Israel. Why? Because God's people, those redeemed by the blood of Jesus, are still here.

The church of Jesus Christ in the Holy Land needs the prayers and support of its brothers and sisters in the West. Our churches have taken the Great Commission to heart. They have planted churches in different parts of the land. Some have their own institutions and schools. Without their influence, Christianity in the Holy Land would be nearly extinct.

It is unfortunate that some Christians from the West believe God gave the land solely to the Jewish people. The resident Arab population, Christians and Muslims, are dismissed as trespassers or a stumbling block to the fulfillment of prophecies.

Very soon the church in Bethlehem and the rest of Palestine will celebrate a new millennium. The challenge facing the church for the year 2000 and beyond is how to be a catalyst of Christ's love, peace, hope, and renewal. As the church moves forward in proclaiming the true faith by word and deed, may the eyes of the world be drawn to the Middle East—not, we pray, to view clashes between warring parties, but to behold afresh the miracle of God incarnate in the lives of dedicated disciples. Then, from Bethlehem and Jerusalem, Christ, the Savior of the world, may once again be lifted up and glorified. CI

Bishara Awad, 59, is founder (in 1979) and president of Bethlehem Bible College in the West Bank. In 1948 he and his Palestinian family became refugees. That same year he lost his father to a stray bullet during the fighting surrounding Israel's statehood. Since 1972, Awad has been a leader among the evangelical churches in Jerusalem and Bethlehem. He currently attends the East Jerusalem International Baptist Church. Bethlehem Bible College is located on Hebron Road and welcomes visitors. E-mail: bethbc@planet.edu

WRESTLING WITH SUCCESS

"Pastors want more people, and if a strategy works—regardless if it is biblical or not—it is used."

Antonio Carlos Barro

Adult evangelical Christians in Brazil still remember what a stigma it was to be known as a crente (a believer). We were considered stupid, poor, and backward. People openly disliked us. But not any longer. We have left our underprivileged status behind us. Today we count soccer players, artists, business people, politicians, and high-society people among our ranks. Sophisticated convention centers and five-star hotels serve as our meeting centers. Weekly magazines cover the evangelical presence in society.

Much of this has come through the sheer numbers we have attracted into our churches in the last two decades, though precise numbers are difficult to come by. Some figures say evangelicals make up 20 percent of Brazil's population of 160 million people. A 1996 census, however, put the evangelical figure at 10.95 percent.

At any rate, the growth of the Protestant church has attracted attention—including that of the Vatican in this historically Catholic country. Pope John Paul II has visited Brazil twice (in 1980 and 1997). What worries him is the growth of Pentecostalism, which has begun to threaten the hegemony of the Catholic church here. Still, as Leonardo Boff, a prominent Catholic spokesman, declares, "The growth of the evangelical church is based on its own merit, due to the fact that they are more organized and closer to the Brazilian reality."

The major evangelical denomination here is the Assemblies of God, which claims a membership of more than 10 million. Other major denominations include Universal Church of God's Kingdom, Christian Congregation, Four Square Gospel, and many other Pentecostal churches. Baptists and Lutherans rank the highest of non-Pentecostal evangelical churches.

The Universal Church of God's Kingdom deserves special attention. It is a ten-year-old church, born in Brazil with no help from outside. Under the leadership of a self-proclaimed bishop, the church has grown from a small group to 3 million members today (yes, in one decade!). It is now established in major cities around the world, where it buys theaters and movie houses for its meeting places (paying as high as $6 million for one). It owns the third-largest TV station as well as countless radio stations in Brazil. The church is even creating a political party, called the Social Action Party, with the intention to launch its leader, Edir Macedo, for president in 2002. The church already has six representatives in the Congress.

However, many of the practices of this church are denounced by other evangelicals. Some of its preachers encourage people to give all they have in order to be blessed. Television evangelists instruct viewers to place a cup of water on their TV sets, which they then bless and urge listeners to drink in order to be healed. Some sell anointed oil for similar healing purposes. The Brazilian Evangelical Association has issued a statement alerting Christians against such practices.

Of course, the Universal Church of God's Kingdom does not hold a monopoly on problems here. One of my greatest concerns is that almost all growing churches in my country are sold out to prosperity theology (the belief that God will reward the faithful with material blessings). In a land where poverty is rampant, high unemployment and bankruptcy are everywhere, and the health system is inadequate, it is no surprise that people flock to churches and crusades that promise all kinds of cures and blessings from God.

The numerical growth of members has all too often become a primary goal. Pastors want more people, and if a strategy works—regardless if it is biblical or not—it is used. And little reflection is given to what kind of Christianity we are producing. This has placed a tremendous burden upon those who refuse to employ such strategies, especially when these pastors are accused of not being anointed by the Holy Spirit. When pastors do address biblical issues of suffering and identification with Christ on the cross, they see many people leave to attend churches that offer what they are looking for.

Because of prosperity theology, some look on the poor as a curse ("If the thousands living in the shantytowns in our major cities would just believe . . ."); whereas the poor present the greatest mission field in our country. Another neglected group is our native Indian population, whose numbers have plummeted from around 6 million in 1500, when Brazil was colonized by Portugal, to 242,206 today. While 131 out of 243 tribes have no evangelical missionary presence, it is very hard to raise money to send missionaries to our own Indian tribes. The missionary work and Bible translation being done among them is usually the work of foreign missionaries.

It remains to be seen how the church in Brazil will react if times of persecution, severe economic depression, or political oppression should come. On the one hand, we have high hopes for the church and that Brazil will become a major launching ground for worldwide missions. On the other hand, we hope that the church will become a strong voice in our society against the maladies and injustices of our land. We pray that the church will grow in maturity and be a witness to our society of the signs of the kingdom of God. CT

In Latin America Today

■ Nearly 40 percent of all members of the world's Pentecostal denominations are in Latin America.

■ The largest percentages of Protestants (a term used interchangeably with "evangelical" in Latin America) are in Chile (28), Guatemala (24), El Salvador (20), Brazil (19), Nicaragua (18), Panama (17), Honduras (11), Costa Rica (11), Bolivia (9), and Argentina (8).

■ Though the evangelical presence is strong throughout most of Latin America, pockets of large immigrant communities remain mostly untouched. These include 109,000 Japanese and 100,000 Chinese in Peru; 110,000 Arabs in Venezuela; 1 million Arabs and 500,000 Jews in Argentina; 1.2 million Japanese and 160,000 Arabs in Brazil; and 400,000 Arabs and 53,000 Gypsies in Mexico.

Sources: Operation World (1993); MARC Mission Handbook: 1998-2000

Brazil

Antonio Carlos Barro, 44, is the founding president of the South American Theological Seminary in Londrina, Brazil, and pastor of Eighth Presbyterian Church in the same city. A native of Brazil, he is a graduate of Fuller Theological Seminary. E-mail: acbarro@sercomtel.com.br

Mexico

OUT OF THE SALT SHAKER

"The evangelical church is steadily becoming a visible presence in Mexican society."

For nearly 400 years, the evangelical faith and the study of the Bible were prohibited here. As early as the mid-sixteenth century, Lutherans who had come with the Spanish conquerors suffered persecution, and the Holy Inquisition was in force in Mexico longer than in many other countries. Eventually, under President Benito Juárez (1806–72), a growing reaction to the Catholic church's power led the government to enact anticlerical legislation, which remained in force until this decade and declared the following restrictions: (1) No church could legally own property; (2) foreigners could not serve as priests or pastors; (3) worship services should be held exclusively in temples or churches, not in public buildings; (4) clergy could not directly or indirectly criticize government authorities; (5) clergy could not vote or participate in politics; (6) mass media should not be used to promote religion; and (7) government leaders supposedly should never participate in religious ceremonies.

But in the early 1990s, President Carlos Salinas de Gortari succeeded in reforming the Constitution. As a result, any religious association may now bring in foreign missionaries or pastors provided they are officially affiliated with the church they serve, have their financial support guaranteed for the duration of their service, and fulfill the requirements of the laws of immigration (which are liberally applied). Compare this to the time when foreign missionaries ministered for decades by returning as "tourists."

Juan M. Isáis

Also, churches now can hold evangelistic campaigns or healing services in public places. Recently, for example, an evangelical group conducted a Communion service at the Monument to the Mexican Revolution of 1910 in Mexico City. Several large rallies with foreign evangelists have been held in the Plaza of the Constitution. And it is no longer uncommon to see open-air meetings where thousands of people pray, sing, and even take offerings in public.

However, Catholic persecution and hostility against evangelicals persists in many parts of the country. In Chiapas, more than 30,000 evangelical Indians have been expelled from their homes, property, and schools and now live as refugees. In 1990, I was part of a group of 160 evangelicals in Mexico City who had climbed a mountain south of the city to hold an all-night prayer meeting. Thousands of Catholics were incited by a local priest, Ernesto Pérez, to chase us on foot for more than five kilometers. We were hit with stones, clubs, metal bars and even guns. As the women tried to flee through cornfields, they were threatened with rape. One young medical doctor was struck on her legs by machete 13 times. Hundreds of police arrived in time to save us. One police officer told us, "Pray to your God, because these people obey no laws. If God does not hear you, none of us will get out of this alive." Later, 20 of those police officers were converted to Christ.

Still, the Catholic church is showing a spirit of better cooperation with the government and even with evangelical leaders. There is a clearer separation of church and state. And even though not always enforced, these laws are now on the books.

One hidden blessing that came with the many decades of religious restriction was that the Mexican evangelical church developed its own strong and health national leadership. Our leaders are conservative in theology and practice but express a strong social consciousness. While precise data are not available, reasonable estimates are that in 1970 all non-Catholics numbered fewer than 1 million, in 1980 more than 2 million, in 1990 perhaps 7 million. Some sources say that non-Catholics today represent 17 percent of the population. The State Department lists nearly 6,000 religious associations, 75 percent of them Protestant, and of those more than 60 percent are Pentecostals, who formerly represented the poorer segments of society but today include many professionals and middle or upper classes. Charismatic evangelicals have the largest buildings while their ministers tend to be younger. Their worship services and systems of leadership are similar to the Willow Creek Community Church model in the Chicago area. Some are following the model of the Toronto Blessing.

LIFELINE MINISTRIES

The evangelical church is steadily becoming a visible presence in Mexican society. An interdenominational Christian choir called Amen has sung in important concert halls, often accompanied by symphony orchestras. Most news media have evangelicals on staff. There are three Protestant universities in the country. An interdenominational group is in the process of starting the first evangelical university in Mexico City. Christian camps show a strong presence. And after long years when Christian radio was forbidden, the airwaves today broadcast numerous gospel programs—though Christian stations as such are not yet allowed.

At the political level, almost all the parties have evangelicals among their leaders. In Mexico City, Maria de los Angeles Moreno, of Baptist background, has been a senator, president of the Congress, member of the presidential cabinet, and national president of her political party. Pablo Salazar Mendicuea, a member of the Church of the Nazarene, was secretary of state in Chiapas and is now a senator and member of the Commission of Good Will and Pacification, the group attempting to mediate an end to the religious conflict in that important state. Another evangelical Christian is Pablo Monzalvo, a former director of some 20,000 auxiliary police, who teaches in the national university and leads a charismatic congregation. For better or worse, most political parties now seek a better relationship with evangelicals through contacts with their leaders and through organizations such as the Mexican Evangelical Fellowship (CONE-MEX), which played an important part in the reformation of the Constitution.

While everything is not rose colored here, Mexico is changing for the better. I am encouraged. We have more liberty for evangelism and the practice of our faith than ever before.

CI

Juan M. Isáis, 72, is director of Latin America Mission of Mexico and publisher of Prisma, an evangelical Mexican magazine. He has served as a missionary in Mexico, Central America, and New York City and was president of the Mexican Evangelical Fellowship. E-mail: milamex@compuserve.com

Which Part of the GREAT CO

Much has been made in recent years of the fact that the church in the Third World has taken on the mantle of missions instead of simply being its recipient. I would like to issue a challenge to the North American church to regain the evangelistic fervor so evident among many Third World Christians. As the apostle Paul put it, let us follow them as they follow Christ.

Luis Palau

My recent crusades at El Paso-Juárez (Texas/Mexico) and Bristol, England, showed me the sharp contrast that exists in the level of evangelistic energy within the evangelical church. Great hope and a sense of thrill grip the church in Latin America (including the many Hispanics of El Paso-Juárez). Pastors are preaching the pure gospel without apology. Laypeople share their faith with authority.

In North America and Europe, however, I find that while there is much discussion about evangelism, real evangelism is hard to detect. "There simply isn't the same enthusiasm for evangelism there was ten years ago," Anthony Bush, the mission chairman for the crusades in Bristol, told me. Unlike the El Paso experience of revival, Britain greeted us with empty, frigid cathedrals that serve as little more than museums of long-ago revivals. For all but a small percentage of the people in Britain and Western Europe, Christianity is ancient history, not a living relationship.

As an evangelist, I measure the pulse of the church by its evangelistic fervor. Church historian Kenneth Scott Latourette writes that throughout its history, "the primary emphasis of the Church was upon the salvation of the individual for eternal life." Charles H. Spurgeon, the great nineteenth-century British preacher, believed that "the work of conversion is the first and great thing we must drive at; after this we must labor with all our might." And John Wesley reminded preachers, "You have nothing to do but to save souls."

The evangelical Christians of North America cheerfully pay any amount to go to a concert. They fill the civic center for worship sessions and even intercessory spiritual-warfare conventions. But when it comes to face-to-face warfare, which is talking to people kindly but directly about their need for Christ, suddenly the numbers diminish. In too many churches the response to the challenge to proclaim the gospel to their city is, "Why should we be doing this?" and "This is expensive."

I thank God for the continuing health and strength he is giving to Billy Graham. I thank God for the wonderful evangelistic work of Franklin Graham, Greg Laurie, and many other young evangelists, some of whom are partners with us in the Next Generation AllianceSM. The ministries of Alpha, March for Jesus, Prison Fellowship, Promise Keepers, and Willow Creek Association advance the kingdom of God around the world. Everywhere I go I meet Christians who gave their lives to Jesus Christ after hearing the gospel on radio or viewing Campus Crusade's Jesus film. The growing interest in revival, prayer, and fast-

Don't Y

Kenya

Bulgaria

MISSION

ing, spurred on in North America by Joe Aldrich, Bill and Vonette Bright, David Bryant, Evelyn Christenson, Ed Silveso, and others is truly a great thing.

But the church must match those efforts with a vision for evangelism that confronts millions upon millions of people with the gospel in every generation. In the West, only small fires of passion for evangelism are lit, not the conflagration that ensures fulfilling the Great Commission. If the church does not take seriously its responsibility to evangelize, to whom does the Lord entrust this priority? The world has experts for everything else of concern to our churches, but the church alone is an expert in evangelism.

Gone "fishing" or golfing?

A few years ago the missions committee of a large church notified the various mission agencies it had been supporting that they were cutting their giving by as much as 50 percent. Paraphrased, the letter said, "Giving is down. May God provide for your needs." In the same envelope, however, was the church's weekly bulletin. One announcement caught my attention: "The pastor and 20 men in the church will be leaving this week with their wives for a golf tournament in the Bahamas." Was I wrong to conclude that in this church hitting and chasing a little white ball was a greater priority than missionary evangelistic ministry?

In the Spanish-speaking world, the church is showing its evangelistic priority through missions. Argentina, Brazil, and other nations in Latin America have joined Asian nations, such as South Korea, Hong Kong, and Singapore, as missionary-sending nations. The division between missionary-sending and missionary-receiving nations has been obliterated. "From all nations to all nations" is happening.

My colleague James M. Williams, who directs our Latin American ministries, recently returned from El Salvador where a church welcomed home a couple who are planting seeds of the gospel in an Arab country. In fact, many Latin Americans are being sent to the Middle East. As I discovered earlier this year in Cairo, there is a cultural affinity among Latin and Arabic peoples.

Called to cities and children

This transnational movement gives me hope for America's cities, which are a ripe mission field. The national majority in America, the Anglo-Saxons, must overcome its fear of the city, where minorities—African Americans, Asian Americans, and Hispanics—are the majority. America's cities are the target of political action, social action, and all sorts of government programs with good intentions, but most of the ruling

?

Do You Understand ?

people, which include those in middle- and upper-class churches, have no idea how to relate to minorities spiritually.

The cities need missionaries and the boldness they bring—a sense of purpose and clear-cut commitment. We should have the same missionary purpose in our own culture. We ought to be just as bold and courageous and unashamed in confronting our neighborhood and our city with the claims of Christ. But it seems to be much harder.

A second ripe—but often overlooked—mission field is children. There are a hundred million abandoned children around the world. Yes, we must feed them and educate them, but we must also win them to Jesus Christ. For 34 years Colleen Redit, a doctor and a single woman from New Zealand, has labored on behalf of abandoned and orphaned children in Madras, India, where more than a third of the population is homeless. Redit herself is mother to 15 or more children at any given time. She supervises educational, nutritional, and vocational programs at the overcrowded Haven of Hope mission, where several hundred young women and teenage girls discover a future. But in the midst of all these vital programs, Redit always makes “the main thing the main thing,” helping children to put their trust in Jesus. On every visit to the mission, it is beautiful to see the beauty of the Lord Jesus in their lives.

Dreaming of Jesus

This evangelistic fervor of which I am speaking is sometimes found in the most unlikely places. I have hope for the Arab world because there is such a stirring among Christians there to reach out in love and respect while clearly inviting others to follow Jesus as the crucified and resurrected Savior and Lord. The Arab world is in a state of deep-seated change. There is a growing hunger to know God. Pastor Menes Abdul Noor of Kasr El-Dobara Evangelical Church in Cairo, where I preached the gospel this past March, told me he talks individually to a hundred searching people every month. Quietly, great numbers of women and young people are coming to Christ.

And where Christians like Noor are moving ahead in faith, God seems to have prepared the hearts of those they are reaching. Every Arabic Christian I have talked to who converted to Christ from a non-Christian background relates a dream or vision in which Jesus, dressed in white as in the Transfiguration, speaks directly to them, telling them he is the Savior of the world. A woman whose father is a top leader in her nation—a nation where there are no church buildings—was converted through a dream in which Jesus revealed himself. The first five years of her Christian life she didn't even have a Bible.

Christians in the Middle East, many of whom are respected professionals with postgraduate degrees, expect God to work in this way. They believe in his supernatural intervention. If God is God, he is going to do supernatural things. No barriers can thwart or frustrate God's redemptive plan. Who could have imagined that Marxism would collapse overnight? But God made it happen. I believe something just as unthinkable will happen to the resistance to the gospel in the Arab world. Already I sense a momentum from God in the Middle East that no one will be able to stop. The gospel still meets strong resistance—in some cases, violent resistance—but I believe that within the next 20 years that is going to change. I am persuaded of this by faith and by Scripture, which says God the Savior wants “all men to be saved and to come to a knowledge of the truth.” God will work events, as Isaiah 46 says, so that his purposes will be accomplished. I look forward to the day when I will preach in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, or Tehran, Iran.

When the door opens, let us be ready to take advantage. After World War II General MacArthur called for ten thousand missionaries to Japan. But after ten years, hundreds—not thousands—had gone. By then the doors began to shut. In Japan today, only 2 percent of the population claims to be Christian.

The relative recent openness of the People's Republic of China is another fact that ought to give us hope. Although there are pockets of religious oppression and need for more freedom, compared to 20 years ago the freedom is enormous. The number of Christians worshipping there is so high that I can foresee in China a similar collapse of the Marxist ideology that we saw in the Soviet Union. The change could be even more pronounced because so many overseas Chinese have been converted to Christ. Along with seminary-trained pastors and biblically knowledgeable lay leaders, thousands of successful businesspeople in the churches of Hong Kong, Singapore, and Taiwan are eager to take the gospel back into China.

Climbing through open windows

Though Christians in the Third World must address their own weaknesses—many practice intense evangelism but lack a biblically grounded and reasoned understanding of Christian doctrine—they also present a living challenge to those of us who have lost our evangelistic fervor in a secular culture that values toleration and denounces confrontation. The overwhelming sense I have as I travel is that we live in a time of great opportunity. We must go on saturating the nations with pure, simple evangelism and solid Bible exposition while these opportunities last. For they will pass, as history teaches us. In some now-open areas, persecution is rising, and already evangelism is becoming much more difficult.

It was wonderful to see Christians in Western nations pouring into the former Soviet Union and Eastern Europe with Bibles and the gospel when the window (it was hardly a door) opened, even though criticism—some unfair—was launched against this activity. As someone who has lived in a nation under dictatorship and who reads church history, I think this was one of the best moments in world missions. Far better that we are berated for perceived excesses of evangelizing the once-closed countries of Eastern Europe than miss the opportunity altogether.

Our world is in flux. Large populations and ethnic groups are moving from country to country, region to region, city to city. According to missiologist Donald McGavran, such times of transition provide the best moments to lead people to God through Jesus Christ. My prayer is that the church of North America would once again awaken to the Great Commission Christ gave us. Let it begin today with the unsaved around us and then move on to the many lost throughout our world. Now is the moment—perhaps a unique moment in history that may not return for several hundred years. Let us press on.

CT

Born in Argentina, international evangelist Luis Palau, 63, has proclaimed the gospel to 13 million people through crusades in 67 countries.

He is president of the Luis Palau Evangelistic Association, based in Portland, Oregon. E-mail: luis@palau.org

The next great leap

for equipping church leaders

is really a

step back.

Back to the way Jesus himself
equipped and trained the 12.

Smelly fishing boats. Dusty streets. Windblown hillsides. Not much of a campus! But the student body of 12 sure learned the secrets of effective ministry. At Denver Seminary, we're following the example of the Master Professor with an emphasis on hands-on learning directed by experienced mentors. Learn more about the seminary education with an innovative approach to knowing, being and doing. We borrowed it from the best!

Take the leap.

DENVER SEMINARY

1-800-922-3040 Ext. 278
P.O. Box 10,000

e-mail: admit@densem.edu
Denver, CO 80250

www.gospelcom.net/densem/

JOIN US IN OVERCOMING THE OBSTACLES

Help reach the world for Christ through a partnership with Moody Aviation. For more than fifty years Moody Aviation, a ministry of Moody Bible Institute, has been training dedicated men and women to use aviation as a means of spreading the gospel throughout the world. In fact, more than half of all missionary aviators currently serving worldwide are graduates of Moody Aviation.

Missionary aviators meet the needs of mission organizations around the globe—carrying personnel, Bibles, food, medicine, and emergency supplies. They play a key role in taking the gospel throughout the world, a vision we know you share.

Join a worldwide network of friends....When individuals such as yourself financially and prayerfully support the training at Moody Aviation, lives are changed for Christ!

For more information, please contact a Moody Aviation representative at:

MOODY AVIATION
820 N. La Salle Blvd.
Chicago, IL 60610

OR, CALL TOLL-FREE:

1-800-DL MOODY

(3 5 6 - 6 6 3 9)

Of all the reasons not to drink and drive, getting special rates on your insurance is the least important.

The Guidant Insurance Group is proud to exclusively offer Responsible Choice auto insurance to people who don't drive impaired by alcohol.

By becoming a Responsible Choice policyholder, you join thousands of other Guidant customers with similar values. To join the fight to eliminate the epidemic of drinking and driving, call 1-888-218-8561.

Valuing Customers As Partners

Formerly Preferred Risk

1-888-218-8561
www.guidantinsurance.com

© 1999, Guidant Insurance Group, Inc. All rights reserved.

Cloaked in Mystery

Q:

What's the significance of the Shroud of Turin?

—Ron Lee, Carol Stream, Illinois

Those who believe it is Jesus' shroud point to features on it that seem unique to Jesus' death, including pathological ones.

A: Do we have the very cloth that wrapped Jesus' body when God raised him from the dead? For many Christians, that potential tangible connection to the greatest moment of history drives them to fascination with—even devotion to—the Shroud of Turin. The shroud (pictured here) is a centuries-old piece of linen that measures 14'3" by 3'7". Visible down the length of the fabric is a double, front-and-back likeness of a man apparently reposed in death. He has suffered injuries associated with crucifixion: a beaten face, freely bleeding head lacerations, more than 100 whipping wounds, punctured wrists and feet, as well as a bloody wound in the side of the chest.

For one week in Turin, Italy, in 1978, about three dozen researchers and assistants took thousands of photographs and x-rays and collected other data from which they performed a range of nondestructive tests. Their conclusions: the cloth apparently draped a real body (or body image), the blood was most likely real, and the image was only superficially present—meaning that it was only located on the very uppermost thread fibers. No paint, dye, or other foreign substance could account for the image. Three-dimensional analysis of the photographs revealed that the image was present even in areas that did not actually touch the body.

Before these tests, Swiss botanist Max Frei had detected several pollens on the shroud that in ancient times were found nearly exclusively in Palestine, even though the cloth had not been out of western Europe since the fourteenth century. And objects over the eyes appeared to be coins. Image enhancement of the right eye showed what some believe are letters of a Roman coin minted by Pontius Pilate between A.D. 29 and 32.

A decade of publications, discussions, and mystery followed the 1978 tests. But in 1988, a report was issued that stunned many. Scientists in three laboratories in England, Switzerland, and the U.S. found that the Shroud of Turin had been radiocarbon-dated to the thirteenth to fourteenth centuries. Whatever else the artifact was, it appeared to be of medieval origin and definitely not the burial garment of Jesus. Proponents were shocked; antagonists were relieved.

Why, then, this past spring did the shroud reappear on the cover of Time magazine (April 20)? Partly because the shroud was about to be placed on public display for the first time in 20 years. But also because the conclusions of the 1988 radiocarbon-dating had come under fire on various fronts. The Time article listed no fewer than four critical hypotheses regarding the carbon tests. For example, one of the chief chemists from the 1978 investigation noted that infrared spectroscopy showed that the 1988 threads differed from those on the remainder of the shroud. A scientist visiting Turin in 1993 observed a bacterial coating on the shroud fibers that on other artifacts of known age had skewed the dating by making them appear much younger than they were. Physicists also pointed out the possibility of neutron flux on the shroud, which would make it appear much younger than its true date. This all means that the scientific evidence remains inconclusive.

Those who believe it is Jesus' shroud point to features on it that seem unique to Jesus' death, including pathological ones that amaze medical professionals: position of the nail holes, bleeding from an apparent crown of thorns, postmortem blood flow, rigor mortis, evidence of asphyxiation, and so on. Most intriguing is the question of how the image was caused. The possibility of a light scorch on the cloth is one of the ideas under discussion.

So what does the shroud mean for our faith? The answer, on the one hand, is nothing. If the shroud should prove to have been a work of art or even the shroud of a man crucified long after or before Jesus' time, it casts no negative reflection on our Lord's crucifixion. But it could still tell us much about crucifixion. At the very least, it would remain a forceful reminder of the nature of Jesus' suffering, helping us to take less for granted the physical aspects of his death. On the other hand, if the evidence pointed more conclusively to a crucifixion under Pontius Pilate, we would not be surprised that God's act in history had left a tangible result on a piece of cloth. In this case, much could be learned concerning Jesus' death and resurrection. Yet, much of this seems to be on hold. In the meantime, believers should avoid the temptation of idolatry. CT

By Gary R. Habermas, distinguished professor of apologetics and philosophy at Liberty University in Lynchburg, Virginia. Send your questions for evangelical scholars to CTedit@aol.com.

VERNON MILLER

Build Your Worth without RISKING Your Values

Only one Web site helps you make money—and make it count. At crosswalk.com, you'll find world-class investment and planning tools based on sound Christian principles. You'll discover which companies or mutual funds support your values—and which don't. You'll chat with leading-edge experts, make online investments, check out insurance planning and personalized quote features, and even create a personal home page with your up-to-the-minute portfolio status. No other financial Web site offers services so comprehensive—yet so centered on God's Word. Invest some time at www.crosswalk.com today. And manage your money without making compromises.

- Values-Based Investing Research
- Market Quotes, Research & Charts
- Online Financial Experts
- Financial Planning Tools & Calculators
- Online Investing
- Exclusive Values-Based Products & Services

MONEY

crosswalk.com

Classic and contemporary excerpts

Born November 29, 1898, Clive Staples Lewis in his lifetime gave us many writings that explicate the Christian faith and walk. This page of Reflections commemorates the centennial of his birth.

Seduced by the World

Prosperity knits a man to the World. He feels that he is "finding his place in it," while really it is finding its place in him. His increasing reputation, his widening circle of acquaintances, his sense of importance, the growing pressure of absorbing and agreeable work, build up in him a sense of being really at home in earth which is just what we want. You will notice that the young are generally less unwilling to die than the middle-aged and the old.

The truth is that the Enemy, having oddly destined these mere animals to life in His own eternal world, has guarded them pretty effectively from the danger of feeling at home anywhere else.

—The Screwtape Letters

Our Gravest Evil

The worst sins of men are spiritual.

—The Four Loves

Spiritual Map Makers

Doctrines are not God: they are only a kind of map. But that map is based on the experience of hundreds of people who really were in touch with God.

—Mere Christianity

Life in the Blood

"Son of Adam," said Aslan, "Go into that thicket and pluck the thorn that you will find there, and bring it to me." Eustace obeyed. The thorn was a foot long and sharp as a rapier.

"Drive it into my paw, Son of Adam," said Aslan, holding up his right fore-paw and spreading out the great pads towards Eustace.

"Must I?" said Eustace.

"Yes," said Aslan.

Then Eustace set his teeth and drove the thorn into the Lion's pad. And there came out a great drop of blood, redder than all redness that you have ever seen or imagined. And it splashed into the stream over the dead body of the King. At the same moment the doleful music stopped. And the dead King began to be changed. . . . His eyes opened, and his lips both laughed, and suddenly he leaped up and stood before them.

—The Silver Chair

(The Chronicles of Narnia)

No Home Here

The joys of Heaven are, for most of us in our present condition, "an acquired taste"—and certain ways of life may render the taste impossible of acquisition. Perhaps the lost are those who dare not go to such a public place.

—The Problem of Pain

Hard Freedom

The hardness of God is kinder than the softness of men, and His compulsion is our liberation.

—Surprised by Joy

From the Beginning

No philosophical theory which I have yet come across is a radical improvement on the words of Genesis, that "in the beginning God made Heaven and Earth."

—Miracles

Hunger for God

God gives what He has, not what He has not: He gives the happiness that there is, not the happiness that is not. To be God—to be like God and to share His goodness in creaturely response—to be miserable—these are the only three alternatives.

If we will not learn to eat the only food that the universe grows—the only food that any possible universe even can grow—then we must starve.

—The Problem of Pain

First Things

You can't get second things by putting them first; you can get second things only by putting first things first.

—God in the Dock

The Only Way

We are told that Christ was killed for us, that His death has washed out our sins, and that by dying He disabled death itself. That is the formula. That is Christianity. That is what has to be believed.

—Mere Christianity

Not Enough

Feelings come and go, and when they come a good use can be made of them: they cannot be our regular spiritual diet.

—The World's Last Night and Other Essays

Freedom Misused

Man is now a horror to God and to himself and a creature ill-adapted to the universe not because God made him so but because he has made himself so by the abuse of his free will.

—The Problem of Pain

Church Chair Industries, Inc.

Cathedral Stacker

Free Chair Test Compare
(100+)

Plush, tall backs over 1/2" plywood.

Free Lumbar Back Support

Now Only
$25.25
100+

Royal Stacker

Now Only
$26.25
100+

Design Stacker #1

Plush 4 & 5" deep foam
seats over 1/2" plywood.

Call 1-800-331-5411
For Free Catalog & Steel
Frame Sample Chair

GREAT PEW LIKE CHAIRS OAK OR STEEL FRAMES
LOCKS TOGETHER TO FORM A CONTINUOUS BENCH

Oak Pew Chair

OPTIONS

Arms

Kneelers

Book & Card Pockets

DESIGN PATENT NO.
DES. 333,7333

The Great Escape

Peter T. Chattaway

MELINDA SUE GORDON/SMPS

For Truman Burbank, freedom means abandoning his false though perfect world.

The desire for "escape" is pervasive. People hide behind jobs, possessions, and gated "communities" for peace of mind. Community is now found in overhyped, though immediately forgettable, media events (remember the last episode of Seinfeld?). Two recent video releases will help you fight this impulse.

The media hype last summer targeted, ironically, The Truman Show, Peter Weir's imaginative critique of consumerism. The Truman Show is about an insurance salesman named Truman Burbank (Jim Carrey) who, without realizing it, has spent his entire life inside a giant TV studio. Every second of his existence has been broadcast to a worldwide audience. He is surrounded by commercials and product placements, and his wife—actually an actress—regularly encourages him to replace old household accessories with new ones. Episodes from Truman's life are commodified and sold as videotapes to the show's fans. Meanwhile, talk shows hash out issues raised by events in Truman's life.

Truman himself is not as media-saturated as those who watch him. He is, however, living in a materialistic world defined by his conformity to what others expect of him. It slowly dawns on him that the world around him is a fake, and that everyone in his life has participated in one great lie.

The greatest liar of all is Christof (Ed Harris), the show's godlike producer. This god is not the world-redeeming creator of Christian belief but a jealous, soulless deity. Christof created the show because he wanted to experience, albeit vicariously, a blessed and perfect life. But this perfection is a fraud. And when Truman finally figures out this scheme, there is only one thing to do: escape. Truman's freedom means abandoning the false world and letting it die. How will this new ethic play itself out in the "real world" to which Truman escapes? We never find out.

Still, that the question is asked—Is our commodified suburban world a lie, something to escape from?—is worth marking. But that question is to wonder what comes next. And that takes us to David Fincher's masterpiece of paranoia, The Game.

Nicholas Van Orton (Michael Douglas), a financier, finds himself mysteriously caught in the web of "the game," an organization that "plays" with the lives of its members. Van Orton's entry is a birthday present from his brother. Nicholas lives in a largely abstract world, made up of stock exchange reports, business contracts, perfectly polished furniture, and little true human contact. Pension beneficiaries and others depend on his work, but you get the impression he'd rather not meet them. He lives in a husk he has built around himself to hide the hollowness within.

The gamers who insinuate themselves into Nicholas's world at first appear to be a much more sinister version of Christof. But where Christof maintains an illusion of peace, the gamers are trying to wake Nicholas up. One of them, explaining "the game" to Nicholas, even quotes the Gospel of John: "Whereas once I was blind, now I can see."

One thing leads to another, and Nicholas finds himself robbed of his possessions, drugged, and buried alive in a shallow Mexican grave. Waking up, he breaks out of his coffin—a clear allusion to his spiritual rebirth—and returns to California, where his first move is to make amends with his ex-wife. Slowly something stirs in Nicholas's soul. He is becoming a real person once again.

A few plot twists remain, building up to a shockingly upbeat finale. When I first saw the film, I could not decide if Fincher, who previously directed the more fatalistic films Alien3 and Se7en, had sold out or found a particularly shrewd climax for his story. The second time, however, I saw pinpricks of hope scattered through the story and realized how obvious the film's resolution should have been all along.

The Game, for all its visual seediness, is an allegory of grace and redemption, in which a man trapped within himself is set free and—most important—sent back into the world from which he came. He can continue his good work, but this time, he will be open to the people for whom that work is done.

Both movies question our drive to escape life by burrowing into the bosom of affluence. They reject false comforts in search of real ones. "Whoever loses his life . . ."

CT

Peter T. Chattaway is a film reviewer.

2540 5th Avenue N.W.,
Calgary, Alberta
T2N 0T5
www.pbi.ab.ca
1-800-239-0422
Associate AFS accredited

25 Ballymore Court,
Toronto, Ontario
M2M 4B3
www.tyndale-canada.edu
1-800-663-6052
AFS accredited

4 good reasons to study theology in Canada

- Learn from a world class internationally-recognized faculty
- Save more than 40% on the cost of quality theological education (US exchange)
- Enjoy a Transdenominational, cross-cultural experience in the U.N.'s top country
- Benefit from flexible program options to fit any schedule (modular, intercession, summer)

Otterburne, Manitoba R0A 1G0
www.providence.mb.ca
1-800-668-7768
AFS accredited

510 College Drive,
Carleton Place, Ontario N0H 1S0
www.briercrest.ca
1-800-667-5199
AFS accredited

Contact us toll free or visit our websites

The Calling of Elmer Yazzie

For this Calvinist Navajo, art is not a part of life, it is life itself.

ELMER YAZZIE

Above: Yazzie's Prayer Warriors; at top right: a yucca brush.

call himself an artist was due, in part, to his Navajo perceptions.

"In the Navajo way of thinking, there is no word that defines artist," the 44-year-old says in a soft voice. "What the artist is or does has to do with spiritual work," Yazzie says. "Artists are more like healers—our work can be therapy for ourselves and for others. Sometimes in my own work, I have created works that influenced my life and thinking; later on, someone has come along with a very similar need."

The concept of art so thoroughly permeates the culture of the Dinee (which means "The People") that the thought of separating it from life or spirituality strikes Yazzie as absurd. He will tell you that by his personal definition, art is simply "the way to live"—an all-encompassing matter of making choices that, in his case, must please God.

The painting that preached

Yazzie says that for most of his career, he didn't understand what an artist was. "I had the skill, and I had the understanding, but I didn't have a real experience with the inspiration," he says. "I think that's the critical part. I didn't totally understand what it meant to be 'chosen.'"

But in 1981, when he decided to donate a sabbatical year to a mural painting for a church in Red Mesa, New Mexico, Yazzie experienced inspiration for the first time. The other five Yazzies, including his wife, Sharon, agreed to live off savings for a year. "You were doing it for the love of the whole project, and you knew Who it was for." Although he is certain that native people, "Christian or not, have a spiritual outlook on life that can outmeasure Christian American people," he found that many of the church people were biblically illiterate. It took three years to complete the Red Mesa murals—which could cover all the sides of a large bus from floor to rooftop—because Yazzie kept stopping to explain his visual themes to anyone who asked.

One day at Red Mesa, Pastor Jim Charlie was delayed, and Yazzie was asked to preach—extemporaneously. He decided to talk about the mural in progress. He explained his depictions of Abraham Isaac, and Jacob, and the section where Moses lead the Israelites out of captivity in Egypt—a theme that especially resonates with the humiliating experience of Native Americans who have been forcibly displaced by whites in recent centuries. "The talk had to be interpreted from English to Navajo. It took about three-

Born in Shiprock, New Mexico, he hesitates when asked to pronounce the name of his Navajo clan aloud, though he has known it since his youth. The problem for artist Elmer Yazzie is not secrecy, but that the language of the Dinee—the name by which the Navajos prefer to be known—is not a written one. Attempting to spell the long clause that means "Where the Two Waters Meet" is virtually impossible.

A reservation-born Native American with a mission-school education and a Dutch-American wife, Yazzie is truly an individual at the place where many different waters, or cultures, meet. A lifelong Christian in the Reformed tradition, he received his undergraduate degree in art education at Calvin College in Michigan. He accepted in a general way the Calvinist doctrine of being chosen, but until eight years ago, he had not applied it to his artistic bent.

The artist as spiritual healer

Though he has painted dozens of murals in southwestern churches since 1976 and mentored aspiring artists of all ages for 22 years at the Rehoboth Christian Reformed School, Yazzie's reluctance to hours, but everybody just sat there," Yazzie recalls. "I finally ran out of painting—the wall was blank—so then I told them what else was going to be happening.

Elmer Yazzie

"What was so nice about the whole project is that no one in the mission dictated what was to be on the wall. So often there's very little left up to the artist. In the first two mural projects I did, there was so much freedom. People came and suggested thoughts. There was so much discussion going on. There was a lot of trust." The experience pointed Yazzie toward a ten-year summer commitment to complete one large-scale mural each year.

God's masterwork

Often invited to lecture about contemporary Native American art in the eastern United States and in far-flung places such as Germany or Israel, Yazzie is unabashed about his Christian faith. Given his Native American demeanor and background, audiences listen attentively in ways most Anglo preachers would covet. Yazzie's core lesson involves various aspects that characterize God's artistic nature.

Yazzie's Rehoboth students struggled with questions about identity and self-esteem, so he teaches that true identity is embedded in God's image: Because Genesis first presents God as a creator, being creative is an important reflection of his image.

Moreover, Yazzie teaches that God's masterpiece is human life, which means that life deserves utmost respect. This means artists also can expect to create one or more masterworks in a lifetime. Asked about his own masterwork, Yazzie mentions a miniature of three horses running, painted on the thin side of a yucca brush handle. He also mentions a portion of sky in one mural "where the colors and the simulated texture in the sky tend to flow—they just flowed out of me. It was really a powerful experience. I tell my students that because of God's perfection and divine nature and greatness and wholeness, he had to make just one major masterwork—human life—and that he continues to recreate that human life through all generations."

One difficult aspect of God's creative image is that he gave away his best: He gave his Son over to death, and creation was given over to humans who have, in part, destroyed it. Similarly, Yazzie says, any artwork really has little value if it is kept in a closet or treated as a precious gem. Yazzie sold the yucca brush piece to a woman at an exhibition in Santa Fe, but he confesses, "I didn't realize how difficult it was to sell it until she wrote a check." If Christian artists don't get their work out into the world, Yazzie insists, people will not understand the whole picture that constitutes God's creation.

Finally, Yazzie says, God was pleased with what he had made, and his response was one of love and appropriate pride. "You've got to recognize that when you've experienced inspiration, your work is worship. Sometimes when I paint I start making up my own songs, and I'll start to pray and talk about how I see God in the painting. I'll tell God out loud why I'm going to do this or that. This is so the Evil One can hear. Satan can't read your mind, so you have to tell him how the Holy Spirit is talking to you and inspiring you, and I want to make him jealous."

A baffling witness

He adds: "If the heart and the head and the hands are working together, the result is going to be uniqueness, and it's uniqueness that baffles and perplexes. What drew people to Christ was this: it says a number of times that the crowds were amazed. And about the conversion of Paul, it says the Jews were baffled, perplexed.

"When someone is working effectively through God's inspiration and in unison with heart, head, and mind, the end result is going to baffle someone. That's when you have the opportunity to testify—when the observer asks, 'What does it mean?'" CT

By Karen L. Mulder. For more information, write Elmer Yazzie at P.O. Box 2, Rehoboth, NM 87322.

Keepers of the Lost Ark

One thing that makes Ethiopian Christians unique is their belief that they are directly descended from the early Israelites; the ark of the covenant, containing the Ten Commandments, is said to be housed in an Ethiopian chapel.

Ethiopian Christianity is devoted to re-enactments of the Old and New Testament. The incredible city of Lalibela testifies to the lengths to which Ethiopian believers in the twelfth century went to transfer the Holy Land to Africa. Carved out of solid rock, some Lalibela churches contain replicas of the patriarchs' tombs, Golgotha, and the tomb of Christ. Such recreated sacred sites, it has been argued, were safer for devout believers who could not risk the dangerous trip across Egypt to Palestine.

In addition to the amazing monuments of Lalibela, each service today re-enacts the journeys of Christ and of the saints on their feast days. The elements for Communion, for example, are carried from a place representing Bethlehem to another place representing Jerusalem in imitation of Jesus' life journey.

Richard Marsh, secretary for ecumenical affairs for the archbishop of Canterbury and a frequent traveler to Ethiopia, writes in Black Angels: The Art and Spirituality of Ethiopia, "If there is one word that characterizes Christianity in Ethiopia, it is richness. The worship is vibrant, with priests and deacons in brightly colored vestments carrying splendidly gaudy liturgical umbrellas. The music is a mixture of chants of Semitic origin and African rhythms, accompanied on distinctive goatskin drums. The walls and ceilings of the churches are brightly, even luridly, painted with scenes from the Bible or from the lives of the saints." (Other books in the series Art and Spirit from Lion Books, England, include works on Celtic, "plain," and Russian Orthodox religious art.) —KLM

The Nativity, Ethiopian style: In a modern, yet traditional painting, Joseph carries a prayer stick, and the Magi wear Ethiopian crowns.

For more information, write Lion Publishing, Sandy Lane West, Oxford, England OX4 5HG.

What Do You Give Someone Who Has ~~Everything~~ Nothing?

How About A Shoe Box?

One filled with love and wrapped in prayer—an Operation Christmas Child shoe box. Each year, Samaritan's Purse delivers gift-filled boxes—packed by people like you—to children living in poverty all around the world. Many have never even seen a gift before. Through Operation Christmas Child, we tell these kids about the Greatest Gift ever given—Jesus Christ, God's gift to a hurting world.

While the small gifts and toys inside hold joy for a season, the love behind them offers hope for eternity. In the end, it could be the gift that keeps on giving—eternally.

Would you like to help? Call 1-800-353-5949.

Operation Christmas Child is a project of Samaritan's Purse, a Christian relief and development organization. Samaritan's Purse

Franklin Graham
President,
Samaritan's Purse

BOOKS

Though the Darkness Hide Thee
By Susan Wise Bauer

Reality Is for Real

Why we can't give up on objectivity, even though it is decidedly uncool.

Ceci n'est pas une pipe.

"This is not a pipe."

The Last Word, by Thomas Nagel (Oxford University Press, 160 pp.; $19.95, hardcover); Objectivity: The Obligations of Impersonal Reason, by Nicholas Rescher (University of Notre Dame Press, 264 pp.; $35, hardcover; $16, paper). Reviewed by Ric Machuga, professor of philosophy at Butte College.

A mere 30 years ago I was an undergraduate philosophy major wrestling with intellectual doubts surrounding my emerging Christian faith. Back then Bertrand Russell, A. J. Ayers, B. F. Skinner, and their acolytes were proclaiming that Christ's claims to be the Son of God were simply not true and that anyone who believed them was irrational. Seeking to be both rational and a Christian, I had to come to grips with their arguments.

Today, there is good news and bad news for Christians. The good news is that the Russells, Ayerses, and Skinners have died and left no intellectual heirs. In the postmodern world, Christians are not so likely to be told that their faith is not true. The bad news is that now when we proclaim Christ to be the way, the truth, and the life, we will most typically be greeted with a Pilate-like sneer: "What is truth?"

For us, Thomas Nagel's little book The Last Word and Nicholas Rescher's slightly bigger book Objectivity: The Obligations of Impersonal Reason are a godsend.

The heart of Nagel's manifesto is that—contrary to the rampant subjectivism and perspectivism of the day—he really does know that things like rabbits exist. He flat-out denies that "the first person, singular or plural, is hiding at the bottom of everything we say or think." A person need not preface all statements with "for me rabbits exist" or "for us it is true that there are rabbits." Instead, Nagel argues that there is nothing philosophically presumptuous, and certainly nothing arrogant, in simple assertions about rabbits. Nor are questions about the existence of rabbits of mere theoretical interest. The result of postmodernity's ubiquitous retreat to the first person is "a growth in the already extreme intellectual laziness of contemporary culture and the collapse of serious argument throughout the lower reaches of the humanities and social sciences." Few readers of CHRISTIANITY TODAY will dispute the seriousness of what is at stake.

So how does Nagel propose to combat such nefarious influences? The skeptic's arguments always begin by viewing reason from the outside. Reasons are given to justify a knowledge claim, but instead of examining the reasons themselves, the skeptic seeks to get behind reasons and look instead at causes. The skeptic is the one who says, "Yes, I know you say that you believe X because of reasons a, b, and c. But a, b, and c are really [said with a slight snicker] the product of your language, or your culture, or your economic class, or your deeply repressed will to power."

But as Nagel persuasively argues, this attempt to evaluate reasons from outside the realm of reasoning is doomed to failure: "The familiar point that relativism is self-refuting remains valid in spite of its familiarity: We cannot criticize some of our own claims of reason without employing reason at some other point to formulate and support those criticisms."

Despite its familiarity (especially to those who cut their philosophical teeth on C. S. Lewis's many refutations of such reasoning, most notably in the third chapter of Miracles and in the wonderful metaphor in the Abolition of Man that he who sees through everything sees nothing), Nagel's various applications of the ancient argument will more than repay the effort this very accessible book demands of a lay reader.

Nagel's book is also rich with tidbits for readers who like to keep track of current philosophical debates. For example, the more moderate and pragmatic versions of antirealism—as described in the current jargon—like to trace their roots to the American philosopher C. S. Peirce and his “idea of convergence at the end of inquiry.” One of the reasons this notion has appeal to those who feign doubts about rabbits is that we will never have to worry about what else might be discovered at the end of inquiry (moral obligation? immorality? God?) because, like the mathematical asymptote, the end of inquiry will never be reached.

But did Peirce really intend to define truth as convergence? Nagel has his doubts; here is just one of his quotes from Peirce himself: “The soul’s deeper parts can only be reached through its surface. In this way the eternal forms, that mathematics and philosophy and the other sciences make us acquainted with will by slow percolation gradually reach the very core of one’s being, and will come to influence our lives; and this they will do, not because they involve truths of merely vital importance, but because they [are] ideal and eternal verities.”

Nagel’s second line of argument will also be familiar to many. Robust philosophical realism about even the most mundane kinds of things has always pointed toward the supernatural. Some will find this shocking and attempt to dismiss it as little more than special pleading by theists. Nagel is himself a little shocked about the direction in which he seems to be going. He explicitly says, “I don’t want there to be a God; I don’t want the universe to be like that.” So much for special pleading!

Nagel’s final chapter, “Naturalism and Religion,” is especially rewarding. There the reader will find such morsels as this: “much of the scientism and reductionism of our time [is supported by] the ludicrous overuse of evolutionary biology to explain everything about life, including everything about the human mind.” The substance of Nagel’s argument is that epistemology can’t be naturalized—that is, reason can never be explained or reduced to nonreason.

Nagel does not contest the evolutionary account of the biological origin of species, but it can’t be the whole story because it is self-defeating to give such an account of human rationality the last word. If reason itself does not have the last word, then there can be no reason to trust the evolutionary account of reason: “The reliance we put on our reason implies a belief that even though the existence of human beings and of ourselves in particular is the result of a long sequence of physical and biological accidents, . . . nevertheless the basic methods of reason we employ are not merely human but belong to a more general category of mind.” So if matter by itself never creates mind, where did our minds come from? Nagel says “we are left with a profound problem.”

And Nagel is left with a profound problem, as long as his wants and his reason point in opposite directions. Nonetheless, he is to be commended for his courage in acknowledging that “a fear of religion” has had “large and often pernicious consequences for modern intellectual life” and for his humility to add, “I speak from experience, being strongly subject to this fear myself . . . and am made uneasy by the fact that some of the most intelligent and well-informed people I know are religious believers.”

Enter Nicholas Rescher. While Rescher and Nagel cover much of the same ground, Nagel’s primary goal is to refute subjectivism, including the more moderate advocates of naturalized epistemology; whereas Rescher’s primary goal is to flesh out the alternative: normative epistemology. Nagel argues, in effect, that reason can be impersonal; Rescher carries the argument one step further. His thesis is that reason has a moral obligation to be impersonal.

Broadly speaking, Rescher is working within the Aristotelian tradition. In this tradition, rights and obligations are always connected to needs. People have the right to what they need and a corresponding obligation to cultivate their talents in such a way that their own needs and the needs of others are met. Needs, in turn, flow from our nature as “rational animals.” Just as our biological nature carries with it a need for food, drink, and shelter, our rational nature carries with it a need to reason objectively.

Objectivity does not require a “view from nowhere” or a “God’s eye point of view.” Both of these are unattainable, at least for us. What objectivity does require is that people be willing to ask: What would someone else standing in my shoes say or believe about this situation? “Rationality is universal,” says Rescher, “but it is circumstantially universal—and objectivity with it.”

Yes, all rational judgments must be made from some particular perspective. After all, we are not disembodied spirits; rather, we are rational animals whose particular location in space and time is inescapable. But that does not mean that all perspectives are equally valid. Only those perspectives that consciously seek to remove all that goes “against the dictates of reason: phobias, groundless anxieties, delusions, senseless antipathies, and irrationalities of all sorts” have a claim to objectivity.

Though the definition of rationality implies a “monolithic uniformity,” there is necessarily a “pluralistic diversity of appropriate answers to the question ‘What is it rational to do?’” The universal human need for shelter is fulfilled differently in different times and places. We all need houses, but a rational Eskimo builds his house differently from a rational forest dweller. So, too, “We need to build a cognitive home for ourselves in this world: to create a viable thought-structure for our beliefs, choices and evaluations. Here too one must simply do the best one can . . . [so that] what we do can be seen as circumstantially appropriate by anyone.”

Objectivity, then, does not imply infallibility. It merely implies that people form their “judgment on the basis of the available experience, including that of other individuals and cultures insofar as this is vicariously accessible.” Ptolemy’s and Galen’s understanding of astronomy and the cardiovascular system were both rational in contrast to the systems propounded by the astrologers and quacks who were their contemporaries.

To this claim someone will certainly object: Since all four were wrong, what sense does it make to say that the first two were acting rationally whereas the astrologers and quacks were not? If any knowledge claim might be mistaken, then there is no way to know that all knowledge claims aren’t mistaken. But logic itself refutes this argument. While any $100 bill might be counterfeit it is conceptually impossible that all $100 bills might be counterfeit.

One of the standard postmodern responses to such defenses of rationality is to question the validity of “Western” logic. It is simple arrogance, the postmodern skeptic might say, for Rescher to claim that a people have an obligation to adopt our standards of logic and rationality. While it is true that we seek to avoid contradictions, other cultures have quite different standards of rationality. So who are we to say that our standards are obligatory?

This sort of response has become so embedded in the conventional wisdom of the day that it is hard to remember that its rhetorical force has only recently become persuasive. Rescher brilliantly cuts through such bluster. Suppose, he says, that some primitive society should "deem it rationally appropriate (or even mandatory) to attribute human illness to the intervention of the rock-spirits." Anthropological observations do indeed show that other peoples have goals and problem-solving techniques different from ours, but those different goals and/or processes "do not mean that they have a different rationality any more than those blowguns of theirs mean that they have a different rifle."

And far from producing megalomania, the universality of reason's obligations produces humility, because it forces one to ask: If I were in living in the shoes of the Azande or Wazonga, would I want them to employ my current "Western" standards of rationality in their relations with me?

No generic answer is possible; it all depends on the particulars of the question. Would I want missionaries to put a blouse on my wife? Probably not, since it rains so much where I live that she would certainly get sick walking around in wet clothes all day. Would I want them to vaccinate my children against the standard childhood killers? Probably, since I love my children just as much as Westerners love theirs. Would I want them to lovingly communicate the truth of the gospel? Of course, since I am just as much a rational animal as anyone else, and no rational person lives by bread alone. CT

Stripping the Darkness

A couple's spiritual quest turns them into searchlights exposing family and community secrets.

Though the Darkness Hide Thee,

by Susan Wise Bauer (Multnomah, 364 pp.; $11.99, paper). Reviewed by Annette LaPlaca, associate editor of MARRIAGE PARTNERSHIP.

Through the dark glasses of personal sin, it's hard to see God's glory in a fallen world, but we're looking all the same. That is the topic at the heart of every "Christian" story, because it is the condition of every Christian soul. In some stories, such as Flannery O'Connor's, these moments of epiphany rip through the narrative and leave the reader gasping over truth. In others, like Susan Wise Bauer's Though the Darkness Hide Thee, the search for God's face is portrayed with gentle authenticity.

Bauer—whose first novel, The Revolt, was published by Word in 1996—unfolds a fast-paced mystery that involves dark-and-dirty crimes, old and new. The story line of criminal secrets should satisfy even those readers most inured to subtlety in Christian fiction (which will come as a tonic to those numbed by Christian-market offerings that are more propaganda-with-a-plot than literature).

Unobtrusively echoing the whodunit plot line, the heart of Bauer's second novel is the search for God's character and his will on the part of the protagonist and her minister husband. Amanda and Thomas Clement are attempting a fresh start in the small Virginia town where she grew up—leaving behind the big city where they were bruised in ministry and disillusioned by the world of business. Bauer's portrait of their flawed but tender relationship is so winsome and rings so true, it's hard not to guess that she has drawn herself, heart and soul, into this narrative. And she has: The Bauers themselves recently moved back to family property in a rural Virginia community, where he ministers to a small fellowship while she teaches literature at William and Mary.

There is a plainspoken naturalness to the prose, both in descriptive narrative and declarative passages like this one: "Thomas wanted a family, a home, a place to perfect his service to God; and I wanted something more elusive. I wanted reassurance, reassurance that I could still find a place where God was as real as the sunlit fields, as easy to hear as a hawk keening overhead. Somehow I'd lost that certainty."

Bauer captures an experience every believer encounters at some point: the silence of God. How many of us have prayed, despite the coolness of our own spiritual temperature and despite our doubts that God will act? Bauer writes, "I stood on the back porch and prayed for Thomas and the Sunday morning service and the Little Croft congregants; I put them all together and held them up to the God who lingered just out of sight and pleaded, Break through to us."

Thomas and Amanda are a believable pair. Whatever mistakes they make, in serving God or approaching each other, their intentions are so pure, their desire to see God's glory so wistful, that their errors in judgment are easily forgiven.

The young couple's search for authenticity encounter with God has the unintended effect of turning them into searchlights illuminating Amanda's family and the rural community where they have transplanted themselves. "Darkness" is stripped away at community, family, marital, and personal levels, sometimes with frightening results.

Bauer draws strong personalities (and their secrets) with great finesse and with penetrating insight into family stories that cross generations. The perennial story of human sinfulness obscuring truth plays out powerfully among these characters. Beware, for example, the farmer who, despite the muck and mire of his workaday chores, insists on wearing dress shirts and bow ties every day of the week. Something's wrong here: Who is that farmer trying to be?

Christian writers often struggle with depictions of human sinfulness. Draw characters with too much earthy reality, and you will have to find a secular publisher. (Can anyone imagine Buechner's Bebb coming out of the Christian market?) Write a book that is overtly spiritual, and you'll find your work rejected as "too religious" to be marketable by secular presses. Bauer nimbly walks that fine line, depicting failure and evil compellingly in a book that overtly, realistically describes the spiritual seeking and setbacks of believers.

The darkness hides God's glory. The eye of sinful man God's glory may not see. But thank heaven for the distinct hopefulness in that simple word though! Though the darkness hides him, God is still holy, merciful, and mighty. CT

Colleges That Take Values Seriously

Christian colleges initiate a new study to measure effects of a faith-based education.

For many years, people have assumed that colleges are doing their job: preparing students for successful careers and instilling in them values that would contribute to the building of a better society. Beginning in the 1970s, however, various folks began to question this assumption. The reasons are debatable: some cite a perceived cultural decline, but others say skyrocketing educational costs have prompted a movement toward accountability.

Thus, over the last two decades or so, the word assessment has become very important at Christian colleges and universities—indeed, within the entire community of postsecondary education.

Whatever its ultimate causes, the assessment movement has been driven largely by regional accrediting associations, which have consistently urged institutions of higher learning to make a focused effort to determine their specific missions and to assess their progress in fulfilling those missions.

Christian colleges lead the way

The assessment movement among Christian colleges began as a response to the broader assessment movement. However, thanks to the detailed and far-reaching study "Taking Values Seriously: Assessing the Mission of Church-Related Higher Education," coordinated by the Coalition for Christian Colleges and Universities (CCCCU), Christian higher education has become a model—in fact, a trendsetter—in the assessment movement.

Representatives from various Christian colleges participated in several assessment-type conferences in the early 1990s. They realized that generic assessment tools were inadequate in the Christian college setting. Messiah College sociology professor Ron Burwell explains,

"When it comes to determining how well we are succeeding, issues related to faith development, and specifically Christian values, are at the top of our list. The problem is that these categories do not appear as categories for postsecondary education at large."

It was Karen Longman, CCCC's vice president for professional development in research, working alongside campus leadership, who proposed the solution to the problem. Her idea was to seek a grant from the Fund for the Improvement of Postsecondary Education (FIPSE) in order to conduct assessment-type research within the context of Christian higher education. Some considered CCCC's chance of getting a FIPSE grant a long shot, since the fund approves only about one of every ten grant proposals it receives.

Furthermore, because FIPSE operates under the auspices of the U.S. Department of Education, there were some initial concerns about issues related to the

(Continued on page 9)

More Good News About Messiah

"...At Messiah College,
an inner spirituality
actually unifies the campus..."

Messiah College ranked 7th best value according to sticker price among regional liberal arts colleges in the North.

MESSIAH COLLEGE
news
Three out of four Messiah grads report employment
in their major.

Messiah's solar car bests big universities in technological innovation.

MESSIAH COLLEGE LISTED
AS ONE OF THE NATION'S
"TOP COLLEGES FOR TOP STUDENTS"

Messiah College hits
Character-Building Honor Roll six years in a row!

MESSIAH COLLEGE

Grantham · Pennsylvania 17027 · USA

Get the story behind the headlines.
Call 1.800.233.4220 today - 1.800.382.1349 in PA.

RIGOROUSLY ACADEMIC.
UNAPOLOGETICALLY CHRISTIAN.

www.messiah.edu

A Christian College of the Liberal and Applied Arts and Sciences.
Messiah College welcomes students of any race, color, sex, disability and national or ethnic origin.

separation of church and state. But supporters of the proposal were ultimately successful in arguing that a school should not have to compromise its mission in order to gain fair access to government funds for the purpose of assessing its success in accomplishing its mission. Thus in 1993, CCCU received a $222,000 FIPSE grant for what was to be a four-year study. In 1997, FIPSE awarded an additional $258,000, extending the study to six years.

While "Taking Values Seriously" contains several components, among its most significant features is an emphasis on tracking students' attitudes, behaviors, and beliefs over a long term. According to Patrick Terenzini, professor and senior scientist at Pennsylvania State University's Center for the Study of Higher Education, one critical weakness of many typical studies on the effects of college is that they focus on a single year. As a result, these surveys amount to mere snapshots—which can be helpful, but are ultimately incapable of measuring change or growth.

In contrast, "Taking Values Seriously" will follow some students for as long as six years. In 1994, researchers conducted in-depth interviews with hundreds of freshmen representing over 40 CCCU schools. (The number of CCCU schools participating in the study has since grown to more than 50.) Those same students were interviewed again as graduating seniors in 1998. The second interview included the opportunity for students to view the videotape of their previous interview so as to evaluate how they had changed in four years. Then, the same students will be interviewed a third time as alumni in the year 2000 in order to help determine the lasting effects of their Christian college education.

In an endorsement of the project written on behalf of CCCU, Terenzini states, "Your six-year plan is a credit to the project's planners and to FIPSE for funding it. I wish more foundations or federal agencies were willing to do things right."

Similarly, Barbara Cambridge, director of the American Association for Higher Education Assessment Forum, calls "Taking Values Seriously" an "ambitious and important undertaking in the field of assessment." She adds, "While many colleges and universities purport to develop values in their students, few have undertaken the careful, methodical approach your project does in defining and assessing the development of values."

An approach both quantitative and qualitative

"Taking Values Seriously" includes a major quantitative component, making use of standard survey resources commonly used by colleges and universities throughout the country to survey large numbers of students. However, by adding questions related to faith development and values (see "Sample Questions from 'Taking Values Seriously,'" pp. 98–99), the study adapts these standard tools to the Christian college context.

Study results (Continued on page 96)

it's a big world out there, every square inch of it belongs to God. There's a lot to learn about God's world, and there's no better place to start than Dordt College. Take the first step on a journey of insight, growth, and excitement. Come to Dordt today.

DORDT COLLEGE

498 4th avenue, n.e.
sioux center, iowa
51250-1697
1-800-34-DORDT (36738)
www.dordt.edu

WESTMONT

A Lasting Impression

Make heads turn. Blaze a trail. Capture their attention. Leave your mark.

There are lots of ways to say you've made an impression. But you want more than clichés. You want to make a difference that matters. You want to do something that will last.

Begin by choosing Westmont College.

You'll discover real people at an exceptional undergraduate college that offers uncompromising standards, rigorous liberal arts, Christian values, and global perspectives. Our leadership opportunities will challenge you. Our intense academics will enrich you. Our community of faith will inspire you.

Come to Westmont. Our distinctive education will do more than impress you. It will change your life.

To find out more about how you can make a lasting impression, call us at (800) 777-9011.

CHRIST
JESUS
THE LORD

WESTMONT

A Christian College of the Liberal Arts and Sciences

955 La Paz Road • Santa Barbara California 93108-1089
(805) 565-6200 • (800) 777-9011 (toll free) • FAX (805) 565-6200
E-mail: admissions@westmont.edu • <http://www.westmont.edu/>

allow for ready comparisons between students at Christian colleges and their secular college counterparts on a variety of social and political issues. The videotaped interviews make up the major qualitative component of the survey. Between 20 and 40 students have already been interviewed at more than 40 CCCU-member schools; most have been interviewed twice. Given an average interview time of one hour, the result is nearly 2,000 hours' worth of videotaped interviews to be transcribed, read, compared, and analyzed.

Messiah's Burwell and John Van Wicklin, psychology professor and director of Houghton College's Department of Integrative Studies, are spearheading the effort to conduct and interpret the interviews. Both say that in the project's initial stages, they were concerned about how much interest it would draw from Christian schools. "We hoped for 20 and held our breath," says Burwell. "We got 40, which was far more interest than we expected."

This kind of cooperative project is something of an anomaly within educational circles. Many schools, realizing that competition for students and donor dollars can be stiff, hesitate to engage in any kind of cooperative effort that can result in sharing of trade secrets or inside information. Yet, coordinators believe, the fact that so many CCCU schools have signed on to the project testifies to the conviction that schools regard the overall mission of Christian education as being more important than the mission of any individual school. Some hope that the cooperative model represented by "Taking Values Seriously" will spread to the broader postsecondary education community.

According to Van Wicklin, one of the most positive features of "Taking Values Seriously" is that it provides, for the first time, some meaningful basis by which individual CCCU schools can compare themselves with other CCCU institutions. In the general surveys, by contrast, the only category available to CCCU schools was "Four-year Protestant Schools," many of which have strayed from the religious foundations out of which they were born.

Preliminary results

Both Burwell and Van Wicklin are understandably hesitant to comment too extensively on what they have learned so far given that the project is in midstream. In fact, at this writing, the two were still in the process of poring over the results of the 1998 interviews of graduating seniors who had been interviewed four years previously.

According to Burwell, the surveys and interviews, taken collectively, point toward Christian college students who, in some ways, are a lot more like their secular college counterparts than many might have assumed, though generally they are less materialistic, more altruistic, and noticeably more conservative on abortion and issues related to sexual morality. "We have found a tendency," says Burwell, "for students to describe themselves as politically conservative, even though when it comes to social issues—such as gun control,

(Continued on page 10)

TIRED OF THE ORDINARY? WANT A DEGREE THAT WILL REALLY HELP YOU LIVE OUT YOUR FAITH? MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE IS THE ANSWER!

ONE LIFE

YOUR CHOICE

MAKE IT COUNT

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE prepares students for Christian service through a focused undergraduate program highlighting Biblical studies and hands-on experience.

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE
ADMISSIONS
820 N. LA SALLE BLVD., CHICAGO, IL 60610 <http://www.moody.edu>
e-mail: admissions@moody.edu

CALL TODAY!

1-800-967-4MBI

Bible • Theology • International Ministries • Pastoral Studies • Evangelism/Discipleship • Educational Ministries • Communications

Sacred Music • Applied Linguistics • Urban Ministries • Jewish & Modern Israel Studies • Missionary Aviation • Youth Ministries • Church Music • Sports Ministry (Call 98)

New York City's Evangelical Christian College

Recent high school graduates searching for a solid Bible foundation in a Christ-centered academic environment have an exciting new option.

Nyack College's Manhattan Center—located in the heart of the pulsing city—offers afternoon, evening and weekend courses to serve the needs of traditional students as well as working adults. Nyack College rewards life experiences with college credits and makes generous grants available.

Associate Degrees: Liberal Arts A.A., Christian Work A.S.
Bachelor Degrees: Bible B.A., Pastoral Ministries B.S., Youth Ministries B.S., Psychology B.A., Business Administration B.S.,
Elementary Education B.S.,
Interdisciplinary Studies
(Double Major degrees – B.A. & B.S. only)

Call 212-625-0500 now
for free information!

Contact President
David Schroeder
at (914) 358-1710
if you would like to aid Nyack College's ministry in
New York City.

335 Broadway/93 Worth Street, 10th Floor
New York, NY 10013-3904
<http://www.nyackcollege.edu>

Make History at GENEVA COLLEGE

Members of Geneva classes of 1848 and 1997

Join Geneva in celebrating 150 years of academic excellence.

With our strong Christian tradition, Geneva has a history of launching great futures. Choose from more than 30 majors and masters programs—including business (ACBSP accredited), engineering (ABET accredited), speech pathology and Christian ministry. Call today to schedule a visit!

150
GENEVA COLLEGE
PRO CHRISTO ET PATRIA
3200 COLLEGE AVENUE
BEAVER FALLS, PA 15010

Phone: 1-800-847-8255

Email: Admissions@geneva.edu

Web: www.geneva.edu

Sample Questions from "TAKING VALUES SERIOUSLY"

Many of the quantitative types of questions that are a part of the study are identical to questions asked on standard reference tools, in this case, the CIRP (Cooperative Institutional Research Project) freshman survey. However, several supplementary questions, such as the following, make the survey distinctive for the Christian college context:

- How regularly did you engage in each of the following activities during the past year?

Maintained daily, personal devotions;
Shared my faith with another person;
Developed a friendship with a person of a different race;
Studied the Bible or prayed in a small group.

- In addition, the quantitative survey asks respondents whether they strongly agree, agree, disagree, or strongly disagree with the following statements:

I have a personally meaningful relationship with God.

My relationship with God contributes to my sense of well-being.

The way I do things from day to day is often affected by my relationship with God.

Even if the people around me were opposed to my Christian convictions, I would still hold fast to them.

I feel like I need to be open to considering new insights and truths about my faith.

I feel that identifying and using my spiritual gifts is not really important.

The survey also includes a major quantitative component designed in part to determine whether students' faith has developed and matured during their time at college and, if so, to begin uncovering the main contributing factors. Following are some of the standard interview questions posed to graduating seniors in 1998:

- Have you had any experiences that altered your life course in any significant way?
- How did you come to decide on a particular major?
- When you think about your future, what makes you feel most uneasy?
- Has your involvement in religious activities changed in any significant way while at college? For example: church attendance, involvement with small groups, personal devotions, etc.
- What do your parents think of your religious beliefs? Are their beliefs different from yours in any significant ways? For example, do you differ over doctrine, mode or style of worship?
- Has there ever been a time when you questioned the validity of your religious beliefs? If so, what did you question? Did you resolve the questions, or are you still questioning some things?
- Have you done anything during your college years in support of any of your social or political views?
- Have your social or political views changed much while you have been in college? If so, what led to these changes? Can you think of ways in which your social or political views are different from those of your parents or close friends?
- What are some of your views on male/female gender roles? Have you always thought about these roles in this way? What are the sources of your views on gender? Are your views in this area any different from those of your parents?

TAYLOR UNIVERSITY

scholarship • leadership • christian commitment

“There are those who seek knowledge for the sake of knowledge that is curiosity.

There are those who seek knowledge to be known by others that is vanity.

There are those who seek knowledge in order to serve; that is Love.”

—Bernard of Clairvaux (1090-1153)

236 West Reade Avenue • Upland, Indiana 46989-1001 www.tayloru.edu • 1.800.882.3456

We write like lives depend on it...

Because they do. For 175 years, Union University has worked to prepare young men and women for a future when their lives reflect a passion for God's Word and God's world. That's why we have built a team of committed scholar-teachers whose insights reach beyond the campus through a significant list of books and publications. Intentionally evangelical and passionately Biblical, Union is preparing leaders who serve Christ's Kingdom. If God has called you to make an impact on your world, we invite you to explore the Union difference.

For More Information call Union at 901-661-5210 • 1-800-333-UNION

Seattle Pacific University

Seattle Pacific
University

Founded 1891

A Christian University of the Arts,
Sciences and Professions.
Founded in 1891.

Decidedly Academic

Distinctly Christian

Definitely Northwest

Invest in your future. Call: 1-800-366-3344

<http://www.spu.edu>

Complete Your College Degree

Without leaving your family, home or career.

How?

For a FREE Information Packet, call

1-800-424-9595

LIBERTY UNIVERSITY

www.liberty.edu

Liberty University does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, national or ethnic origin, religion, sex, age or physical disability in its admission or employment policies. It is the policy of Liberty University to award academic honors and degrees to students who meet the standards for such awards. It is the policy of Liberty University to award academic honors and degrees to students who meet the standards for such awards.

SPECIAL ADVERTISING SECTION

Colleges That Take Values Seriously"

(from page 96)

capital punishment, and a national health-care plan—they tend to hold more moderate or even liberal viewpoints. My hunch is that some of these students feel they are not allowed to label themselves anything other than "conservative."

Burwell adds that preliminary results might also suggest that, in general, "we overstate the impact of the college years. In a past era, he says, four years of college may have been a landmark, life-changing experience for young men and women. Today, it may be only one part of the larger formation process.

Assuming that is the case, Van Wicklin believes it constitutes a problem and poses a challenge for higher education, since colleges and universities are working with students at an influential time of life.

Both Burwell and Van Wicklin regard the freshman/senior comparison interviews as critical to the task of assessing the extent to which Christian schools are accomplishing their mission. A "snapshot" survey, for example, might reveal that students at Christian schools affirm biblical values to a much greater extent than their secular counterpart. However, such a result might speak more to the kinds of people Christian schools are attracting rather than to the kinds of students they are producing.

One of the things Van Wicklin and Burwell are examining most closely is the extent to which a student's faith has developed and changed during the college years. Sometimes, says Burwell, "changes can produce tensions at home." "By that, I'm not talking about young people becoming atheists or running off to be Buddhists. I'm referring more to doctrinal issues—to Episcopalians becoming Mennonites or vice versa."

These kinds of changes, according to Van Wicklin, can be a positive sign. "The goal of any good liberal arts institution is to get students to think critically and to develop their values within the context of an awareness of alternatives. That's the only way they will claim their faith as their own."

According to Van Wicklin, some students have all the "right answers" when it comes to their faith. Upon closer exam-

(Continued on page 102)

THE CHURCH'S ONE FOUNDATION IS OURS TOO

Mount Vernon Nazarene College is a Christian-centered, four-year liberal arts institution offering excellent academic programs in all fields, a beautiful campus, excellent after-class activities, incredible relationships, worldwide travel and more.

MOUNT VERNON NAZARENE COLLEGE

800 Hartshorn Rd.
Mount Vernon, Ohio
44060-9900

CALL 800-782-2435 FOR MORE INFORMATION AND TO REQUEST A COPY OF "FOR THIS WE STAND,"

a booklet written by MVNC President E. L. Brown Burkhardt which describes the values underlying the MVNC community.

A Houghton education comes with a price.

Hard work.

At Houghton College we encourage students to study and play hard. Why? Because we know that with hard work comes great reward – the reward of a complete education. At Houghton, a supportive Christian atmosphere, a national reputation for academic excellence, and exciting student activities come together in a life-changing experience. If you're not afraid of a lot of hard work, and you want to be spiritually challenged through a Christian liberal arts education, call us at (800) 777-2556, or write to: Admissions Office, Houghton College, Houghton, NY 14744.

Houghton College admits students of any race, color, and national or ethnic origin. The college does not discriminate on these bases, or on the basis of sex or handicap in any college-administered program.

A different path.

A person is walking away from the viewer down a path that is lined with trees. The trees have yellow and orange leaves, suggesting autumn. The path is dark, and the overall scene is dimly lit, with a warm, golden glow from the foliage.

*"Trust in the Lord with all your heart and lean not on your own understanding;
in all your ways acknowledge Him,
and He will direct your paths."*

Proverbs 3:5-6

For more information on our 52 undergraduate and 8 graduate programs, please contact:

Dallas Baptist
UNIVERSITY

3000 Mountain Creek Parkway
Dallas, TX 75211-9299

1.800.460.1DBU www.dbu.edu

Colleges That Take Values Seriously

(from page 102)

nation, however, it might be determined that they have merely adopted the faith and traditions of their parents without having done any critical reflection of the kind that indicates ownership of faith.

Van Wicklin hopes and believes that "Taking Values Seriously" will provide Christian colleges with information and insights that will enable them to move closer to having the kind of influence they want to have. "We don't expect to find magical answers or instant solutions," he says. "But we do think we will find evidence of relationships between students' positive faith development and the kinds of college experiences they have."

For example, perhaps the survey will suggest that a student who had at least two or three faculty mentors is more likely to develop a mature, responsible faith. Or perhaps there may be a relationship between mature faith and cross-cultural experiences or a particular field of study. Van Wicklin, Burwell, and others will be examining literally hundreds of variables in an effort to determine what lessons might be learned from "Taking Values Seriously" and from additional similar studies. Schools will have the opportunity to examine what they are doing in light of what appears to be working at Christian colleges in general and to make appropriate changes.

Launching pad for the future

Results of the survey might suggest that some Christian schools are doing a better job than others. But disclosure of any results, says Van Wicklin, will be handled in such a way that no particular school is either denigrated or elevated. "Our goal," he says, "is not to point any fingers, but to help everyone."

He adds that "Taking Values Seriously" has already begun serving as a launching pad for similar types of assessment projects within the Christian college movement. That, he believes, is a good sign that leaders who care about the mission of integrating faith and learning are not content with where they are, but instead want to move ever further down the path toward excellence.

By L. Katherine Robbin, a freelance writer in Philadelphia.

Be transformed

by the renewing of your mind.

Romans 12:2 (NIV)

At Calvin College, you'll find a place where critical thought and a search for God's truth are inextricably connected. You'll discover a community of learners devoted to Christian service; a curriculum that encourages you to think in new and different ways, an academic environment that challenges you to love God with your mind, and the opportunity to be an agent of renewal in today's world.

Come to Calvin. Be transformed.

Admissions Office | 3201 Burton St. SE | Grand Rapids, MI 49546
616-957-6106 | 800-688-0122 | E-mail: admissions@calvin.edu
Web site: www.calvin.edu

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

GREENVILLE COLLEGE

A TRADITION OF MINISTERIAL EDUCATION SINCE 1892

Master of Arts Leadership And Ministry Program

Your word is a LAMP to my feet and a light for my path.
Psalm 119:105

- 39 hours of course work in Christian Ministry, Biblical Literature, and Theological Studies
- Includes research/practicum in applied ministry
- Biblical in origin; Wesleyan in perspective
- Collaborative
- Convenient, with one-week modular courses taught in August and January
- Practically oriented
- Theologically sound
- Spiritually centered

For program information:
Greenville College
Office of Adult and Graduate Studies

P.O. Box 159, 315 E. College, Greenville, Illinois 62246-0159
Email: holver@greenville.edu (toll free) 888.818.4625

The NEXT GREAT LEAP
for equipping church leaders
is really
a STEP BACK.

Back to the way Jesus himself equipped and trained the 12. At DENVER SEMINARY, we're following the example of the Master Professor with an emphasis on hands-on learning directed by EXPERIENCED MENTORS. Learn more about the seminary education with an innovative approach to knowing, being and doing. We borrowed it from the best!

1-800-922-3040 Ext. 278
e-mail: admit@densem.edu
www.gospelcom.net/densem/

DENVER SEMINARY

P.O. Box 10,000 • Denver, CO 80250

Scholarship Committed

The academic reputation of Wheaton College Graduate School is no accident. Distinguished faculty, outstanding graduates, and renowned authors have made it what it is today—an educational experience that challenges students to integrate personal faith with academic discipline.

We believe that academic theory—like Christian faith—is meaningless without practical application. For more information about the graduate programs at

to Servanthood.

Wheaton College please call,
1-800-888-0141 or e-mail
us at: gradadm@wheaton.edu.
Check out our website
at: www.wheaton.edu.

Since 1860
For Christ and
His Kingdom
Wheaton College
GRADUATE SCHOOL
WHEATON, ILLINOIS

Master of Arts degree in

- Biblical Archaeology
- Biblical and Theological Studies
- Teaching
- Clinical Psychology
- Educational Ministries
- Evangelism
- Interdisciplinary Studies
- Missions and Intercultural Studies

Doctoral degree in
Clinical Psychology (PsyD)

Certificate programs in

- Advanced Biblical Studies
- Leadership and Camp Ministry
- Teaching English as a Second Language

The World Is
Our Campus

Luther
Rice
Seminary

*The Most Recognized
Name in Christian
Distance Education*

- Bachelor
- Master
- Doctor of Ministry

Luther Rice Seminary
3038 Evans Mill Road
Lithonia, GA 30038
1-770-484-1204
1-800-442-1577
E-mail: lrs@lrs.edu
Web Page: www.lrs.edu

Serving Since 1962

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

Yale Divinity School is pleased to announce the appointment of

MIROSLAV VOLF

Henry B. Wright Professor of Systematic Theology

Professor Volf joins an outstanding systematic theology faculty including:

MARILYN MCCORD ADAMS

GILBERT BOND

L. SERENE JONES

DAVID KELSEY

LETTY RUSSELL

NICHOLAS WOLTERSTORFF

For Admission inquiries, phone: (203) 432-5360 www.yale.edu/divinity

Multnomah Biblical Seminary

MISSION: Ministry

DR. BRUCE FONG: MBS
faculty member; Promise Keeper's keynote speaker and co-founder of Clear Creek Community
Church.

MULTNOMAH BIBLICAL SEMINARY is the perfect
"mission headquarters," where both students and faculty serve in the trenches. If you want to join a faith-building community and put solid Biblical training to work in a vital ministry internship, then you must explore Multnomah Biblical Seminary.
There may be no better place to prepare for the mission God has for you.

MULTNOMAH BIBLICAL SEMINARY
"Where Ministry is the Word"

8435 N.E. Glisan Street
Portland, Oregon 97220
Toll Free: 1-800-275-4672
Email: admiss@multnomah.edu
Internet: www.multnomah.edu

TOOLS for Effective Ministry

Dallas Seminary's graduate programs are designed to give you the tools you need to communicate God's Word
clearly and effectively.

Call (800) 992-0998 for a free brochure.

DALLAS
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

Preparing Pastors Is Our Specialty

Our Distinctives:

- ◆ Theologically Conservative
- ◆ Dispensational
- ◆ Premillennial
- ◆ Moderately Calvinistic
- ◆ Biblical Languages Emphasized

CALVARY

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

5800 Calvary Road, Kansas City MO 64147
Call Toll Free 1-800-326-3960

A Seminary To Change The World.

Kevin and Carol Hinman believe that family life and ministry go hand in hand. That's why Regent School of Divinity was their seminary choice. Their Regent training deepened their commitment to family and to leadership training at home and overseas. Now they conduct pastors' training conferences across the globe, and translate leadership training materials into other languages.

If you and your family are called to missions, pastoral ministry, or are simply eager to serve the Lord, Regent School of Divinity is your seminary choice, too! And our field-based program may be the perfect fit for your schedule.

Call toll free today for more information! (800) 723-6162

REGENT
UNIVERSITY

1000 Regent University Drive, Virginia Beach, VA 23464-9800

SCHOOL OF DIVINITY

e-mail: diischool@regent.edu • website: www.regent.edu/acad/schdiv

* The Hinmans enhanced their individual educations by earning joint degrees in other disciplines at Regent. Ask for details!

*Kevin ('91, M.Div., Missiology;
M.A., Journalism) and Carol Hinman ('94, M.A., Missiology;
M.A., Business) with daughter
Kathryn. The couple co-founded Leadership Training International.*

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

DO YOU BELIEVE
A MESSAGE STILL
NEEDS TO BE POSTED
ON CHURCH DOORS? ON THE
WORLD'S DOORS? IF SO...

FAITH SEMINARY
IS FOR YOU.

Offering the MDiv and the MCM
with concentrations in Christian Counseling,
Theology, Biblical Studies, or Missiology.

RESIDENT OR EXTERNAL STUDY
www.FaithSeminary.edu

1-888-777-7675 FAX (253) 759-1790
Faith Seminary Admissions Office
3504 N. Pearl St. Tacoma, WA 98407

Obey His Call

Focus on the inerrant
Word for a lifetime
of ministry

Master of Divinity
Master of Arts
...and a whole lot more!

WESTMINSTER
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY IN CALIFORNIA

1725 Bear Valley Parkway, Escondido, CA 92027-4128
(760) 480-8474 • www.wtscal.edu

PREPARE FOR IMPACT.

If you want to have an impact on the world, choose the seminar that can have the greatest impact on you. At Columbia, we focus first and foremost on your spiritual life, then challenge you to academic excellence and give you practical ministry skills. Our customized degree programs offer the flexibility you need to build on your past as you prepare for the future.

Become a world Christian who serves God with excellence. Call Columbia today at 1-800-777-2227.

Columbia Biblical Seminary & Graduate School of Mission
A division of Columbia International University
7435 Monticello Rd. • P.O. Box 3122 • Columbia, SC 29230
803.754.4100 • Toll Free 1-800-777-2227 • www.ciu.edu
Preparing World Christians To Know Him And To Make Him Known
CALL FOR OUR EXTENSION CATALOG

MA BIB/THEO STUDIES

Biblical/Theological Studies

If you long to know the mind of God, you must learn to use your own. The Biblical/Theological Studies program teaches you not just what to think, but how. When you come to RTS, you'll study the Word with men and women who aren't afraid of asking hard questions. And you'll learn how to make your Christian faith practical and effective amid the skepticism of our post-modern culture.

REFORMED THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
Make It Count

In Jackson 800-543-2703
In Orlando 800-752-4382
In Charlotte 800-755-2429
RTS@rts.edu

IS THERE A CALL OF GOD ON YOUR LIFE? DO YOU WANT TO BECOME A MIN., PASTORAL CNSLR, SOCIAL SER. WKR, BIBLE TCHER? EARN AN ASSO, BACH., MASTER OR DOC. DEG. THERE IN YOUR HOME OR OFF.

LAEL CNSLG. CENTER TEACHES:
"PSYCHOLOGY KNOWS ALL THE PROBLEMS, JESUS KNOWS ALL THE ANSWERS."

"LAEL" is a Hebrew word means "Belonging to GOD." LAEL is a conservative, interdenomin. evangelical school, believing the inerrancy of the Bible.

CALL TODAY FOR A CATALOG. TRANS. IN COLLEGE CREDITS

LAEL COL. & GRAD. SCHOOL
3721 St. Bridget Ln, St. Louis, MO 63074 + 314-426-7000 --
1-800-321-LAEL

Master of Social Work

The only nationally accredited program in the Coalition of Christian Colleges & Universities

CSWE Accredited
Full Time, Part Time and Advanced Standing Program

NEW for Fall 1999
Church Social Work Concentration
Joint MSW and M.Div. degree

Roberts Wesleyan College
2301 Westside Drive
Rochester, New York 14624-1000
(716) 594-6600
1-800-777-4RWC
www.rwc.edu

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

BOLDLY EVANGELICAL!

Since 1913

offer:
ter of Arts,
ter of Divinity
ter of Christian istries
Doctor of istry degrees.

Explore whether God is leading you to Northern
Seminary!

us today! 800-YES-NBTS (800-937-6287)

NORTHERN
baptist theological seminary
660 E. Butterfield Rd. • Lombard, Illinois 60148
web site: www.seminary.edu
e-mail: admissions@northern.seminary.edu

Knox Is Here For You!

"Apply your heart to instruction"
(Proverbs 23.2)

Knox is here with solid
Reformation theology to equip you to change the world for Christ.

•Doctor of Ministry
•Master of Divinity
•Biblical and Theological Studies
•Certificate in Biblical Studies

1-800-344-5669

E-mail: knox@crpc.org

KNOX
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Fort Lauderdale, Florida
D. James Kennedy, Chancellor

Carolina University of Theology

EARN YOUR DEGREE AT HOME

YOU ALREADY LIVE ON CAMPUS!

Going to seminary or graduate school once meant packing up the family station wagon and the rental truck so you could move to a strange city, get a minimum wage job, and go in debt. Those days are over! Through Carolina University you can complete an accredited Bachelors of Arts, Masters, or Doctorate degree without leaving your home, your ministry, or your job.

TUITION FINANCING AVAILABLE

AREAS OF STUDY INCLUDE:

*Biblical StudiesMinistryChristian Education
TheologyChristian Counseling Psychology*

FOR MORE INFORMATION WRITE OR CALL

Carolina University of Theology

505-B Woodlawn Street

Belmont, NC 28012

(704) 827-1740 (704) 827-1802 FAX

E-Mail CUT@TNTIE.COM

THE • U N S E M I N A R Y

Who's he?

He's John G. Stackhouse, Jr., listed in Canadian Who's Who as an award-winning historian, theologian, and journalist. But here at Regent, he's "the new guy" who teaches Christianity and contemporary culture.

Come study with our new Sangwoo Youtong Chee Professor of Theology, John Stackhouse, who is equally at ease writing theology and speaking on a talk show. When it comes to Christ and culture, he knows what's what.

Admissions Dept C118

5800 University Blvd., Vancouver, BC Canada V6T 2E4

☎ (604) 224-3245 Fax 224-3097 Toll free 1-800-663-8664

Website: www.regent-college.edu

Admissions e-mail: admissions@regent-college.edu

Regent
College

AN INTERNATIONAL
GRADUATE SCHOOL
OF CHRISTIAN STUDIES

GOT VISION?

Moody's Graduate School can help you make it a reality.

For over ten years, the Moody Graduate School has been offering graduate programs to enrich and to strengthen students for ministry. Whether you are a recent college graduate, a full-time Christian worker, or in a time of transition, our programs offer uncompromising scriptural scholarship, uncommon flexibility, and real-life application through hands-on ministry.

NEW NEW

MASTER OF DIVINITY

MASTER OF ARTS IN URBAN MINISTRY

MASTER OF ARTS IN MINISTRY

MASTER OF ARTS IN BIBLICAL STUDIES

GRADUATE STUDIES PROGRAM CERTIFICATE

Admissions Office
Moody Bible Institute
820 N. La Salle Blvd.
Chicago, IL 60610

The Master of Divinity and Master of Arts in Urban Ministry programs will officially be offered in fall 1999, but you can start now by calling

1-800-967-4MBI.

Visit our Web site at www.moody.edu for more information about Moody's Graduate School!

Resist Christ

How Do You Help People See the Truth
In a Culture that Will Believe Anything?

live in an age that grants plausibility to every idea and certainty to none.”
h those words, Alistair Begg puts his finger on the pulse of a culture can’t separate fact from fiction. And issues an urgent call for all of us iscern, defend, and cling to the absolute truth of our faith. Not since Stott’s Basic Christianity has one author so definitively ented the essential facts of the gospel—in a way that speaks not just to the mind, but to the heart. And it’s available as a two-book set—one to keep, and one to give to a friend. Ask for What Angels Wish They Knew at your bookstore, or call 1-800-678-6928. (For the Christian bookstore nearest you call 1-800-991-7747.) And discover what the Bible really teaches about a salvation so glorious, it’s beyond the grasp of any angel. Yet freely available to us all.

MOODY
The Name You Can Trust
www.moodypress.org

Fast-Track Masters. Long-Term Results.

Busy professional

Simpson's modular MA

Spiritual enrichment

Practical experience

Be a more effective professional

If you want to earn an MA, but can't find the time, Simpson Graduate School has the answer. It's the MA in a modular format—one-week sessions spaced over three years (a total of nine weeks). Or, simply sign up for individual sessions that suit your needs.

For pastors, worship leaders, counselors, missionary candidates, church education staff, church planters, evangelists, administrators, and lay persons, these programs emphasize practical experience and spiritual enrichment. They're taught by Simpson faculty and visiting professors with expertise in all these areas.

If you're on the fast track and can't find time to earn an MA, Simpson's programs in a modular format could be the answer.

For a brochure, call 800-598-2493.

MA in Christian Ministry

Church Education

Church Planting & Growth

Diversified Ministry

Pastoral Counseling

Pastoral Ministry

Preaching

Worship Ministry

Youth Ministry

MA in Missiology

Graduate School

2211 College View Drive, Redding, California 96003

800-598-2493 530-224-5606 Fax: 530-224-5627

email: admissions@simpsonca.edu

www.simpsonca.edu

THE MARKETPLACE

Cost: 46 cents per character (each space & punctuation counts as a character); avg. 45 characters per line. Min. $39.10 (85 characters). CT blind box number available at $6 each insertion; checkmark box ☒ $14 each insertion. Supply permanent street address and phone number. Ads set display style: $276/column inch. Combination package available for CHRISTIANITY TODAY, CHRISTIAN READER, & YOUR CHURCH: 2 magazines—44 cents per character per insertion; 3 magazines—42 cents per character per insertion. Display style: 2 magazines—$263 per insertion; 3 magazines—$252 per insertion. All classified ads will now be automatically placed on CHRISTIANITY ONLINE at no additional charge. IMPORTANT: Prepayment & written confirmation required to process ads. Visa, MasterCard, or personal check accepted; fax (630) 260-9401. Employment ads are given priority. All other ads will be placed in first available issue. Deadline for reservation or cancellation is seven weeks prior to actual issue date. Address correspondence to: Classified Advertising, Christianity Today, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

WHEATON COLLEGE

Dean of Natural & Social Sciences

Dean of Humanities & Theological Studies
Wheaton College seeks to appoint two new deans who, with the dean of the Conservatory and Fine Arts, will be responsible to the provost for administrative leadership of Wheaton College's undergraduate and graduate academic program.

- The dean of the Natural and Social Sciences will oversee the traditional natural and social science disciplines, including graduate programs in Education (M.A.T.) and Clinical Psychology (M.A. and Psy.D.; APA accredited).
- The dean of the Humanities and Theological Studies will oversee the traditional humanities, theological, and ministry disciplines, including graduate programs in Biblical and Theological Studies, Educational Ministries and Evangelism, and Missions and Intercultural Studies.

Wheaton College seeks inquiries from and nominations of candidates who were trained in one of the divisional disciplines and who, ideally, are accomplished as teachers, scholars, and administrators. Persons interested in either position should send a complete vita with a cover letter summarizing their qualifications and commitment to Christian higher education to the Director of Human Resources, Wheaton College, 501 College Avenue, Wheaton, IL 60187-5593. Suitable candidates will be asked to complete a more extensive application process. Wheaton College is an evangelical Christian liberal arts college whose faculty and staff affirm a statement of faith and adhere to lifestyle expectations. The college complies with federal and state guidelines for nondiscrimination in employment. Women and minority candidates are encouraged to apply.

MINISTER OF PASTORAL CARE

Fast-growing 4,700-member evangelical church is seeking Minister of Pastoral Care. Seminary degree preferred. Clear commitment to Christ and biblical truth required. Stephen ministry experience helpful. Competitive salary and benefits. Located in planned community with excellent schools and amenities north of Houston. Send résumé to Dr. Ed Robb, 3901 South Panther Creek Drive, The Woodlands, TX 77381.

TEACH IN JAPAN: Reach Asians for Christ. Teach in English. Several K-12 & ESL teacher openings. Mission school of 400; 2-year contracts. Must raise partial support. Write Dr. Bob Greninger, Okinawa Christian School, P.O. Box 14250, Gainesville, FL 32604; (1-800) 446-6423.

SEEKING DEVELOPMENT DIRECTOR with personality and skills to build a development program, conduct annual campaign, and provide support for capital campaign. Benefits; salary negotiable. Call for job description and application: (626) 355-4242, x-226, Maranatha High School, Sierra Madre, CA.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

BELHAVEN COLLEGE, a Christian liberal arts college committed to the integration of faith and learning, seeks applicants in the following areas. Unless otherwise noted, all positions are for fall 1999. Candidates should possess the Ph.D. (or equivalent terminal degree), articulate a Christian world-view in their academic discipline and teaching, and desire to prepare students to serve Christ in their occupations, relationships, and the world of ideas.

- Dance
- Education (2 positions; 1 in January)
- U.S. History
- Psychology
- Sports Medicine
- Theatre

Send vita and supporting materials (including a 3-4 paragraph philosophy of Christian education and how you anchor your teaching discipline into a Christian world-view) to William P. Anderson, Jr., Vice Provost, Belhaven College, 1500 Peachtree Street, Jackson, MS 39202-1789.

DIRECTOR OF YOUTH MINISTRIES

Riverton Presbyterian Church of Lynchburg, Virginia, an evangelical and Reformed congregation (900+) of the Presbyterian Church (USA) is looking for a Director of Youth Ministries. Position includes directing a ministry to junior and senior high students which will nurture their faith and strengthen their commitment to Christ and his church, while supporting the authority of the family. Degree in youth ministries or similar field preferred. Direct reply to: Youth Search Committee, Riverton Presbyterian Church, P.O. Box 3017, Lynchburg, VA 24503.

FACULTY POSITIONS

Waynesburg College

Accounting: Teaching tax, advanced auditing, fraud investigation, accounting information systems; master's (or JD) required, CPA and experience in forensic accounting or fraud investigation preferred; primarily undergraduate courses with possibility of MBA teaching.

Education: Two or three positions; department chair and elementary education; administering and teaching in variety of content. Doctorate preferred; school experience required.

Graphics & Photography: Teach imaging, computer graphics, photography, and related areas. Master's required; doctorate preferred.

Physics: Teaching physics (nonmajors), some computer science or mathematics, advising pre-engineering students; doctorate preferred.

See home page at <http://waynesburg.edu>. All positions require commitment to Christian higher education, breadth of teaching skills, plus normal full-time faculty responsibilities. Send CV, copies of transcripts, letter addressing qualifications and philosophy of education, and three references to Richard Stanislaw, Vice President for Academic Affairs, Waynesburg College, Waynesburg, PA 15370 or rstanislaw@waynesburg.edu.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

EDUCATION

The School of Education at Trinity International University welcomes applications for a tenure-track position to begin Fall 1999. Responsibilities include teaching and coordinating courses in secondary math and science methods and overseeing the development of our expanding technology emphasis. The position could also include teaching general methods, foundations, or multicultural education and assisting with student teacher supervision. Qualifications include a terminal degree, public school experience, superior teaching skills, and an interest in working within diverse settings. Send curriculum vita by January 4, 1999, to: Dr. Jeanette L. Hsieh, TIU College of Arts and Sciences, 2065 Half Day Road, Deerfield, IL 60015. TIU is affiliated with the Evangelical Free Church of America. Faculty must subscribe to Trinity's Statement of Faith and Community Expectations. Trinity International University is an equal opportunity employer. Women and minority candidates are encouraged to apply.

PASTOR OF WORSHIP ARTS

Multigeneration, growing evangelical congregation of 600+ on the shores of Lake Michigan. Seeking full-time experienced person responsible for music, drama, & media ministries. Vocal/keyboard skills desired for traditional and contemporary worship. Send résumé to Forest Park Covenant Church, 3815 Henry St., Muskegon, MI 49441; fax: (616) 780-3873; E-mail: FPCovC@aol.com

PASTOR OF ADULT EDUCATION

Village Church of Gurnee, a fast-growing church of 1,300+ is committed to developing: an intentional process for discipleship, opportunities for spiritual gift discovery, various adult educational opportunities, and programs for leadership development. We are looking for an experienced pastor with an exceptional passion for developing mature Christians and effective leaders. He will build and lead teams of ministry directors who will develop these areas. Skills needed: Proven ministry experience; strong leader who is gifted in teaching and administration; solid theological understanding of Christian growth and ministry. M.Div. and five years ministry experience preferred. We are an evangelical church in a growing northern suburb of Chicago. Send résumé to Village Church of Gurnee, Box 210, 1319 N. Hunt Club Road, Gurnee, IL 60031.

CENTER CITY PHILADELPHIA Messianic Jewish Ministry is seeking exec. dir./pastor. This unique evangelistic outreach ministry under PC (USA) has been in existence for over 50 years. We prefer a Hebrew-Christian Minister to fill this position; however, all résumés are welcome. Submit résumé and letter of introduction to C.C.A.J., 1907 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, PA 19103, or call (215) 568-1030.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

ASSOCIATE PASTOR

Do you have a heart for building community, developing and leading ministry teams, equipping and shepherding adult leaders and workers in children and family ministries? Village Church of Gurnee, a fast-growing church of 1,300+, is looking for an experienced pastor to give overall leadership to our children's ministry directors and shepherd 160+ leaders and workers. We are an evangelical church in a growing Northern Illinois community that ministers to many young families. Skills needed: proven ministry experience; strong leader who is gifted in shepherding, team building, and teaching. M.Div. and five years ministry experience preferred. Send résumé to Village Church of Gurnee, 1319 N. Hunt Club Road, Box 310, Gurnee, IL 60031.

CHICAGO METROPOLITAN CENTER DIRECTOR

CMC is a study and internship program for students from a coalition of six Christian liberal arts colleges in Iowa (Central, Dordt, Northwestern), Michigan (Calvin, Hope), and Illinois (Trinity Christian). The position is full-time (12 months) beginning July 1, 1999. Responsibilities include coordinating staffing, budgets, education programs, and student recruitment. Preference will be given to candidates with doctorates, experience in teaching and experiential education, and a strong commitment to the Reformed Christian faith. Apply to Burton Rozema, VPAA, Trinity Christian College, 6601 West College Drive, Palos Heights, IL 60463; (708) 239-4760; E-mail: Burt.Rozema@trnity.edu. CMC encourages applications without regard to ethnic background, disability, gender, or national origin.

MINISTER OF OUTREACH

Large downtown church in the Reformed tradition is seeking a visionary Minister of Outreach with a passion for the lost. We are looking for a candidate able to minister to the poor and the powerful, and to equip the members of our regional church to engage in friendship evangelism. Ordained or unordained, male or female. For more information or to send your résumé, write to the Search Committee, LaGrave CRC, 107 LaGrave Ave. SE, Grand Rapids, MI 49503, or call Dr. Mast at (616) 454-7204.

WRITER

Communications firm serving Christian ministries seeks a writer who believes in the power of words and knows how to use them—both to gain attention and get a response. Minimum two years experience in direct mail fundraising (or proof that you qualify without that experience). Good salary and benefits. Great place to live. Outstanding clients. Send résumé to: Creative Director, 19265 Powder Hill Place NE, Poulsbo, WA 98370.

MEMORIAL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, 301 Interstate Park Dr., Montgomery, AL 36109, (334) 274-1018; fax: (334) 274-1046. Full-time director of music ministries for an active, Christ-centered church with a strong music tradition. Responsibilities include conducting the adult choir; overseeing children's, youth, and handbell choirs; coordinating a concert series; and developing new programs. Master's degree and four years of experience preferred. Salary negotiable. Applicant should submit résumé, statement of personal faith (250 words), and philosophy of sacred music (250 words) to include the five choral works that best exemplify the philosophy. Send résumé to Chairperson, Director of Music Ministries Search Committee, at the above address.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

DIRECTOR OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

Emphasis on Children & Youth Ministry
Dynamic, growing church (PCUSA) of 500+ is seeking a full-time D.C.E. for expanding program for all age levels. We desire an energetic leader who loves children and can relate well to all ages. Master's degree and minimum of three years parish experience preferred. Generous compensation package. Join us in Kendall, Miami's upscale southwest suburb, for an exciting opportunity in ministry. Send résumé and cover letter to: Central Presbyterian Church, Attn: Dr. Kathryn Roach, CE Moderator, 12455 S.W. 104 Street, Miami, FL 33186; fax: (305) 598-1239.

WHEATON COLLEGE

Director for the Office of Christian Outreach
Wheaton College is accepting applications for the position of Director for the Office of Christian Outreach. This director is responsible for the supervision of all campus ministries, including student-run ministries of Student Missionary Project, Youth Hostel ministry, and National City Ministries. The director will provide leadership, guidance, and counsel for the student chairs, cabinet members, and students in ministries. An effective candidate will have a minimum of three years experience in some form of Christian ministry. An M.A. is preferred, but will consider applicant in process of completing a degree. Wheaton College is an evangelical Christian liberal arts college whose faculty and staff affirm a statement of faith and adhere to lifestyle expectations. The college complies with federal and state guidelines for nondiscrimination in employment. Women and minority applicants are encouraged to apply. Résumés can be submitted to the Director of Human Resources, Wheaton College, Wheaton, IL 60187.

DO YOU NOW, or have you in the past, sold institutional organs at the retail level? A major manufacturer of electronic institutional organs is seeking to fill an entry-level marketing position to work educating a nationwide group of dealers in proper demonstration techniques and modern marketing strategies. The following skills are vital to be considered for our selection process:

- A musical background in organ studies is required. The ideal candidate will be able to perform a variety of music, including contemporary Christian, gospel, and classical.
- Knowledge of MIDI and its applications would be a plus.
- Extensive travel is required.
- Relocation may be necessary.

Please send your résumé in confidence to: CT Classified Ads Box 217, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188.

SENIOR PASTOR

Winnetka Bible Church is a strong, vibrant faith community of 600 attendees located in the beautiful Chicago/North Shore suburb of Winnetka. We're looking for a deeply committed evangelical who has a big vision, a big heart, and a willingness to lead a talented staff and committed congregation. Our new pastor needs to communicate biblical truth effectively and be capable of thinking strategically and creatively about how a regional church should do ministry. Our staff is in place, programs are in full swing, the congregation is growing in the midst of our transition, and we're financially healthy. For more information, please contact: Ray Zeiss, Chair of the Pastoral Search Committee, by writing him at WBC, 555 Birch St., Winnetka, IL 60093; E-mail: crz528@nwu.edu. Confidentiality guaranteed.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

RESEARCH PSYCHOLOGY

The Department of Psychology of Greenville College, tenure-track position, Assistant Associate Professor (ABD considered, Ph.D. preferred). Prior college teaching experience required. Position includes student advisement and teaching Experimental Design, Learning Motivation, and Cognitive Psychology. Marriage and Family Therapy licensure (AAM Clinical Member) required. Greenville College is a Christian liberal arts college, 50 miles east of St. Louis. Wesleyan heritage; open community of care for persons of all faiths. Greenville College is an equal opportunity employer; a highly encourages persons of minority to apply. Salary and benefits commensurate with academic achievement and experience. Send curriculum vita and letters of recommendation to Jonathan S. Raymond, Ph.D., Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs, Greenville College, P.O. Box 159, Greenville, IL 62246-0159. Must be received by December 16, 1998.

FULL TIME MINISTER OF YOUTH & YOUNG ADULTS

Evangelical, biblical, nonaffiliated Baptist church in the western suburbs of Chicago with established youth ministry eagerly seeking candidate with prior youth ministry experience, a degree related to youth ministry, skill to plan and implement programs and ability to work with staff in team ministry. Contact: Western Springs Baptist Church, Youth Search Committee Chairperson, 4475 W. 111th Rd., Western Springs, IL 60558.

FIRST REFORMED CHURCH, Schenectady, NY, is building a faithful and creative ministry team. Two full-time positions are available. For our ministries with children and youth, we seek an experienced professional, ordained or lay, with advanced training in education and faith development. For our ministries of pastoral care, adult education, small groups, and congregational fellowship, we seek an ordained person. Ministry team includes the current senior minister and a flexible structure to make optimum use of staff gifts for ministry in congregation and community. First Reformed Church is a diverse, ecumenical, and progressive downtown church of 800 members and seekers. Excellent salary and benefits provided. Women, racial/ethnic minority persons, and clergy couples are urged to apply. Job descriptions available on request. Please send letter of introduction and résumé with minister's profile form to FRC, Search Committee, 8 N. Church Street, Schenectady, NY 12305-1607.

THE EASTERN BAPTIST THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY is seeking two colleagues to join our uniquely diverse faculty and community to teach New Testament studies and New Testament Greek and the other Christian Theology and Ethics. These are full-time, open rank, tenure-track positions. The seminary is committed to its motto: "The Whole Gospel for the Whole World through the Whole Persons" and is located in the Philadelphia metropolitan area. The successful candidates will have a Ph.D./Th.D. in the respective fields and teaching experience. Commitment to Eastern Seminary's holistic evangelical stance and to the formation of leaders is required. Women and minorities are encouraged to apply. Send letter and vita to Dr. Eric H. Ohlmann, Academic Dean, Eastern Baptist Theological Seminary, 6 Lancaster Avenue, Wynnewood, PA 19086. E-mail: deansofc@ebts.edu; fax: (610) 683-3834 by January 31, 1999.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

UNIVERSITY PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (USA), a 3,800+ congregation in Seattle, Washington, is seeking two positions to lead Department of Urban and Global Mission. Senior Director/Associate Pastor of Urban and Global Mission should have a minimum of 10 years cross-cultural experience as an individual contributor and leader in urban and global mission ministry. This person will be senior member, communicator, leader, and pastor of the department. (This position will be selected by the congregation.) Assistant Director/Associate Pastor of Urban and Global Mission should have a minimum of 5 years of similar experience and will have an urban or global focus area that complements the senior director. Both candidates should have the following qualifications: deep personal love for Jesus Christ; ability to lead a department with a staff of 12, over 400 volunteers, and a substantial budget that supports over 70 career missionaries; proven team-building and pastoral skills with staff, missionaries and local, national and international partners; ability to articulate a vision of mission to equip, encourage, and work alongside volunteers and career missionaries; effective preacher and teacher of the Scriptures and biblical mission mandate; personal, hands-on, cross-cultural field and administrative ministry experience. Please submit résumé and references to: University Presbyterian Church, Attention: Christi Scoville, 4540 15th Ave. NE, Seattle, WA 98105; (206) 524-7300 or e-mail: christis@upc.org. Web page: www.upc.org

WHEATON COLLEGE

Faculty Positions

The following positions are available beginning August 1999.

- Biology: Assistant Professor, tenure-track; experience in field biology or terrestrial ecology.
- Conservatory: Assistant/Associate Professor of Voice, tenure-track; studio/class voice, vocal literature/pedagogy; soprano/tenor.
- English: Assistant Professor, tenure-track; concentration in 19th- & 20th-century American Literature; expository writing. Visiting Instructor/Assistant Professor; two positions—one concentration in American literature and one in classical literature.
- Foreign Languages: Visiting Assistant Professor of Spanish; native or near-native fluency in Spanish.
- Mathematics/Computer Science: Assistant or Associate Professor, tenure-track in computer sciences.
- Psychology: Assistant Professor, tenure-track; concentration in cognitive psychology.

Send letter of interest and curriculum vita to Office of the Provost, Wheaton College, Wheaton, IL 60187. Application deadline for most positions is December 15, 1998. Wheaton College is an evangelical Christian liberal arts college whose faculty and staff affirm a statement of faith and adhere to lifestyle expectations. The college complies with federal and state guidelines for nondiscrimination in employment. Women and minority candidates are encouraged to apply.

GRADUATING COLLEGE SENIORS are invited to apply for the 26th annual Pulliam Journalism Fellowships. Twenty journalism or liberal arts graduates in the August 1998-June 1999 class will receive ten-week summer internships. Stipend is $5,250. Early-admissions application postmark deadline is Nov. 15, 1998. By Dec. 15, 1998, up to five early-admissions winners will be notified. All other entries must be postmarked by March 1, 1999. For an application packet, write: Russell B. Pulliam, Pulliam Fellowship Director, The Indianapolis News, P.O. Box 145, Indianapolis, IN 46206-0145.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

DIRECTOR OF CHILDREN'S MINISTRY Christ Episcopal Church, a dynamic, growing church of 2,000 in metro Kansas City, is seeking a full-time Director of Children's Ministry. The church's vision is to "make disciples who make disciples for Jesus Christ." Working on a staff team of 13, the Director's ministry will be to raise up leaders to provide an exceptional, innovative, and creative evangelistic and discipleship ministry for children. Committed Christians (from any tradition) with energy, vision, and proven experience in children's ministry leadership are invited to apply. Fax, e-mail, or send résumé to: Alison Barfoot, Christ Church, 5500 W. 91st St., Overland Park, KS 66207; fax: (913) 648-0854; E-mail: AlisonBar@aol.com.

looking for pastoral staff?
seeking a new ministry?
www.ministrysearch.com
e-mail version also available:
info@ministrysearch.com

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

EXPERIENCE THE WORLD'S only personal achievement television network! TV with no negativity, violence, or gratuitous sex! Share the future of positive television! Call now for your free information pack (800) 701-7794.

UNLIMITED INCOME potential with best MLM company in America. Great carcinogen-free products! Free enrollment. Call (1-888) 426-7100.

ASSEMBLE products at home for best companies. Great extra income! Call: (1-800) 377-6000, ext. 8290.

RETIRED PASTOR/ENTREPRENEUR/LAY LEADER type. Build a lucrative business with cutting-edge technology. My average managers earn $80K/yr. and other perks: cars, travel, profit sharing, & more! Investment required, 0 interest financing for credit-worthy candidates. Sales experience a plus. North America is your territory. If you're success minded, call Doug at Action Jackson Marketing, Inc. (1-888) 426-6826.

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

RESPONDING TO

WATCHTOWER ERRORS

Witness effectively to Jehovah's Witnesses. For free info. call (1-888) 339-SECT, PIN 8271.

THE FALSE DOCTRINE OF SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS: An Evangelical Resource, An Appeal to SDA Leadership, by Dale Ratzlaff; (800) 355-7073, www.ratzlaff.com

THE HOUSE CHURCH MOVEMENT—a catalog of books and tapes available on this fresh, new, revolutionary movement. P.O. Box 285, Sargent, GA 30275; (1-800) 645-2342.

THE RAPTURE IS COMING! Prepare for this great event. Our exciting new book, Heaven Bound, teaches how to protect your possessions from the Antichrist, what the Great Deception is about, how to help those left behind, etc.: $10.00 ppd., Silos Publishing, Dept. CTR, PO Box 26115, Tamarac, FL 33320.

MANUSCRIPTS WANTED, ALL TYPES. Publisher with 75-year tradition. "Author's Guide to Subsidy Publishing"; (1-800) 695-9599.

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

REJECTION: TURNING YOUR LEMONS INTO LEMONADE: 185-page book. Send $15 to Marc Royer, Box 575, Granger, IN 46530.

✓ WORSHIP MUSIC RESOURCES print music and helps for the classically trained church pianist; recordings by William Phemister; phone/fax: (630) 665-9321; www.wheatonmusres.com

HAPPINESS IN 30 DAYS OR LESS: 93-page book. Send $10 to Marc Royer, Box 575, Granger, IN 46530.

JOYCE LANDORF HEATHERLEY Books & Tapes: Balcony People, Irregular People, My Blue Blanket, The Inheritance, Fragrance of Beauty, Changepoints, Unworld People, Richest Lady in Town, Silent September, Fragile Times, and others. Balcony Publishing, P.O. Box 340079, Austin, TX 78734; (1-800) 777-7949.

JESUS DID NOT RETURN IN AD 70, a biblical refutation of preterist theology; 28 pp., $3. A Clearer View of the Rapture, premillennial; 110 pp., softcover; $6.00 postpaid. John E. Young, 6 Robert St., Rockaway, NJ 07866.

COMPUTER/VIDEO PROGRAMS

CUSTOMIZED WEDDING interactive multimedia CD-ROM. A piece of unique digital art commissioned for the wedding or wedding anniversary. E-mail: jtong@pacific.net.sg.

CHURCH MANAGEMENT SOFTWARE: Windows, MD-DOS; contributions & membership; financial; $85 each. Free trial. Vian Corporation (908) 537-4642; http://www.vian.com.

CHURCH MANAGEMENT SOFTWARE, Faithful Steward 1.8, manages: membership, donations, links with accounting software. For Windows 3.1, 95, 98, & Mac. Demo $15, full version $199, Bible CD $50, Pastor's Library CD $70. Call (800) DAKONIA or (909) 861-8787.

DRAMA

✓ CHRISTIAN DRAMA. Hundreds of plays for adults and youth. Free catalog. Eldridge Publishing: (1-800) 95-CHURCH, or http://www.95church.com.

FINANCE

WE BUY mortgages, trust deeds, and structured settlements. Call for free quote. Ameritrust (888) 830-9613.

MONEY TROUBLES? Overdue bills? Reduce interest, cut monthly credit card payments, restore credit. Non-profit agency can help. Call (1-800) SAVE-ME-2.

TRAVEL

LONDON U.K. Foreign Missions Club, Christian guesthouse. Reductions for missionaries and full-time ministers. 26 Aberdeen Park, Highbury, London N52BJ; Fax (011) 071-704-1853.

PRODUCTS

GEMS FROM JESUS, spirit-filled game teaches children about Jesus: $30 U.S., $40 Canada (Allow 6-8 weeks for delivery). L. Phillips, P.O. Box 15503, Pensacola, FL 32514.

PEWS for sale: 24 12-foot medium solid oak pews in good condition. Reasonable price. Please call (810) 225-8411; E-mail: WES-TRATE@mcnamee.com or fax (810) 220-0094.

PRODUCTS

www.CHRISTIAN GIFT BASKETS.com
Christian item baskets for Christmas and all occasions via UPS; (888) 866-7878.

"VISIT GOD'S WEBSITE—THE BIBLE" on 50/50 white t-shirt (S-XX-L), $16.95; bumper stickers, $2.00. Send request and money orders to Lexcedes, P.O. Box 61192, Virginia Beach, VA 23466.

Discount Tapes & Supplies

Save on Cassettes, Duplicators, Video Cassettes, Computer Projectors and more.
Call for a full color catalog.
1-800-251-6388

24 hr. ordering on the web at:
www.clwelectronics.com

MINISTRY AIDS

☒ SERMONHELP.COM can help your busy Advent and Christmas season. Full lectionary and topical sermons for each week. Exceptional value subscriptions available now. Visit www.sermonhelp.com

PRISONMINISTRY.COM
Bibles, books for prisoners, chaplains, prison ministries.

☒ TROUBLED YOUTH: Starting an outreach? You can avoid major obstacles we survived starting our Camp/Community ministry in 1970. Save time & pain with our Survival Guide. Call Rich at Youth Investment (612) 449-0004.

EDUCATION

SEMINARS FOR STUDENTS, January 1999. Join students from across North America, missionaries from several nations, plus international students and church leaders from Asia, Africa, and Latin America to explore global issues of church and mission. Cosponsored by OMSC and 28 seminaries. Credit available through the seminaries. Overseas Ministries Study Center, 490 Prospect Street, New Haven, CT 06511. E-mail: study@OMSC.org.

FREE! Audio Bible courses by correspondence. Write P.O. Box 233, Washington, KY 41096. USA only.

LET'S FACE IT! A new century is upon us, and a new generation is waiting to be equipped to conquer it. ARE YOU READY? Paul said to Timothy: to diligently present yourself, unashamed to God, able to accurately handle the word of truth. ECUA's proven distance-learning degree programs in Theology, Ministry, Christian Counseling, Education, and Law can get you ready. Call for a free information packet. Evangel Christian University of America; (800) 346-4014; www.ecua.edu

THE VIRTUAL CAMPUS of Reformed Theological Seminary now offers you a world-class theological education right in your own home. Take accredited courses through Distance Education. Find out more by calling (800) 227-2013 or by e-mailing us at: distance.education@rts.edu

MINISTRY OPPORTUNITIES

PERSECUTED CHRISTIANS IN VIETNAM

are in need of your prayers and support. Bibles are desperately needed by tribal and House Church Christians. $4.00 a Bible, $2.00 a NT. Contact Vietnamese World Christian Fellowship 13392 Taft St., Garden Grove, CA 92843, (714) 537-2522; (714-537-5944(F); email: vietchurch@juno.com; web: www.vwcf.org

MISSION NANNYS. Women 50+ travel and help missionaries with domestic duties. P.O. Box 609, Edgewater, MD 21037

MINISTRY SERVICE, matching ministers/ministries. Connect with CCRS, P.O. Box 398, Sheffield, MA 01257. Phone: (413) 229-3627; e-mail: churchrectr@juno.com

WANTED/NEEDED

HYMNALS NEEDED

Small church needs 20-40 copies of The New Church Hymnal. Will buy. Call Pastor Todd at (419) 929-1176.

SERVICES

WILDERNESS MINISTRY PROGRAMS for teens! The Jubilee Ranch, British Columbia; (250) 861-0176.

CHRISTIAN PLAYWRIGHTS: Nondenominational drama publisher seeking new playwrights and composers. Call Eldridge Publishing at (1-800) 95 CHURCH for submission guidelines and current needs or visit www.95church.com.

ASPIRING WRITERS

Develop your God-given writing talent. Send for FREE STARTER KIT. Christian Writers Guild, 65287 Fern, Hume Lake, CA 93628; phone: (209) 335-2333; fax: (209) 335-2770; or: NVRohrer@Juno.com ☒ TAX-EXEMPT NONPROFIT STATUS for your mission, ministry, church. El Shaddai Ministries. Recorded message toll-free (1-888) 268-1635.

DIABETICS with Medicare or insurance, get your diabetic supplies at no cost. Call (1-800) 337-4144.

Moving Interstate?

The Service and Thrift Relocation Service offers discounted rates and other benefits to reduce your moving cost on moves within the Continental U.S. For a free, no-obligation estimate call Lewis, CORD northAmerican:

1-800-873-2673

ICCA MC 167012

 northAmerican.

VAN LINES/AGENT

PUBLICATIONS

☒ PUBLIC WORSHIP. Because God has placed us here on earth to praise and worship him, it is vital that we answer these three questions: (1) What is worship? (2) How does God's Word regulate our worship? (3) What characterizes true biblical worship? Available free, this booklet is concise, biblically based, and written in an easy-to-read manner. Copies are available by writing: Byron Center Protestant Reformed Church, P.O. Box 71, Byron Center, MI 49315.

PUBLICATIONS

THE HEART OF AN ENTREPRENEUR. Personal account from a Christian businessman/layman/average person. Excellent tool for your small group. JD Publishing, P.O. Box 386, Crystal Lake, IL 60039.

MOST AMAZING Christian account recently documented. See Web site: www.credit.ley.com/business/crp.htm

MUSIC

AN OLD FASHIONED REVIVAL HOUR CHRISTMAS

Digitally remastered onto CD & Cassette from 2 decades of OFRH radio transcriptions. 25 Christmas favorites with the OFRH Choir, Quartet & pianist Rudy Atwood.
CD BONUS: Hear Dr. & Mrs. Fuller, "Jesus Saves," "Heavenly Sunshine" ... and much more!

Church Service & Supply Co., Inc.
1787 E. 20th St., Long Beach, CA 90806 (800) 350-34

REAL ESTATE

MOVING TO TUCSON? Let a Christian assist in finding a home. Margaret Arveson, Tucson Realty, 5151 E. Broadway, Tucson, AZ 85712; (520) 745-5151.

FOR SALE

75-acre family recreation club 12,000-sq. ft. training center with spectacular view, 5,000-sq.-ft. swimming pool, 3 regulation golf holes, 3 tennis courts. Call (315) 687-9054.

MOVING? Call us to find a full time, highly recommended Realtor who
*Is committed to utmost integrity and service
*If requested, will also introduce you to the Christian community, churches and schools
A totally FREE SERVICE (USA/CA)

The EXODUS Network 1-800-395-85

INSURANCE

Missionaries Worldwide Health Plan

For Missionaries working overseas!

FHI Benefit Plans/Aetna Global Benefits
800-347-9547

www.rfdriver.com/fhigroup.htm

FUNDRAISING

Commemorative Plates
Our fine Porcelain Fotoware® is prized throughout the USA for its heirloom quality. Perfect for anniversary celebrations. A gift your church or organization can cherish. Wonderful reunion gift!

Your choice: Full Color, Brown Tone, Black and White
For Free Brochure and Wholesale Price List Call:

1-800-872-1278

PRESTON-HOPKINSON—Since 1949
P.O. Drawer 341
Bedford, Virginia 24523
www.holidayfundraising.com

Call Toll Free! 800-872-1278 Ask for Dept. 20

EXPLORE THE CHURCH'S FIRST MILLENNIUM

Christian History's
1999 Tour
Greece, Turkey, and Rome

Departs May 14, 1999, from Chicago

10 Days in Greece and Turkey: $2,795
PLUS: 3 Days in Rome, the Eternal
City: $685

You will soon celebrate the end of the second millennium of Christian history—what better way than by experiencing the first! Travel from the Age of the apostles to the glories of Byzantium—a thousand turbulent years when the church grew from a tiny, persecuted minority to the faith that dominated a continent and created a culture.

Experience the ministry of the apostle Paul

- Explore beautiful Ephesus, the most fully restored biblical site in the Mediterranean region.
- Worship among the ancient ruins of Corinth.
- Visit Paul's prison cell in Rome.
- Cruise the Aegean Sea for three days on a luxury ship—(okay, not exactly like Paul's sea journeys!)

Deepen your faith

- Pray in the cave on the island of Patmos where the exiled John wrote the Book of Revelation.
- Visit the ruins of ancient temples (Delphi, the Parthenon, the temple of Diana) and learn how the early Christians won over pagans.
- Stand on ground where church Fathers fought subtle but dangerous heresies.
- Take in the intriguing history of both Islam and Eastern Orthodoxy in Istanbul, home of the Orthodox Ecumenical Patriarch.
- Wander the Roman catacombs where persecuted Christians met for prayer.
- Feast on the treasures of the Vatican and the mosaics and icons of Byzantium that still draw the heart to God.

Christian History tours have developed a reputation for balancing inspiration, education, free time, and even shopping opportunities—while building strong group camaraderie. We invite you to join us for the 1999 First Millennium Tour.

To receive a detailed, color brochure, call 800/820-5137, or e-mail us at CHedit@aol.com. Or simply write us at
Christian History
First Millennium Tour
465 Gundersen Drive
Carol Stream, IL 60188

S H O W C A S E

DYING FOR CHANGE

by Leith Anderson
Bethany House Publishers

Leith Anderson has successfully guided his own church through a process of extraordinary growth and change. Out of his experience, research, and presentations has come this material for this book. Dying for Change is not intended to be a simple formula for success. Change is extremely difficult—but absolutely necessary.

ISBN 1-55661-665-1

Paper, $10.95

THE FORGOTTEN TRINITY

by James R. White
Bethany House Publishers

James R. White answers objections to the Trinity and shows in a concise and understandable style the importance of the heart in the Christian faith. Though the word "Trinity" does not appear in the Bible and some claim that the Trinity is an invention of fourth-century theologians, the author clearly shows that the Trinity is not an irrelevant, ethereal concept but the orthodox understanding of the Godhead.

ISBN 1-55661-725-9

Paper, $10.95

LISTENING TO THE VOICE OF GOD

by Roger Barrier
Bethany House Publishers

Most pastors enter ministry to accomplish great things for God's kingdom. But that drive to make a difference can drown out the voice of God. In fact, the passion to build a church and to know God often turn out to be mutually exclusive. Roger Barrier writes candidly about his inability to hear God's voice amid all the demands, and how he learned to hear it when he dealt with the issues of pride, spiritual warfare, and personal pain.

ISBN 1-55661-972-3

Cloth, $16.95

THE POWER OF BELIEVING IN YOUR CHILD

by Miles McPherson
Bethany House Publishers

Miles McPherson shares the incredible power unleashed in a family when parents have faith in their children. The Power of Believing in Your Child raises parents' expectations of what children can become and provides encouragement and guidance through the rocky season of adolescence.

ISBN 0-7642-2078-0

Paper, $10.95

PREACHING WITH SPIRITUAL PASSION

by Ed Rowell
Bethany House Publishers

For many pastors, the weekly challenge of sermon preparation and delivery is painful—and often the primary area where God breaks, melts, and remolds the pastor's soul. Preaching With Spiritual Passion is a spiritual guide for God's messengers who long to understand the deep things that happen in and through them as preachers.

ISBN 1-55661-970-7

Cloth, $16.95

WHY REVIVAL TARRIES

by Leonard Ravenhill
Bethany House Publishers

Leonard Ravenhill became one of the twentieth century's greatest authorities on revival, and the heart of his message is contained in this book. Appalled by the disparity between the New Testament church and what passes for the church today, Ravenhill gives a no-compromise call to the principles of biblical revival.

ISBN 0-87123-607-9

Paper, $8.95

BINDING AND LOOSING: Exercising Authority over the Dark Powers

K. Neill Foster and Paul King
Christian Publications
10/233-4443
www.cpi-horizon.com

"The subject materials covered in Binding and Loosing are carefully and prayerfully handled by Neill Foster (with Paul King). Mindful of both the theological disputes and the radical abuses that these important words of our Lord have prompted, the author calls for a balanced, biblical interpretation that keeps binding and loosing as a viable part of prayer and practice. I find the book encouraging and motivating." —Mark Bubeck, President, International Center for Biblical Counseling ISBN 0-87509-769-3 Cloth, introductory $14.99 (regular $19.99)

CHRISTIAN THEOLOGY Second edition

by Millard J. Erickson
Baker Book House
www.bakerbooks.com/

Millard Erickson's Christian Theology earned a reputation as an accessible, comprehensive, and reliable introduction to systematic theology. The years since its original publication in 1983 have seen changes in the theological, intellectual, political, economic, and social worlds, which the author takes into account in the second edition. A new chapter on post-modernism has been added, as well as chapter objectives, chapter summaries, and study questions.

ISBN 0-8010-2182-0

Cloth, $44.99

ISRAEL: The Land And The People

by H. Wayne House, Editor
Regel Publications
100/733-2607

"The land, Israel, and the kingdom of God are inextricably intertwined." —Walter C. Kaiser Jr., Israel: The Land and the People (223).

Who is Israel today, and how is Israel different from the church? The answer to these and other questions are revealed in this evangelical affirmation of God's promises. Contributors include Tuvya Zaretsky, a regional director of Jews for Jesus, Walter C. Kaiser Jr., and Ronald Allen.

ISBN 0-8254-2879-3

352 pp, cloth, $17.88

GUIDE FOR THE COLLEGE BOUND:

Everything You
Need to Know
by Larry Linamen,
Ph.D.

Baker Book House
www.bakerbooks.com/

Without the right guidance, selecting a college can be a confusing experience. Addressing topics such as using the Internet in a college search and knowing the questions to ask during a campus visit, Guide for the College Bound is designed to help Christian families going through this process. Full of reliable information and practical advice, this handbook provides solid guidance for families as they seek out a college that will best meet their student's goals and needs.

ISBN 0-8007-5670-3

Paper, $12.99

GOD'S WEEK HAS SEVEN DAYS

Monday Musings for Marketplace Christians
by Wally Kroeker
Herald Press
100/759-4447

Does Christian faith kick into gear only on Sunday morning? Or does it run full steam all week long? Wally Kroeker sees all life as God's domain. When we go to work, God is on the job with us. Whatever we do, whatever we produce, whatever we buy and sell—it all is done in the presence of the Almighty. God cares about the work we do. These 52 short weekly musings are for everyone with work to do. Kroeker shows the common threads that link our jobs and our faith.

ISBN 0-8361-9096-3 200 pages, paper, $8.99; in Canada $12.85

A DICTIONARY OF EARLY CHRISTIAN BELIEFS

David W. Bercot, Editor
Hendrickson Publishers
300/358-3111

What did early Christians believe about the Christian life? Church government? Evangelism? Miracles? Salvation? Worship? Now, for the first time, a unique dictionary has been developed to furnish ready answers to these questions and more. Bercot has painstakingly combed the writings of early church leaders and categorized the heart of their thinking into more than 700 theological, moral, and historical topics. Gain a clear insight into the thoughts of early Christians.

ISBN 1-56563-357-1

720 pages, cloth, $34.95

Poster Boy for Postmodernism

Strohmeyer told police he strangled
the little girl
by twisting her neck
the way
he had seen in movies.

As we write, there is a growing clamor for President Clinton to leave the Oval Office; but across the country there is a clamor to throw someone else out—in this case, David Cash, a student at the University of California at Berkeley. The latter case, though hardly drawing the same attention, may nonetheless have even graver implications for our nation's future.

The controversy over Cash arises from a gruesome case last year in which a California teenager, Jeremy Strohmeyer, sexually molested and murdered a seven-year-old girl in a Las Vegas casino. Cash witnessed what his friend was doing but did not stop him and later agreed to keep quiet. Just weeks ago Strohmeyer pled guilty to sexual assault and murder. But failing to prevent a crime is not itself a crime, so Cash blithely finished high school and went on to Berkeley.

Today he remains defiantly unrepentant. "Were you appalled that a friend said he had killed a little girl?" the Los Angeles Times asked him. Cash answered: "I'm not going to get upset over someone else's life. I just worry about myself first." Seventy-five outraged citizens gathered outside Cash's dormitory with bullhorns, shouting, "Expel him!"

What most people overlook, however, is that Cash's attitude accords precisely with the postmodernist philosophy propagated by places like Berkeley.

The core of postmodernism is a rejection of universal truth claims and moral principles. And if there are no universal ideals linking us together, then logically all that's left are "tribes": identity groups based on race, ethnicity, gender, or whatever. That's why virtually every state university today has separate dorms for students who are black, Asian, Hispanic, homosexual, or any other group demanding a separate identity. No one is permitted to judge another group's actions or beliefs, because there is no recognition of ultimate truths binding on everyone.

These ideas percolate down from academia to shape our moral attitudes. On a radio talk show, Cash said, "It's a tragic event, okay. But the simple fact remains that I do not know this girl. The only person I knew in this event was Jeremy Strohmeyer." In other words, the victim was not a member of his "tribe," his identity group. Strohmeyer was. His only obligation, he concluded, was to his buddy.

Expel him from Berkeley? No: Make him its poster boy. Cash's moral indifference is the inevitable result of today's trendy campus ideology; his actions are postmodernist logic carried to its grotesque conclusion.

This murder is one more bone-chilling example of teens slaying in cold blood, without remorse or conscience. Over recent months, several children have walked into schoolyards across the country and fired on their classmates—in Arkansas, Oregon, Kentucky, Mississippi, and Pennsylvania. The press and other pundits have cast about for explanations. President Clinton announced that we need stricter gun control but in almost every case, the guns were registered. Other explanations offered for crime are poverty or race; but these kids were middle class and white.

What is frightening is precisely how normal most of them seem. In New Jersey, Amy Grossburg and her boyfriend checked into a hotel room, gave birth, and killed the baby. Another teen, the "Prom Mom," gave birth in a restroom, dumped the baby in the trash, and returned to finish the dance. These were normal, ordinary teens—except that they murdered their babies, violating the most primal human instinct.

Reporters have raised all the conventional explanations except one. They could not bring themselves to use the dreaded "m-word": morality. The truth is that Americans are losing their moral recognition of the universal dignity of human life. Like Cash, they dehumanize their victims. In the sentencing of Amy Grossburg, the judge said he was troubled by "an egocentricity that blinded you to . . . the intrinsic value of the life of the child."

Where are the adults who are supposed to teach these kids "the intrinsic value" of human life? Adults who once gave firm moral direction—parents, pastors, teachers—too often buy the myth that they should refrain from teaching kids right from wrong but rather let them discover their own values. Other adults are busy producing and selling entertainment that glorifies violence, teaching kids exactly the wrong thing. Strohmeyer told police he strangled the little girl twisting her neck the way he had seen in movies. We are raising a generation of children conditioned to kill.

It's enough to make one despair of American civilization itself. But as Christians, we should resist temptation and instead turn social breakdown into opportunity to make a compelling case for biblical morality. One strategy for evangelism, Francis Schaeffer taught, is to press people to the logical conclusions of their basic presuppositions: to show people that their assumptions, if lived out consistently, would lead to destructive and inhumane consequences. Today people are beginning to recognize the soul-destroying consequences of postmodernism, and now is the time to press them to see the wisdom of biblical truth.

When kids kill kids, people can no longer tolerate the chaos created by moral autonomy.

The bill on postmodernism is coming due. Either we will pay its bloody price, or find our way back to the truths that make civilization possible.

File: John Whitehead • Biotech Babies • Jim Bakker's Re-education

CHRISTIANITY TODAY

DECEMBER 7, 1998

PROCESSED

FILE

CHURCH

$2.95 CANADA $3.95

74470 84052

14

AGL # 11/11/98 11/11/98 11/11/98 11/11/98

*Real
Students.*

Real Stories.

With a Graham Scholarship, a priceless theological education is within my reach.

LAURI MILLER loved being in the ministry, serving as assistant minister of youth at John Knox Presbyterian Church in Seattle.

But she was missing something. "I had the enthusiasm and the commitment – I just didn't have the tools. I needed more training."

She began taking extension classes, but she longed for the classroom.

Lauri first visited Gordon-Conwell during Discovery Weekend last fall.

"What I experienced in just those three days confirmed my desire to be a full-time student, but I didn't know how I could afford it. Then I found out about the Graham Scholarship program."

Lauri was attracted to the quality of a Gordon-Conwell education, and the opportunity to attend classes full-time.

"My commitment was to study on a full-time basis. Gordon-Conwell's commitment to me was to make it financially possible!"

Now she's studying systematic theology, educational ministry, Greek, and church history.

"Every class is great! I'm learning to apply the lessons of the past to the needs of today. And I'm learning practical ways that will help structure my future ministry."

"With a Graham Scholarship, I also go to special lunch forums with professors, I enjoy great mentoring relationships, and I'm building my library – the seminary is providing recent books by the faculty."

"I feel like a big sponge. I'm soaking everything up, so I can return to the church and squeeze it out for others!"

For more information about the Graham Scholarships, please call today!

Lauri Miller with her education professor, Dr. Gary Parrett.

SOUTH
HAMILTON
Massachusetts

BOSTON
Massachusetts

CHARLOTTE
North Carolina
(800) 600-1212

Gordon-Conwell
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

(800) 428-7329

www.gcts.edu

SEEDS OF STEWARDSHIP, FRUIT EVERLASTING

SECOND BAPTIST CHURCH, HOUSTON, TEXAS:
$38.5 MILLION THROUGH TWO-YEAR COMMITMENTS

The Largest Capital Campaign in Modern Church Fund-Raising History

In a stewardship campaign to plant the gospel in new frontiers the people of Second Baptist Church in Houston, Texas, are excited to help build new evangelism facilities for their white and young ASO's around church campuses 15 miles away.

As a growing suburb of west
Houston, HO is privileged to be a part. We praise God for the investments made at Second Baptist Church and the dividends
He promises in His time.

RESOURCE SERVICES, INC.

12770 MURRI DRIVE, SUITE 900
DALLAS, TEXAS 75251
800-527-6824
972-404-7513
www.rsi-ketchum.com

ach

ARY
edu

Good Reasons to Earn Your Degree At Home

Balancing the needs of your ministry with the needs of your family isn't easy. But furthering your ministry through education doesn't have to disrupt your home life. You can study for your bachelor's, master's, or doctorate and still continue your ministry through the external studies program at Trinity.

Trinity College and Seminary allows you to complete your education through a personalized, accelerated degree program without a residency requirement. Our traditional off campus program, along with our virtual campus and optional Regional Seminars, lets you choose the method of study that best fits your responsibilities to your family and your personal educational goals.

Contact an Admissions Counselor for more information.

- B.A., M.A., M.Div., Ph.D., D.Min. in Various Disciplines
- Financial Grants are Available
- Off Campus and On-line Degree Programs
- Accelerated Study
- Regional Seminars Optional
- Accredited by the University of Liverpool, England

800-457-5510

International Academic and Administrative Offices
Newburgh, Indiana, USA

Fax: 812-858-3235

E-mail: 74777.245@compuserve.com

Visit our website! www.trinitysem.edu

CHRISTIANITY TODAY™

Volume 42, No. 14
December 7, 1998

A Magazine of Evangelical Conviction

FEATURES

36 The Dragon Slayer

He was a pioneer crusader for religious liberty who compared the ACLU to Nazis. Now he calls himself a civil-rights crusader, defending the rights of homosexuals and backing Paula Jones's case against the President. Just how much has John Wayne Whitehead really changed? By Ted Olsen

50 Special News Report: After the Revolution

Conservatives won the welfare debate. Are churches stepping up to the challenge? By Art Moore

54 Biotech Babies

How far should Christian couples go in the quest for a child of their own? By Gilbert Meilaender

59 Book Excerpt: Spinning the Truth

We find a multitude of ways to avoid telling painful truth; but what do we miss? By Diane M. Komp

62 Conversations: The Re-education of Jim Bakker

Back on the streets, this fallen televangelist is preaching good news to the poor and predicting an asteroid-studded Second Coming. By Kevin D. Miller and Michael G. Maudlin

68 Current Religious Thought: The Jesus I'd Prefer to Know

Searching for the historical Jesus and finding oneself instead. By John G. Stackhouse, Jr.

Special Christmas Meditation

Reflections/Art Gallery:
Walking Bewildered
in the Light

46

DEPARTMENTS

6 Inside CT: Ted's Excellent Adventure

7 Letters

34 Editorials: Preparing for the Brave New Millennium: Who Killed Matthew Shepard?

65 Pop Culture: Hollywood on Holy Ground

70 Books: Oprah's Misery Index

88 Philip Yancey: What The Prince of Egypt Won't Tell You

NEWS

20 Election: Conservatives Win Some, Lose Many

24 Liberia: Growing the Church in a War Zone

26 Technology: Nonprofits Tap Donors Online

28 Russia: Street People Overwhelm Shelters

30 Evangelism: Graham Uses 'Net to Fish for Men

17 North American Report

22 World Report

22

MORE THAN 4 MILLION PEOPLE HAVE READ ABOUT EXPERIENCING GOD

...NOW THE EXPERIENCE HAS A NEW DIMENSION

MUSIC FOR KNOWING AND DOING THE WILL OF GOD

"It's exciting for me to present to you this new recording, expressing the same truths, through music, that originally inspired the Experiencing God workbook. This project was carefully written to help bring a new dimension to your own experience with God. I pray that it will come to be a valuable resource and point of encouragement to all who hear it."

Henry T. Blackaby

Henry T. Blackaby, author Experiencing God

11 Songs Now Available on CD and Cass

Also available, the revised hardcover Experiencing God and the new Experiencing God Day-By-Day Devotional --- just two of the many resources in the Experiencing God family from Broadman & Holman Publishers.

A PRACTICAL RESOURCE FOR:

- Corporate Worship
- Group Study
- Individual Devotion

This recording parallels the Seven Realities taught in the study

INTRODUCTION

1. "I Hear A Whisper"
ROB MATHES

- REALITY #1:
God Is Always At Work
2. "The River"
POINT OF GRACE

- REALITY #2:
God Pursues A Love Relationship
3. "Unrelenting Love"
SUSAN ASHTON

- REALITY #3:
God Invites Us To Become Involved
4. "Meaning In The Mystery"
KYLE MATTHEWS

5. "Heart For Your Desire"
BRENDA SCHULTE

- REALITY #4:
God Speaks
6. "When The Silence Breaks"
GREG LONG

- REALITY #5:
Crisis Of Belief
7. "If It's Gonna Get Done"
THE MARTINS

8. "Calvary Is The Sea"
STEVE GREEN

- REALITY #6:
Major Adjustments
9. "Revelation Of A Sailor" PHILLIPS, CRAIG & DEAN

- REALITY #7:
Obey And Experience
10. "The Day I Lay My Isaac Down"
SCOTT KRIPPAYNE

CONCLUSION

11. "All Your Works"
NICHELLE TUMES

Accompaniment Trax available on all songs

PIANO/VOCAL SONGBOOK
AVAILABLE DECEMBER 22

CHORAL ARRANGEMENTS
COMING SOON!

STAR SONG RECORDS

AVAILABLE AT YOUR LOCAL CHRISTIAN BOOKSTORE

www.broadmanholman.com

Senior Editors: George K. Brushaber, Chairman; James I. Packer, Visiting Scholar; Timothy George, Senior Adviser; R. Kent Hughes, Earl F. Palmer, Marianne Meyer Thompson, John D. Woodbridge

Editorial Director: Harold L. Myra
Executive Editor: David Neff
Managing Editor: Michael G. Maudlin
Art Director: Carla Sonheim
Associate Editors: Richard A. Kauffman, Kevin D. Miller, Timothy C. Morgan, Wendy Murray Zoba

Administrative Editor: Carol R. Thiessen
Associate News Editor: John W. Kennedy
Book Review Editor: John Wilson
Associate Designer: June M. Gunawan
Editorial Resident: Christine J. Gardner
Editor at Large: Philip Yancey
Senior Writer: Tim Stafford
Senior News Writer: Arthur D. Moore
Arts Editor: Karen L. Mulder
Editorial Coordinator: Paulette DePaul
Administrative Assistant: Lara Badalamenti

Board of Directors: Billy Graham, Chairman; Clayton Bell, Sr., Executive Chairman; Harold L. Myra, President; Miriam Adeney, John N. Akers, Phil P. Briscoe, Stephen W. Brown, A. Kenneth Curtis, Susan S. Eames, Robert P. Evans, Eugene H. Habegger, Ben Haden, Pete Hammond, Michael C. Haynes, Oswald C. J. Hoffmann, C. B. Hogue, John A. Huffman, Jr., Edward L. Johnson, Jay L. Kiesler, Dennis F. Kinlaw, Jack Modesett, Jr., William J. Pendleton, Robert E. Reccord, Paul D. Robbins, Fred Smith, Jr., Howard S. Williams

Editorial Board: Billy Graham, Founder; Carl F. H. Henry, Editor 1956-68; L. Nelson Bell, Executive Editor 1956-73; Harold Lindsell, Editor 1968-78; Kenneth S. Kantzer, Editor 1978-82; V. Gilbert Beers, Editor 1982-85; George K. Brushaber, Executive Editor 1985-91; Harry C. Muck, Executive Editor 1985-90

Contributing Editors: Miriam Adeney, Nigel M. de S. Cameron, Charles W. Colson, James R. Edwards, Nathan O. Hatch, Kenneth A. Myers, Mark A. Noll, Thomas C. Oden, Ben Patterson, David Schiedmayer, David A. Seamands, Howard A. Snyder, John R. W. Stott

Consulting Editors: Paul M. Bassett, Colin Brown, Harold O. J. Brown, Robert E. Cooley, David S. Dockery, William A. Dyrness, Stanley J. Grenz, Christopher A. Hall, Walter C. Kaiser, Jr., Kenneth S. Kantzer, Donald W. McCullough, Alister E. McGrath, Richard Mouw, Roger E. Olson, Haddon W. Robinson, Stephen A. Seamands, Aida Besançon Spencer, John G. Stackhouse, Jr., Donald A. D. Thorsen, Edwin M. Yamauchi

Corresponding Editors: Tokunboh Adeyemo, V. Elving Anderson, Donald G. Bloesch, Edith L. Blumhofer, Darrell L. Bock, Calvin B. DeWitt, Samuel Escobar, C. Stephen Evans, Ajith Fernando, Richard J. Foster, Vernon Grounds, Allen C. Guelzo, Christopher D. Hancock, Alan F. Harre, Roberta Hestenes, Arthur P. Johnston, Robert K. Johnston, David Livingstone, Paul L. Maier, George M. Marsden, David L. McKenna, Stephen V. Monsma, Leon Morris, Terry C. Muck, Nancy Murphy, Bradley Nassif, Armand M. Nicholi, Jr., Roger Nicole, C. René Padilla, William E. Pannell, Eugene H. Peterson, Richard V. Pierard, Robert C. Roberts, John Rodgers, Vinay Samuel, David P. Scaer, Bruce L. Shelley, Ronald J. Sider, Russell P. Spittler, Elmer L. Towns, Grant Wacker, Robert L. Wilken, J. Rodman Williams

Advisory Editors: Leith Anderson, Myron S. Augsburger, William Bentley Ball, David B. Barrett, Paul W. Brand, Michael Cromartie, Edward G. Dobson, James Engel, George Gallup, Jr., Charles E. Hummel, Diane L. Knippers, Steven T. McFarland, Dean Merrill, Bryant L. Myers, Richard John Neuhaus, Will Norton, Jr., Michael Novak, Matthew Parker, James W. Reapsome, Beth Spring, Joseph M. Stowell, Warren W. Wiersbe

CHRISTIANITY TODAY, INC.

Harold L. Myra, President, C.E.O.
Paul D. Robbins, Executive Vice President, C.E.O.
Laurie Powell, Executive Assistant
Keith Stonehocker, Senior Vice President
Harold B. Smith, Corporate Vice President
David Hemstreet, Vicki Howard, John C. LaRue, Jr., Kevin A. Miller, David Neff, Linda Schambach, JoAnn Selander, Marshall Shelley, Carol Thompson, Joe Stombers

Advertising: Joyce Bardin, Karen Booker, Joel Carlsen, Lee Cunningham, Dorothy Dawson, Kevin Flanagan, John Grey, Carol Hayes, Jenny Jorgensen, Tim Platek, Daniel Poorman, Kathryn Stephens, Joel Stombers

Circulation: Charlene Perez, Production Director; Jo Ann Rosenbaum, Fulfillment Director; Leslee Baron, Norma Bornmann, Bradley Dupuy, Traci Grieser, Heidi Hall, Jody Harrington, Julie Kaminski, Sherry Kyle, Dianne Lambert, Debra Lane, Jeremy Long, Nancy Nance, Louie P. Parker, Karen Raad, Carol Schaley, Jennifer Stenzel, Elizabeth Tolentino, Bonnie Willman, Joy Windes, Philip Woods

Financial Operations: Terumi Echols, Manager, Cheryl Peterson, Credit Manager, Gary Johnson, Sandra Johnson, Judy Van Zanten

Human Resources: Susan Cronk, Manager, Rebecca Bright, Kate Bryant, Bert Davidson, Philip DiCicco, Jane Hyeon, Lew Radabaugh

Internet Online Services: Judy Gill, Manager, Clayton Anderson, Kathy DePue, Sky Findlay, Wendy Harley, Michelle Hayes, Laura Hepler, Michael Herman, Todd Watermann, Aaron Welch

Market Research: Cynthia Solvar, Manager, Grace Ferroni, Natalia Marandiu, Douglas Zimmerman

Production: Cynthia Cronk, Manager; Technology: Les Smith, Manager; Jeff DiNanno, Ted Gysan, Kelly Johnson, Tim Ostermiller, Theresa Phillips, Rebekah Santos, James Smeenge

Special Sales: Glenn Bushong, Manager; Becki Bustin, Michael Fister, Rodney Heckler, Jared Johnson, Lynn Long, John Ramsell

Editorial/Advertising Offices: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, Ill. 60188 630-260-6200; FAX: 630-260-0114. Advertising in CHRISTIANITY TODAY does not necessarily imply editorial endorsement.

Subscription Services: CHRISTIANITY TODAY, P.O. Box 37060, Boone, Iowa 50037-0060. Customer service: 800-999-1704.

Manuscript Policy: Unsolicited manuscripts are not accepted. A query letter must be sent first, describing a proposed manuscript (poetry is not accepted). Unsolicited manuscripts sent without a self-addressed, postage-paid envelope will not be returned.

Permissions: CHRISTIANITY TODAY grants permission for any original article (not a reprint) to be photocopied for use in a local church or classroom, provided no more than 1,000 copies are made, are distributed free, and indicate the source is CHRISTIANITY TODAY.

Australian Agent: MediaCom, 14 Eton Road, Keswick 5061, South Australia. United Kingdom Agent: MASTERPLAN PUBLISHING CO., 63-67 Kingston Road, New Malden, Surrey KT3 3PB, phone 0181-942-9442.

Indexes: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is indexed in Readers' Guide to Periodical Literature; Christian Periodical Index; Religion Index One; Periodicals, Religious and Theological Abstracts; Book Review Index; and Academic Abstracts and Magazine Article Summaries. ISSN 0009-5753. © 1998 CHRISTIANITY TODAY INC.

Christianity Today (ISSN 0009-5753) is published monthly (seasonally in April and October), 14 issues per year, by Christianity Today, Inc., 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188. Periodicals postage paid at Carol Stream, IL, and at additional mailing offices.

Postmaster: Send address changes to Christianity Today, P.O. Box 37060, Boone, IA 50037-0060. 1-800-999-1704. GST Registration Number R126028836. Canada Post Mail Product Sales Agreement #59536. Printed in U.S.A.

Subscription Rates: Regular subscription price: one year $24.95. Outside U.S. add $8.00 postage prepaid U.S. currency. $2.50 per copy.

Subscription Renewals? Gift Subscriptions? Address Changes? Call toll-free 1-800-999-1704.

E-mail: CHRISTIANITY TODAY is available electronically on America Online (keyword: CT); E-mail: CHRISTIANITY TODAY at Ctedn@aol.com. CT is also on the Web at www.christianitytoday.net. For information on how to enroll in Christianity Online, call 1-800-633-8888.

A WORD IN SEASON, how good it is!

PROVERBS 15:23 RSV

January. A time for new beginnings—fresh starts. For persons in ministry, January at Beeson Divinity School offers short-term courses to sharpen your skills, enhance your spirituality, and prepare you to give the right word, at the right time, in the right way.

Heart-Keeping: The Personalizing of the Christian Life Course participants enhance their spiritual growth by studying the examples of historical and contemporary Christians who put their faith into practice. JAMES HOUSTON is Professor of Spiritual Theology at Regent College in Vancouver, British Columbia.

Pastoral Care of Women A study to help ministers respond, through pastoral care, to the physical and psychological pain of women. JEANNE STEVENSON MOESSNER is an Assistant Professor of Pastoral Theology and Christian Formation at the University of Dubuque Theological Seminary.

Preaching to Life Situations Ministers learn to focus their preaching on the needs of people. This course emphasizes the supremacy of God and relevance in preaching. ROBERT SMITH is an Associate Professor of Divinity at Beeson Divinity School.

Beeson January Term: January 4-15, 1999

To register for January Term, or to learn more about Beeson Divinity School, call 1-800-888-8266.

Beeson is affiliated with the National Association of Evangelicals and is accredited by The Association of Theological Schools in the United States and Canada. Samford University is an Equal Opportunity Institution and welcomes applications for employment and educational programs from all individuals regardless of race, color, sex, disability or national or ethnic origin.

SAMFORD UNIVERSITY
BIRMINGHAM, ALABAMA 35229-2252
1-800-888-8266
http://beeson.samford.edu

David Neff,
Executive Editor

Ted's Excellent Adventure

INSIDE CT

Ted Olsen wasn't very impressed with John Whitehead the first time he saw him. It was 1994; Ted was a student at Wheaton College, and Whitehead was barnstorming with his Religious Apartheid video and indulging in over-the-top rhetoric comparing the ACLU to the Nazi storm troopers.

All that was before Whitehead became famous for championing Paula Jones's civil suit against the President. And it was before Whitehead made a number of changes. Change is part of what makes Whitehead interesting, and his upredictability has made it hard for him to form alliances with other Christian culture warriors. But then change makes for interesting journalism, so Ted took up the challenge of describing the John Whitehead of late 1998. (See "The Dragon Slayer," p. 36.)

While John Whitehead continues his legal battles for truth, justice, and the American way, his personal interests run not to case law but to the messages of popular culture. His desk is littered with hundreds of action figures, and his walls are covered with posters of the entertainment culture. Ted says that Gadfly, Whitehead's maverick magazine of pop culture analysis, is Whitehead's real passion, with the political and legal projects much lower on his personal agenda.

(Check out Gadfly on the Web at www.gadfly.org.)

Like Whitehead, Ted is fascinated by pop culture. "Well," says Ted, "I'm 24 years old. Everyone my age is interested in pop culture." And like Whitehead, Ted would be happier if evangelicals just knew more of what was going on in his media-saturated world.

Ted's office is decorated with signed photographs of Muppetmeister Jim Henson and country-music mandarin Johnny Cash. After reading an online preview of the script for Gen-X filmmaker Kevin Smith's forthcoming movie Dogma, he wrote about it for CT's sister magazine BOOKS & CULTURE. In grade school Ted was known as Mork, after the Robin Williams character in the Mork and Mindy sitcom. And yes, he even wore Mork-style suspenders.

Having built his journalistic foundations as news editor of the Wheaton College Record and then as editorial resident in CT's news department, Ted is now assistant editor of CHRISTIAN HISTORY. When asked about his favorite issue of that magazine, Ted immediately says, "It was the first one I worked on—the David Livingstone issue. He was amazing, an enigma, fascinating—a pop culture hero of his time."

He is also excited about CH's coming issue on the conversion of the Vikings. Ted's heritage is half Norwegian and half Swedish, and after finishing his year at CT he went to Scandinavia to track down his relatives. One wonders: will we soon see Hagar the Horrible on the cover of CHRISTIAN HISTORY? CT

The perfect way to share the true spirit of the season

The new anthology in Joe Wheeler's bestselling Christmas in My Heart series promises to join the previous two volumes as part of every family's treasured holiday traditions. These tender, beautiful stories make wonderful gifts and are moving reminders of what the holidays are really all about.

Also Available

Available wherever books are sold • Visit our Web site at www.doubleday.com

Knowing the Father Better

✉ I just had to let you know that your October 26 issue was your best ever. I refer in particular to your multisided exposition of the Prodigal Son/Loving Father. I have a greater understanding of my Father because of your work.

*J. Kent and Sherri Patterson
San Antonio, Tex.*

✉ I've already marked Luke 15 in my favorite commentary with a note to always reread this issue before ever preaching on this parable again.

David Roberts Dublin, Tex.

✉ Between the interpretations of Kenneth Bailey and Christopher Hall, I am with Hall. While Bailey's Middle Eastern viewpoint was interesting, I cannot agree with his attempt to separate any aspect of the returning prodigal's decision from the fact of his redemption. The returning prodigal may have been naïve, but it is not correct to conclude that he was not repentant. As Hall implies, to believe otherwise causes many real life (sin) problems. (If even repentance were not involved, then how much worse would the reaction of the older brother have been?)

The Bible makes clear that the decisions by us sinners and saints do matter. I disagree with those theologians who, in effect, say mankind has no free will in the face of God's sovereignty.

Stephen R. Schulze Kingsley, Pa.

✉ I greatly appreciate Kenneth Bailey's fresh look at the Prodigal. More than anything, his study shined because it placed the story in its cultural and Old Testament context. It is often easy for us to read the Gospels (especially parables) as if they were written for late twentieth-century Westerners, but I was reminded that Scripture is something we come to in a posture of learning: we don't read our world-view into it, it reads us.

The shock of the outrageous (loving!) behavior of the father coupled with the manipulative, self-serving behavior of the younger son made me relate all the more with the older brother (as I think Jesus was intending his first audience do). Yes, this story takes a richer meaning when we remember it was first written for biblically literate Palestinian Jews. Better knowing the parable's original meaning makes it more meaningful today. Thank you for the reminder.

*Rev. Kent Clayton
Sandia Presbyterian Church
Albuquerque, N.M.*

✉ Bailey's paper is very revealing. It comes from original study, not just a rehash of seminary classes.

Miller's interview of Miroslav Volf is most helpful in an age when so many seem to want "togetherness" at any price.

Donald Jeffery Hudson, Fla.

✉ When I noticed that this issue centered on the Prodigal, I knew I needed to read it immediately because we have been dealing with that very situation. When I saw the article "The Missing Mother," I knew God was speaking to me, and I turned to it straightway.

What a blessing to my aching heart! I could identify with the author on practically every point: ministerial wife, early profession of faith for the prodigal, and the constant reminder of God to really entrust our son to Christ. To read an article written by a mother who has done everything she knows to do to safeguard the spiritual well-being of her child, and yet still sees rebellion, was very meaningful to me.

I have been struggling with casting off the mantle of false guilt the Enemy would direct against me, and Wendy Zoba's article has taken me further along in this process.

Stephanie Silva

Saying "The Older Brother Had a Point" (Barbara Brown Taylor) is tantamount to saying the Pharisees and scribes had a point when they carped at Jesus because he received sinners and ate with them. The triple parable Jesus then told was his answer to their unjust and ungodly criticism. The Pharisees and scribes are not pictured in the story of the shepherd and his straying sheep or in that of the woman and her lost coin, but they are unmistakably pictured in the elder son in the final part of the parable.

This young man's tone was bitter and sarcastic, demonstrating that he had not the spirit of a son, but that of a slave. I believe Jesus hoped the Pharisees and scribes would get the point of his story. That is why he left it unfinished. The last we see of the elder son, he stands moping in the shadows, and his father stands at his side, pleading with him to enter the house and join in the family's feasting and joy. Did he relent and heed the pleading of his father? Did the Pharisees and scribes heed the pleading of Jesus?

*Paul C. Clarke
Grand Rapids, Mich.*

Clinton's Spirit of Remorse

Regarding the editorial "The President's Small Group" [Oct. 26], as with other apologists for the President, the writer uses a greater level of immorality in the example of Henry Lyons in order to minimize Clinton's sin. He closes by saying, "But when leaders take responsibility for their sins, not only by expressing remorse but by engaging in accountability, restitution, and retreat, we must, like the angels in heaven, rejoice."

It would appear the spirit of remorse was only squeezed out of the man when he was confronted with no other political alternative. It would prove true repentance and depth of moral character if Bill Clinton would follow the prescribed course and retreat from the presidency. As with Henry Lyons and Jimmy Swaggart, the position, power, and money (millions of dollars in democratic fundraisers), will prove to be more important than true Christian character for this President. If political expediency continues to transform moral certitude into moral relevancy, then Clinton may represent a society soon to be subjected to the righteous judgment of Almighty God.

Drew D. Montgomery Council Grove, Kans.

✉ I agree with your assessment of Pastor Lyons, but I wish you would go ahead and put the pressure on the President to resign as well. I doubt that his moral influence is less than that of Pastor Lyons just because one is in a Christian job and the other is secular.

The President could do a lot of good for the children and their education by calling the news media and having a Saturday children and teens speech. He could say, "See what immorality brings. It brings shame. It brings pain. It brings

'Truth is Essential'

There's a counterpoint to Henry Ford's oft-repeated maxim that history is, more or less, bunk. It flows from the pen of Miguel de Cervantes in Don Quixote. He regards history to be "a sacred kind of writing, because truth is essential to it, and where truth is, there God himself is..."

At Calvin College, accomplished historians open up the treasures and the truth of the past and present it as a gift to their students — in time for them to make some history of their own.

What makes a Calvin education so distinctive and life-shaping for thousands of questing students each year? The experience and excellence of Christ-centered professors who love to teach.

James D. Bratt

Ph.D. from Yale; co-author of Gathered at the River (William B. Eerdmans, 1993); author of Dutch Calvinism in Modern America (Eerdmans, 1984); member of Advisory Board of Institute for the Study of American Evangelicals; awarded Fulbright Grant; expert on American intellectual and religious history; chair of Calvin's history department.

Bert de Vries

Ph.D. from Brandeis; expert in archaeology and world history; former director of the American Center of Oriental Research in Amman, Jordan; Albright Fellow of the American Schools of Oriental Research; directed reconstruction at Umm el-Jimal for the Department of Antiquities of Jordan; history professor at Calvin.

Ronald A. Wells

Ph.D. from Boston University; author of History Through the Eyes of Faith: Western Civilization and the Kingdom of God (Harper & Row, 1989); expert in Northern Ireland's history and sectarian conflict; director of the nationally known interdisciplinary Calvin Center for Christian Scholarship; professor of history at Calvin.

punishment. I am going to take my medicine like a 'big man,' and I am asking you not to follow my example."

Jed J. Snyder
Lexington, Mass.

In light of a certain Scripture, it is interesting to note the seventh point of Kenneth S. Kantzer's referenced 1987 article concerning the steps in an accountability and restoration process. That certain Scripture is Ezekiel 44:10-14. Clearly God has set forth what a defecting priest's second "genuine call" is to be: caretaking and maintenance work. Both God and his holy offerings were declared off-limits so they might bear the blame of their "detestable practices."

Sin always has it consequences.

Mrs. Robert W. Teague
York, Pa.

Head Coverings a Symbol

Regarding your article "Veils, Kisses, and Biblical Commands" [Directions, Oct. 26], I take exception to Craig Keener's interpretation of a woman's head covering. The entire passage deals with the hierarchy of authority that God has established. The reason given in 1 Corinthians 11:10 for a woman to have her head covered when she prays or prophesies is to have a symbolic representation that she accepts this authority, for the sake of the attending angels. Have angels ceased to exist that we no longer need to indicate to them our acceptance of this? For centuries and, to my knowledge, up through the fifties, women in most churches wore hats. This practice disappeared in the sixties, the time of rebellion and the rise of feminism. Is there any connection, I wonder?

As a teenager in the sixties, I abandoned the practice, with everyone else in my congregation. In my twenties, I suddenly felt the urge to begin wearing hats again, though they were sadly out of style. I didn't understand why for a long time, but in spite of catty remarks by some, I wasn't deterred. After a while, I understood. I was disciplining myself to be obedient to God in other areas of my life, and he was taking care of a situation of which I was, at that time, ignorant.

Mrs. Connie Schutta
Newburgh, N.Y.

The Cost of Forgiveness

The review of Wiesenthal's classic, The Sunflower, is both interesting and deeply thought-provoking [Books, Oct. 26]. The tension it creates, it seems to me, is boiled

CALVIN

Grand Rapids, Michigan 616-957-6142 www.calvin.edu

IS IT SAFE TO SURF?

Sometimes it's hard to tell if there's something lurking just under the surface, waiting to strike. Surfing the World Wide Web can be just as unsettling - plenty of fun and recreation as long as you stay out of the pollution. The Internet has an unsightly, unnerving side - pornographers, child stalkers, violent and evil ideas and propaganda.

But not with CleanWeb™'s premium filtered Internet access. It blocks out the repulsive, dirty side of the Web before it ever reaches your computer. CleanWeb™ wants to make the World Wide Web - and the world - a better place. Subscribe today and have 10% of your monthly fee designated to charity.

With CleanWeb™ you'll know the water is fine - so come on in!

cleanweb.net
WE TAKE OUT THE TRASH

Call Toll-free: 1-877-CLEANWEB (1-877-253-2693) ext. 121 • www.cleanweb.net • register@cleanweb.net

Call to find out how to become a Sponsor or Sales Associate!

Religion & ETHICS

NEWS WEEKLY

Join Bob Abernethy
each week for
in-depth coverage
of the top religion
and ethics stories
in the news.

Only on Public Television.
Check local listings.

We'd like to help you start a dialogue about religion and ethics in your community.

Call or write for our free

- Viewer's Guide
- Discussion Leader's Brochure
- "Talking About Religion & Ethics"
- Guide for Teachers

Phone: (212) 560-2070

Fax: (212) 560-6948

E-mail: r_e@wnet.org

Web: www.wnet.org/religion

Funded by Lilly Endowment Inc.

A presentation of Thirteen/WNET in New York

Thirteen · wnet

down to the issue of "cheap grace"—does forgiveness reduce or enhance thoughtless acts of violence? Interestingly, the same issue carries Rabbi Neusner's article on Israel's present-day holocaust of the eradication of thousands of unborn babies [Matters of Opinion].

The very nature of grace is that it is free, renewing, and uplifting to the one being forgiven after repentance. It is the one granting the forgiveness who pays! The price for Wiesenthal to pay was too great, and so all he could do was be silent. He could not deny himself, family, race, situation in order to forgive. Yet that is exactly what it cost God!

*Ted Feierabend
Madison, Wisc.*

Chinese House Churches

In the October 26 issue, the first sentence of an article on house churches reads: "A group of Christian house church leaders, who function without government registration, has issued . . ." [News: World Report]. Those two commas leave the impression that all house churches lack registration, which is not the fact. Thousands of house churches are registered and get along with the government. I am not sure if the error was the fault of CT or RNS, but it is misleading.

*Rev. Arne Sovik
Minneapolis, Minn.*

No Political Subtitles

On behalf of Palestinian Christians, I would like to thank you for your cover article "How Evangelicals Became Israel's Best Friend" [Oct. 5]. In the American evangelical world, our voice has been ignored for many years now, and I applaud your effort to hear us once again. We, Palestinian Christians, are caught between the terror of Islamic fundamentalism and the brutality of continual military occupation. Our hearts still cry for justice.

I have learned that though the plight of my people is a harsh one, Christ is strong enough to carry our sufferings, even if they were inflicted in his name. I pray that Americans would at last open their hearts to their brothers and sisters—the Arab church. I still pray for the peace of Jerusalem, but my prayers do not come with political subtitles anymore. Only God can lead us to true reconciliation between all peoples.

*Jessica Doolittle
Wheaton, Ill.*

✉ "How Evangelicals Became Israel's Best Friend" is objective, educational and

Home Field Advantage

Hundreds of missionaries, citizens of "mission field" countries, are ready to go.

- They already know several local languages, so have no need for language school.
- They typically work 52 weeks a year, and never take a furlough.
- They are fully adjusted to local climate, cultures, customs, food, water and living conditions.
- Their work cannot be stopped by visa problems or changes in the government or political situation.
- Best of all, they plant churches among unreached people where Christ is not known.

Even if you're not an athlete or a sports fan, you probably know that most sports teams have a much better rate of success when they do battle on their home turf. This is called "Home Field Advantage," and it applies to missionaries as well as athletes!

Around the globe for more than 40 years, CHRISTIAN AID has been identifying evangelical indigenous mission organizations whose missionaries have this "Home Field Advantage," especially in countries that are closed to missionaries from America.

Thousands of these missionaries who have "Home Field Advantage" are doing spiritual warfare on their home turf, many without cash support. If people offer them food, they eat; otherwise they go hungry. They need support for food, lodging, travel, literature, and ministry expenses.

Christian Aid has contact with approximately 5000 indigenous mission groups that have tens of thousands of missionaries on the field or ready to go. Missionaries in rural areas can get along on $30 monthly. Those in cities may need $100. On average the amount of support needed is $50 monthly.

Send from $30 to $100 monthly and you will receive the name, photograph and biographical sketch of the missionary you support plus information about the indigenous mission board with which he or she serves.

More than 60% of unreached people groups live in countries closed to missionaries from North America. Christian Aid is your link to missionaries who have "Home Field Advantage" in evangelizing unreached people groups.

For information on how you can support a pioneer missionary call or write:

Christian Aid
... because we love the brothers

Christian Aid Mission

3045 Ivy Road • Charlottesville, VA 22903

Telephone: 1-804-977-5650

website: www.christianaid.org

The Home Field Advantage[®] mission

GLOBAL CONNECTION

"At Bethany, we found the education we were looking for."

When considering earning your degree off campus, Quality is what you should look for. It is important to have the knowledge that comes with the degree. Bethany, above all else, has placed emphasis on providing the student with a quality program of study. Moreover, Bethany will not take second place when it comes to offering excellence in education through off campus study.

Studying off campus is a good way to complete your seminary education without having to disrupt your family or leave your present ministry. With Bethany you can study off campus and on line via the internet. Whether you use the regular post-mail or e-mail you can have a dialogue with Bethany's faculty, other students, or alumni.

At Bethany you can earn your Bachelor's, Master's or Doctorate through external study where you can set your pace. Your concentration may be in Bible, Theology, Pastoral Ministry, Christian Education, Missions or Christian Counseling. Advanced standing is given for college transfer credit and Portfolio Learning Assessment for life learning experience. Monthly tuition arrangements are possible with no interest.

Here is one good reason for selecting Bethany as the seminary from which to earn your degree: Bethany is an independent, conservative, Baptist Seminary that accepts the Bible, the Authorized Version, as the inerrant, infallible Word of God. The student body is trans-denominational. Bethany is designed for educating pastors, evangelists, missionaries and those in Christian ministry.

For Catalogue Only Call Toll Free: 1 (800) 903-4487.

Global Connect Facilities:

Dean of Students: (334) 793-3189

Fax: (334) 793-4344

E-mail: bethany@ala.net

Website: www.bethanybc.edu

Bethany Worldwide
BETHANY BIBLE COLLEGE AND THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

2537 Hodgesville Road / P.O. Box 1994

Dothan, Alabama 36302 / USA

well-written. Timothy Weber's treatment is fair to history and the Word of God.

Two things have concerned me about dispensationalism in the modern American church: (1) It has become such a "fad" to believe in one form or another of it that, to oppose it, places one in a situation similar to our place as nonevolutionists in the scientific world. There are many of us who are strong believers (and, we believe, honest students or scholars) who do not jump on the dispensational bandwagon. (2) Evangelical leaders, as Weber points out, are "making" events in the Middle East conform to their interpretations of Israel, the kingdom, eschatology, and so on. This is an alarming idea, and portends even worse things than the historical tension between the Arab and Israeli people. Thank you for including Dr. Weber's article—to many, an unpopular sketch of these matters.

Bob Mize
Colorado Springs, Colo.

I write to share my sense of dismay over the misuse of Scripture by dispensationalists and deep alarm over the negative effects this ideology has had in this country and in the Middle East. Their misuse of Scripture is based on their convoluted attempts to force Christian theology to conform to the nationalistic and military aspirations of ancient Israel. Jesus was rejected because he would not be used for this purpose, and today dispensationalists essentially reject him again by making his ministry "parenthetical." I would read that to mean "irrelevant for our times, especially for Israel and the Middle East"!

The dark side of total support for Israel on the part of dispensationalist evangelicals has been the demoralization of the Christian churches among the Arabs in general and the Palestinians in particular. We have rejected our own people in the interest of political ideology based on theological bias. Close to 40 percent of Palestinians used to be Christians, now the number is down to 3 percent. No wonder Islam is rushing in to fill a vacuum we have created!

In their rush to read the signs and predict the future, dispensationalists have ignored the testimony of Jesus, and consequently also lost the spirit of prophecy.

Vartkes M. Kassouni
Presbytery of San Fernando
Panorama City, Calif.

The Wesleyan Center for Twenty-First Century Studies
at Point Loma Nazarene University is hosting its National Conference

Join Wesleyan scholars in discussion of Christian practices that foster life-giving and renewing habits.

The Apprentice's New Clothes—

Dr. L. Gregory Jones, Dean, Divinity School, Duke University

Wesleyan Perspectives on Children and Poverty—Dr. Pam Couture, Associate Professor of Pastoral Theology, Colgate-Rochester Divinity School

Wesley as a Companion in the Dialogue Between Psychology and Theology; Society for the Study of Psychology and Wesleyan Theology (Friday, Feb. 5, 1999)

Commitments to Faithful Learning in Wesleyan Higher Education—Dr. Randy Maddox, Professor of Wesleyan Theology, Seattle Pacific University

Opening keynote address and dinner will be held at the Salvation Army Citadel Corps. Friday sessions will be held at a local hotel with conference facilities. Saturday sessions will include ethnic food and "table dialogues." The Wesleyan Center is expecting a wide range of participants from various communities and traditions.

Registration Fee

Entire Conference	$99
Psych Society Session Only	$79

To register or for more information, contact:

The Wesleyan Center at Point Loma Nazarene University
3900 Lomaland Drive, San Diego CA 92106

E-mail: wesleyancenter@ptloma.edu
Telephone: 619.849.2549
FAX: 619.849.7003
Web: www.ptloma.edu/wesleyan

PH.D. IN CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

Retool your Educational LEADERSHIP

- ▶ Take courses related to:
 - Spirituality and Christian Formation
 - Philosophy and Theology of Christian Education
 - Educational Process
 - Educational Leadership
- ▶ Develop your grasp of educational leadership theory and practice within a robust Christian worldview
- ▶ Study in a seminary and university environment
- ▶ Scholarships are available

BIOLA
UNIVERSITY

TALBOT SCHOOL OF THEOLOGY
13800 BIOLA AVENUE
LA MIRADA, CA 90639

WRITE OR CALL:

800.992.4652

FAX: 562.903.4851

E-MAIL: admissions@biola.edu

www.talbot.edu

*Preparing educational leaders for the
next millennium since 1984*

AZUSA PACIFIC
UNIVERSITY

POSITIONS ARE AVAILABLE IN THE
FOLLOWING AREAS:

ASSOCIATE PROVOST	ED.D. PROGRAM
BIOCHEMISTRY	(TWO POSITIONS)
COMPUTER SCIENCE	HEBREW BIBLE
DEAN OF MUSIC	HISTORY
DIRECTOR OF FIELD	PSYCHOLOGY
EDUCATION IN	SPECIAL EDUCATION
SOCIAL WORK	TEACHING (TWO
DIRECTOR OF L.A.	POSITIONS)
TERM PROGRAM	VOICE

THE UNIVERSITY

Azusa Pacific is a Christian, coeducational university accredited by the Western Association of Schools and Colleges, offering more than 40 areas of undergraduate study, 18 master's degrees, and 3 doctorates. As an evangelical Christian institution, Azusa Pacific affirms the supremacy of Christ in all areas of life and expects its employees to model Christian values in their Christian faith verbally and in writing.

APPLICATION PROCEDURE

Applicants should submit a letter describing qualifications and interest for the position; a statement of Christian faith; and names, addresses, and phone numbers of five references to Patricia S. Anderson, Ph.D., Provost, 901 E. Alosta Ave., Azusa, CA 91702-7000, (626) 812-3087, psander@apu.edu. All positions open until filled.

Azusa Pacific University does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, national origin, gender, age, disability, or status as a veteran in any of its policies, practices, or procedures. Women and minorities are encouraged to apply.

<http://www.apu.edu>

SEEKING PEACE

Everyone's seeking peace, but few find it. Why?
Most people are looking in the wrong direction.

In his fifth book Arnold plumbs a wealth of spiritual traditions and the wisdom of ordinary people who have found peace—sometimes in surprising places. There is a peace greater than personal fulfillment, he writes; a peace greater than nations no longer at war. It is waiting for everyone. But there's a catch: it can't be had without the readiness to "die to self."

Seeking Peace by Johann Christoph Arnold
$20.00, hardcover, 256 pp, 0-87486-958-7

AVAILABLE IN BOOKSTORES, OR CALL PLOUGH

1-800-521-8011

PLOUGH

☛ If Weber's purpose ever was to enlighten his dispensationalist readers, he sabotaged that strategy on the first page with language that only alienated those readers. He would have served us all better by presenting the history and experience of both sides and then asking if justice is best served by unquestioned support of Israel, instead of mocking beliefs held dear to these our brothers.

*Bill O'Byrne
St. Petersburg, Russia*

Weber says, "The most serious issue that grows out of the relationship between evangelicals and Israel is whether the connection has helped or hindered the peace process." I disagree. The most serious issue growing out of that relationship is the potential blunting of our evangelistic mandate to preach the gospel to all people, to the Jew first. Many evangelicals, under a mistaken notion of love for Israel, have made a conscious determination not to share the love of the Savior with my Jewish people. Regardless of their views on eschatology or politics, those evangelicals are party to an insidious form of anti-Semitism; they end up "loving" my people into a Christless eternity.

True love for Israel must be accompanied by an uncompromising commitment to share Israel's Messiah.

*David Brickner
Executive Director
Jews for Jesus
San Francisco, Calif.*

THE DIGITAL HYMNAL

NEW VERSION CP

Now With Acoustic Grand Piano Plus Over
650 New Titles Previously Unavailable

- Instantly plays thousands of new praise and worship music, contemporary selections, traditional hymns, gospel favorites, kid's titles plus wedding, graduation and memorial selections - already stored inside - and indexed to page numbers of popular hymn books
- Acoustic grand piano, pipe organs, choir, strings and brass plus other exciting instruments already stored inside for instant use
- You choose the key, number of verses and style
- Completely self contained - no costly keyboards or disks needed
- Includes remote control and built-in speakers, or use PA system - CD quality sound
- Rechargeable NiCad battery available
- Pre-program an entire service in memory mode

Ask for cassette demo, master list of song titles and color brochure

 Gulbransen, Inc.
800-677-7374

2102 Hancock Street, San Diego, CA 92110 • FAX: 619-296-7157

Our organization, First Fruits of Zion, was mentioned by name. You said "First Fruits of Zion Ministries . . . tries to get American Christians to live like Jews." However, the point made about FFOZ is exactly the opposite of what we are attempting to accomplish.

First, we do not solely minister to the American Christians. Our materials span the globe. Second, we certainly do not "try to get American Christians to live like Jews." Simply put, our goal is to encourage anyone to live according to the teachings of the entire Scriptures, not just the New Testament. Thus we are attempting to teach the body of Messiah at large the basic contents of the Torah (first five books of the Bible) and how to apply those teachings to their lives—as well as help them to more fully understand the Torah's only inspired commentary, the New Testament. In other words, we are striving to teach the body of Messiah to take hold of their rightful privilege to fully participate with God's covenants with Israel. But we are not attempting to make Jewish people out of them. Their way of living out Israel's covenants may take a different form than that which the Jewish people have sought to do.

Ariel Berkowitz,
Director of Education
First Fruits of Zion
Jerusalem, Israel

cates that its framers understood "perish forever" in the traditional Christian sense of eternal, conscious punishment. Article 4 of the Confession describes "the second death" as "eternally suffer[ing] in Hell," while article 10 defines it as "eternal punishment in Hell."

Matt Pinson
Colquitt, Georgia

■ The Arkansas Institute of Holy Land Studies appreciates being mentioned; however, one correction needs to be made. Weber wrote that the Arkansas Institute of Holy Land Studies was unaccredited. This is not true. We are accredited by ACI—Accrediting Commission International, which accredits schools, colleges, and theological seminaries.

Gina Worsham

Thank God for alert readers. In editing Stanley Grenz's reply to a reader's question about annihilationism, the editors "helped" him out by supplying historical context drawn from a secondary work. On checking the General Baptist Confession of 1660 with our very own eyes, we see that we were misled and thus misled our readers. Our apologies to General Baptists everywhere and to Professor Grenz.

—Eds.

Oh Hell

The October 5, 1998, issue of CT ("Is Hell Forever?") stated that the General Baptist Confession of 1660 advocated annihilationism. One would assume this is based on article 22 of the Confession, which quotes Job 20:7 as saying that the wicked will perish forever. However, a thorough reading of the rest of the Confession indi-

Brief letters are welcome. They may be edited for space and clarity and must include the writer's name and address if intended for publication. Due to the volume of mail, we cannot respond personally to individual letters. Write to Eutychus, CHRISTIANITY TODAY, 465 Gundersen Drive, Carol Stream, IL 60188; fax: 630/260-0114. E-mail: ctedit@aol.com (✉).

CALVIN College

SEMINARS IN CHRISTIAN SCHOLARSHIP

Susan M. Felch, Director

June 21 - July 30, 1999

Realism vs. Antirealism

William P. Alston

Professor of Philosophy Emeritus, Syracuse University

God and Evil

Peter van Inwagen

John Cardinal O'Hara Professor of Philosophy, University of Notre Dame

The Faculty Summer Seminar program seeks to promote quality scholarship that reflects a Christian perspective by encouraging Christian scholars to pursue current research in their disciplines. Applicants must hold an earned Ph.D.

Made possible with funds from The Pew Charitable Trusts.

For more information or to apply contact:

Anna Mae Bush, Coordinator

Seminars in Christian Scholarship

Calvin College, 3201 Burton Street SE, Grand Rapids MI 49546

e-mail: abush@calvin.edu • fax: 616-957-6682

phone: 616-957-8558 • website: www.calvin.edu/fss

Deadline for applications is Feb. 1, 1999.

New American Standard Bible

UPDATED EDITION

Then God said, "Let there be light";
and there was light.

Continuing the
tradition of Biblical excellence
for over 25 years.

About the NASB Update...

Discover the truth in the inspired Word of God by reading the New American Standard Bible. The updated edition continues the NASB's commitment to accuracy while increasing clarity and readability. Vocabulary, grammar, and sentence structure have been carefully updated for greater understanding and smoother reading. The NASB remains the most literally accurate Bible in the English language.

Look for the NASB Update in a variety of formats from these publishers:

Foundation Publications

Moody Press

Oxford University Press

World Bible Publishers

Various software publishers

Ask for the NASB Update at your local bookstore.

I'D LIKE MORE INFORMATION ON THE NASB UPDATE.

NAME _____
ADDRESS _____
CITY _____	STATE _____	ZIP _____
PHONE _____		CT1298

For more information contact:

The Lockman Foundation

900 South Euclid Street, La Habra, CA 90631

(714) 879-3055

www.gospelcom.net/lockman

Jesus loves me, this I know.

Jesus loves every child. But the sad thing is, many children don't know it.

It is a tragic fact that millions of children suffer in relentless poverty and misery.

They are hungry, sick and hurting. They are the helpless victims of disease, war and ignorance. Their lives are an endless struggle to survive.

These are the children World Vision wants to reach in the name of Jesus. And by meeting their physical needs, we can share with them the love of Jesus.

This can be done when caring friends like you join us in helping children through Child Sponsorship.

Through sponsorship, you can help provide a needy child with improved health, nutrition and educational opportunities, as well as the chance to know the love of Jesus.

Your sponsorship gifts will also help your child's family and community become self-reliant.

For less than $6 a week—$22 a month—you can change a child's life forever.

To become a sponsor, just return the coupon below. You'll receive information and a photograph of a child who needs your help.

And you can follow his or her progress through personal letters and regular updates.

There are so many children who need to know the love of Jesus and the care you can give them. Please send this coupon today.

Jesus loves the children – and so do I.

I prefer to sponsor a ☐ boy ☐ girl living in ☐ Africa ☐ Asia ☐ Latin America
☐ Middle East ☐ where the need is greatest.

☐ Here is my first monthly gift of $22 to help improve the quality of life for my child and their entire community.

☐ Check (payable to World Vision)

☐ Bill my monthly sponsorship payment to my credit card:

☐ VISA ☐ MasterCard ☐ American Express ☐ Discover

No. _____ Exp. Date _____ Signature _____

☐ Please bill me later.

☐ I cannot sponsor a child right now, but would like to give a gift of $ _____ 1300

NAME _____ MAIL TODAY TO:

ADDRESS _____ World Vision

CITY/STATE/ZIP _____ Child Sponsorship

PHONE () _____ P.O. Box 70050

AC8BCM _____ Tacoma, WA 98481-0050

1 800 448-6437

WORLD VISION
Acting on faith

World Vision's ministry reaches across the globe to be the "hands and heart of Jesus" to suffering children. A charter member of the Evangelical Council for Financial Accountability, World Vision is the largest Christian international child sponsorship organization, improving the lives of over 1 million sponsored children in 43 countries.

1 800 448-6437

SPONSOR A CHILD TODAY

<http://www.worldvision.org>

In Canada write: P.O. Box 2500,
Mississauga, Ontario L5M 2H2
Phone: 1 800 268-1650

1650696

SALVATION ARMY

Did Somebody Say $80 Million?

'Tis the season for Salvation Army bell-ringers, but in San Diego, the donation kettles already appear to be full.

Joan Kroc, 70, heiress to the McDonald's fast-food fortune, has donated $80 million to the San Diego division of the Salvation Army. The donation is the largest ever received by the 133-year-old organization and the philanthropist's largest charitable gift.

The contribution will finance the design and construction of the 12-acre Ray and Joan Kroc Community Center, which will include a gymnasium, ball fields, ice-skating rink, swimming pool, performing arts center, and English- and Spanish-speaking worship centers. Construction is scheduled to begin in spring.

The donation also creates a $40 million endowment to underwrite future facilities maintenance and program management.

The center will offer childcare, programs for the elderly, and special classes using a state-of-the-art computer-only library.

Prompted by a visit last year to some of the city's poorest neighborhoods, Kroc

Kids deserve a break today: Kroc greets a San Diego youngster; the proposed center (left).

told the Salvation Army she wanted to help the city's children. Even with the contribution, bell-ringers will be out in full force this Christmas in San Diego, where the agency has 26 other programs that cost $31 million annually to support.

By Christine J. Gardner.

Fruits of the ministry: The Gordianis in the warehouse.

Technology Aids Food Ministry's Growth

A Southern California congregation is applying an elaborate screening process to its high-volume food-distribution operation, making National Food Foundation one of the most innovative food banks in the country.

Lay leaders Lou and Lucy Gordiani started the project five years ago in the basement of Covina Assembly of God, a congregation of 1,800. National Food Foundation is now housed in a 22,000-square-foot donated warehouse where nearly $2 million worth of food, clothes, and toiletries are stored. As the regional hub for 18 other churches and organizations, the ministry feeds 525 families each month.

To guard against fraud, the Gordianis developed a strict identification system. Applicants are interviewed and, if accepted into the program, given a laminated card bearing their photograph. Only the pictured person can receive food. One Saturday a month the recipient attends a chapel service, then goes through the warehouse with a shopping cart, leaving with hundreds of dollars' worth of groceries. Food is distributed according to family size.

Jalene Enterrios, a single mother, was new to Covina Assembly when she lost her job nearly two years ago. A native of Puerto Rico, she had not been in the country long enough to qualify for government unemployment benefits. "It was quite scary," she says. "I was a fairly new Christian and just learning to lean on God for provision."

Enterrios received food for eight months, then began volunteering. She now speaks in the chapel services. "It's truly amazing how the ministry touches people," she says. "Volunteers minister more than just with food."

At least 300 people have become Christians through the ministry, Lucy Gordiani says. The food bank operates on a very modest budget. All food and labor are donated, and the city council donated a 28-foot truck for transporting pallets of food. "The more we give, the more the Lord gives us," Lucy Gordiani says.

By Joel Kilpatrick.

UNITED METHODISTS

Same-Sex Ceremony Leads to Charge

Chicago United Methodist minister Gregory Dell could lose his job if a January church trial convicts him of presiding over a same-sex union ceremony. On September 19, Dell performed a "holy union" ceremony for Keith Eccarius, 41, and Karl Reinhardt, 33, despite an August 11 ruling by the United Methodist Judicial Council that "ceremonies that celebrate homosexual unions shall not be conducted by our ministers and shall not be conducted by our churches" (CT, Oct. 5, 1998, p. 18).

Joseph Sprague, bishop of the Northern Illinois Conference, filed a complaint against Dell on October 12.

This year's acquittal of Jimmy Creech on a similar charge

(CT, June 15, 1998, p. 15) has sharply intensified debate among United Methodists about homosexuality. Dell told CT that he has been performing same-sex union services for 17 years. "If someone says to me you can perform marriage ceremonies, but you've got to exclude people of the same sex, then I violate the integrity of my ministry," Dell says. "The very joy of ministry is because it takes seriously the wonder of diversity."

Sprague told CT that Dell has a "very enviable record as a faithful pastor and is deeply committed to the ministry and to the people he serves." While he supports Dell and disagrees with the ban on same-sex ceremonies, Sprague says he must also "support the law of the church." Nearly one-third of the 185 members at Dell's Broadway United Methodist Church are homosexual.

No fence sitter: Dell outside his Broadway United Methodist Church.

Evangelical groups have welcomed the filing of the charge against Dell. "We trust that as the case goes to trial, the Northern Illinois Conference will provide a sentence for Dell commensurate with the gravity of the violation," says Jim Heindinger, publisher of the evangelical magazine Good News.

Meanwhile, 67 clergy have announced they will celebrate a same-sex union next year at Saint Mark's United Methodist Church in Sacramento, California. Jeanne Barnett, lay leader of the California-Nevada Annual Conference, and Ellie Charlton, a member of the conference board of trustees, plan to formalize their 15-year relationship.

By Mary Cagney.

RACE RELATIONS

Perkins Keeps Son's Ministry Alive

The John M. Perkins Foundation for Reconciliation and Development will keep the Reconcilers Fellowship race-relations ministry open, with a new emphasis on youth.

The ministry was cofounded by John Perkins's late son Spencer with Chris Rice. After the death of his 43-year-old ministry partner (CT, March 2, 1998, p. 73), Rice decided to close the Jackson, Mississippi-based Reconcilers Fellowship and its six-acre Antioch Community (CT, Oct. 5, 1998, p. 15).

But the foundation headed by John Perkins purchased the property and buildings for $125,000. Perkins, 68, wants to build a park and playground that will include basketball courts and baseball, soccer, and football fields for youth. In addition, the 11-bedroom Antioch House will be converted into a retreat center. Total cost is estimated to be $250,000.

New partners: Welchlin (right) rode his bicycle 1,135 miles to Jackson.

Rice, 38, is headed to seminary but supports the new venture. Perkins has enlisted the support of 21-year-old Kass T. Welchlin of Minneapolis to assist in fundraising and youth outreach. CT

SOUTHERN BAPTISTS

Seminary Faculty Must Sign Pledge

Faculty members at Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Fort Worth will be required to sign a pledge to teach in accordance with the updated "Baptist Faith and Message." The statement, amended by the Southern Baptist Convention (SBC) in June, directs wives to "submit graciously" to their husbands.

Faculty who can no longer subscribe to the SBC's articles of faith are expected to "voluntarily sever relations with the institution," says President Ken Hemphill, citing the faculty manual.

Two professors have announced they will leave the seminary rather than sign the statement. Alan Brehm, professor of New Testament, is resigning because of a "crisis of conscience over the direction of the Southern Baptist Convention and over recent events at Southwestern." He called the requirement to endorse the revised pledge a "clarifying event." Dan Kent, professor of Old Testament, is retiring and says the pledge is a factor in his decision.

The SBC-controlled seminary has long required entering faculty to sign the articles of faith, which have not changed since 1963. Faculty are not required to re-sign the statement each year. But some professors disagree with the amendment's biblical interpretation and contend that the statement has been changed since they were hired and granted tenure.

The seminary's trustees have added a phrase to the bylaws to indicate that the Baptist Faith and Message, which is the school's statement of faith, "may be amended from time to time." CT

Child Online Protection Act Challenged

Even though the American Civil Liberties Union immediately filed suit to block its implementation, the Child Online Protection Act (COPA) is constitutionally sound, according to its legal advocates.

Congress passed COPA October 21 as part of a federal spending bill. The ACLU, joined by 16 other groups, filed suit the next day, saying COPA is akin to censoring free speech.

Under the bill, commercial operators of pornographic Web sites must keep "harmful to minors" material from children. Viewers would need to supply a credit card number or personal identification number before any images are displayed. Currently, most pornographic sites offer free teaser cover pages available to anyone able to access the site (CT, Feb. 9, 1998, p. 84).

Last year, the Supreme Court nullified the indecency provisions of the Communications Decency Act, finding them too broad, insufficiently defined, and incapable of reasonable compliance. "COPA does not suffer from these constitutional deficiencies," says Bruce A. Taylor, president of the National Law Center for Children and Families in Fairfax, Virginia.

"This bill applies only to the World Wide Web and excludes other Internet, Usenet, e-mail, BBS, chat, and online services," Taylor says. Nor would COPA apply to serious works of art or information such as the Starr Report.

"This has been needed for years," says Paul McGady, general counsel of Morality in Media in New York. "Children will be protected from commercial smut on the Internet, and there's a lot of it."

By John W. Kennedy.

In Brief

◆ Bob Jones University in Greenville, South Carolina, has announced it will arrest homosexual graduates who set foot on campus. In October, alumnus Wayne Mouritzen, a 60-year-old retired pastor, received a letter from the fundamentalist school's dean of students saying "as long as you are living as a homosexual, you, of course, would not be welcome on the campus and would be arrested for trespassing if you did visit." The ban does not apply to the campus art museum, which could lose its tax-exempt status for such action. The Internal Revenue Service revoked the university's tax-exempt status in 1970 because of its ban on interracial dating.

◆ Norma McCorvey, the "Jane Roe" of the 1973 Supreme Court decision Roe v. Wade that legalized abortion, has become a Roman Catholic. McCorvey, 51, was confirmed at a parish near her Dallas home in August. She earlier crossed over to the pro-life cause and was baptized by Operation Rescue director Flip Benham (CT, Sept. 11, 1995, p. 70), then joined the speaking circuit (CT, June 17, 1996, p. 62).

◆ Even though the U.S. Supreme Court struck down a Colorado constitutional amendment curbing homosexual rights (CT, June 17, 1996, p. 68), justices in October let stand a Cincinnati law barring special preferences and protections for homosexuals. Lawyers defending the city say the court's move should encourage other municipalities to pass similar legislation. Cincinnati voters approved an amendment to the city's charter in 1993 and a federal appeals court upheld it in 1995. The Supreme Court indicated that the Cincinnati amendment differs from the Colorado law in that it prevents homosexuals from obtaining special employment and housing privileges.

McCorvey

◆ National Friends Insurance Trust and Village Missions are to receive more than $7 million in restitution under a plea bargain with Terri Beebe, a staff member with Harmon and Associates in Camano, Washington. Beebe, 41, pleaded guilty in September to conspiracy to commit mail fraud, wire fraud, and embezzlement from a health-care benefit program. Beebe is the son-in-law of Philip Harmon, who is serving an eight-year federal prison term for conspiracy and tax fraud (CT, July 13, 1998, p. 24).

◆ Elizabeth O'Connor, 77, died October 17 in Washington, D.C. She wrote several influential books on church renewal and community service, including Call to Commitment and Journey Inward, Journey Outward.

◆ God's Property, a Dallas-based choir, is suing gospel star Kirk Franklin and B-Rite Music for an "onerous and one-sided" contract. Franklin allegedly persuaded choir founder Linda Searight to sign. The choir is also suing the Los Angeles record company to recoup royalties from sales of God's Property from Kirk Franklin's Nu Nation. The 1997 album sold 2.7 million copies worldwide to become the highest-charting gospel album in history. (CT)

What Do We Pay Our Senior Pastors?

Attendance	Annual Salary
0-249	$39,401
250-699	$58,081
700-1499	$72,762
1500+	$96,723
4000+	$130,219

National Average: $62,620
Survey of 839 senior pastors.
Source: National Association of Church Business Administration, 1997.

Republicans, Religious Right Stunned by Voter Rebuke

The great expectations of conservatives for increasing their hold over Congress sustained a stunning blow November 3. Republicans lost five seats in the House of Representatives, and in January will hold only a slim 223-to-217 majority. Republicans retained their 55-to-45 edge in the Senate.

The GOP, citing political fallout from President Clinton's sex scandal with Monica Lewinsky (CT, Oct. 26, 1998, p. 80), had high hopes of picking up as many as 40 congressional seats. But an unexpected voter backlash in the wake of Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr's report to Congress contributed to the Republicans' worst showing in 64 years by a party not holding the presidency. Not since 1934 had the President's party picked up congressional seats in an off-year election.

Despite an unprecedented push to get out the vote by the Christian Coalition, including rides to the polls, many in the Religious Right simply stayed home. The turnout of voters identifying with the Religious Right dropped 10 to 20 percent from the last election, according to numerous surveys. Further, a Christian Coalition exit poll showed the support of "religious conservatives" for Republicans dropped to 54 percent from the 1994 level of 66 percent.

"Evangelicals have good reason to be cynical about the GOP," says sociologist Christian Smith, author of the new book American Evangelicalism: Embattled and Thriving (University of Chicago Press). If the GOP does not move any of the Christian Right's issues through Congress, Smith says, the movement loses steam and its leaders lose credibility with their rank and file.

The poor showing and subsequent grumbling among Republican lawmakers spurred Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich—who had made repeated and bold predictions of congressional gains—to resign his post.

Republican governors still hold a 31-to-19 advantage, one less than before the election. Two high-profile incumbent governors supported by the Christian Right went down to defeat: Alabama's Fob James, who made a spirited defense for posting the Ten Commandments in public-school classrooms, and South Carolina's David Beasley, who had taken a stand against gambling.

State ballot measures resulted in a mixed bag for religious conservatives. By a two-to-one margin, voters in Alaska and Hawaii took a strong stand in favor of limiting marriage to one man and one woman. However, the conservatives' battle against gambling received a

So long, Newt: Gingrich takes out trash from his Georgia home November 7 after his decision.

major setback, with voters in California, Alabama, South Carolina, and Missouri decisively favoring the expansion of legalized gambling.

FALL FROM GRACE: Four years ago, Gingrich orchestrated the Republican takeover of Congress, in which the GOP picked up a whopping 53 seats in the House and eight in the Senate.

But times have changed. Christian Coalition president Randy Tate lamented that the Republicans had no clear vision for the 1998 election. "Democrats had an agenda, and some agenda will beat no agenda every time."

Focus on the Family founder James Dobson blamed Republicans for losing nerve to pass key legislation. "They caved in on everything of importance to the pro-family and pro-life community," Dobson said.

Last spring, the House GOP created a new coalition with Religious Right groups. At a summit in May, GOP leaders formed the "Values Action Team" (VAT) in response to criticisms by Dobson that GOP leadership had failed to move pro-family issues through Congress.

Since then, VAT has brought together representatives of the Republican House leadership, members of Congress, and grassroots Religious Right organizations to coordinate lobbying strategy to push "values legislation" through Congress. The coalition has championed bills to stop partial birth abortion, give marriage tax-penalty relief, and redirect education dollars away from the bureaucracy.

VAT chair Joe Pitts, a House representative from Pennsylvania, calls the organization an example of an "inside-outside coalition" in which there are inside members of Congress linked to outside coalitions. "It helps them to target their pressure and gives outside groups timely information so that they can lobby," Pitts told CT.

VAT did not become an instant hit with GOP leadership, particularly Gingrich, but Dobson's threats caused the House leader to look for ideas to placate the Religious Right. Several members of VAT are considered rising stars of the Religious Right. Pitts says Tom Delay, the third-ranking Republican in the House, made VAT "happen when the crisis with Dobson came."

Dissatisfied with Gingrich's leadership on the "values" issues, several VAT members, including Steve Largent of Oklahoma, played key roles in Gingrich's postelection demise.

CONNECTING WITH BLACKS:

Before the November election, Pitts hoped that his "inside-outside coalition" strategy would have wider application in connecting the Republicans with blacks. He, Largent, and others started a Renewal Alliance to "work unashamedly with faith-based community development leaders." Newly elected Florida governor Jeb Bush also pursued a strategy of reaching out to African-American voters.

Since the Great Depression, upwards of 90 percent of blacks have voted Democratic in some national elections. However, a recent survey by the New York Theological Seminary and Columbia University shows that only 65 percent of African-American church leaders now identify themselves as Democrats. Yet Republican attacks on Clinton seemed to many African Americans as an unfair attack on a leader who had reached out to their leaders, and they voted Democratic in this election.

By Tony Carnes.

Being spiritually formed for a

Perilous Ministry

SOME TIME AGO, I heard about an ordination service where the two preachers presented contrasting views of the ministry. The first preacher was jovial bon vivant, and he encouraged the young minister to lay aside all fears and plunge forward into his new career with gusto. He contended: "Ministry is a skill to be learned, a technique to be mastered." The other preacher was an older pastor, and he shocked the congregation by what he said. To the young ordinand, he shared one single verse from the Bible: "It is a terrible thing to fall into the hands of the living God!"

Timothy George

The old pastor was right. The ministry is a perilous business. "Nothing is so deadening to the divine," George MacDonald wrote, "as an habitual dealing with the outsidés of holy things." Because ministers of the Gospel regularly traffic in matters of eternal moment—birth and death, baptism and marriage, Word and sacrament—it is easy to cultivate a "professional" persona without being grasped by the awesome realities we are called to mediate.

Martin Luther set forth a three-fold pattern of spiritual formation that applies to all Christians. Oratio (prayer). Meditatio (meditation). Tentatio (trial).

ORATIO. Faithful, persistent prayer is the basis of all theological work and the heartbeat of every vital ministry. The pastor's study should have at least two open windows: One facing out toward the world, the world of suffering and sin for which Christ died; the other a skylight open toward heaven, toward the One in whose Name we serve.

MEDITATIO. As ministers of the divine Word, we are called to a life of meditation. This means that the Holy Scriptures must become more than a sourcebook of sermons or a collection of ancient documents to be studied historically and critically. We meditate on the Bible in the company of the people of God through the ages, gleaned wisdom from all the saints.

TENTATIO. Luther did not learn this third mark all at once, he says, but followed where trials and temptations led. Sometimes we struggle for our footing in the awful swellings of the Jordan, but we do so in the confidence that through such testing we are being called to know how right, how true, how sweet, how lovely, how mighty, how comforting is God's Word, wisdom above all wisdom.

AT BEESON, we know that pastors cannot lead others to the deep streams of God's grace unless they are regularly refreshed there themselves. Our entire curriculum seeks to encourage our students to know God's Word deeply in both their heads and their hearts.

To this kind of spiritual formation we are called—in the care and cure of souls entrusted to us by the Church of Jesus Christ. Solo Deo Gloria!

SAMFORD UNIVERSITY
Birmingham, Alabama
<http://beeson.samford.edu>

Timothy George

Dean

FOR INFORMATION ABOUT BEESON DIVINITY SCHOOL, CALL 1-800-888-8266

Beeson is affiliated with the National Association of Evangelicals and is accredited by The Association of Theological Schools in the United States and Canada. Samford University is an Equal Opportunity Institution and welcomes applications for employment and educational programs from all individuals regardless of race, color, sex, disability, or national or ethnic origin.

PAKISTAN

Islamic Law Proposal Raises Tensions

The National Assembly, Pakistan's lower house of Parliament, passed a constitutional amendment October 9 that would give the government sweeping powers to impose full-fledged Islamic law based on the Qur'an. But several factors may prevent the two-thirds majority needed for passage in the Senate, the upper chamber.

Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif proposed the amendment in August as a way to consolidate power among fundamentalists within his ruling Muslim League party. The new legislation would require the government to enforce prayers five times daily, collect annual tithes, and abolish civil laws not conforming to the Qur'an and other teachings of Muhammad.

Sharif says the amendment is needed to "create a truly Islamic system" in Pakistan. But former Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto warns that its passage could result in the same strict Islamic regime as the Taliban in neighboring Afghanistan.

Existing blasphemy laws in Pakistan have been used against Christians, who represent 2 percent of the nation's 142 million people. More than 100 Christians have been charged under the blasphemy laws, which require the death penalty for insults to Muhammad.

The National Assembly, which includes a two-thirds majority of Sharif's Muslim League party, adopted the measure by a 151-to-16 vote. In the Senate, only 25 percent of the members are part of the Muslim League party, although there have been reports of attempts to "buy" votes.

Steven Snyder, president of the Washington, D.C.-based International Christian Concern, believes the United States plays a key role in keeping the pressure on Pakistan, which has been under economic sanctions since testing nuclear bombs earlier this year.

"Pakistan has turned away from her founding principles, which declared freedom of worship for all faiths," Snyder says. "Unless there is strong international condemnation of Pakistan's present course, it will be only a matter of time until all Pakistan is embroiled in turmoil and bloodshed."

Accusations of corruption against Sharif and Pakistan's Praying for shari'ah: Muslims pray at an Islamabad mosque while Parliament debates the amendment.

shaky economic standing may derail the law. Sharif allegedly took kickbacks for political influence and siphoned millions of dollars from loans on which his companies defaulted. The country is close to economic ruin and in desperate need of an International Monetary Fund bailout. CT

HURRICANE MITCH

Relief Hindered by Devastation

Christian aid agencies mobilized quickly to assist victims of one of Central America's worst natural disasters, while survivors face the twin threat of starvation and disease. Floods and mudslides associated with Hurricane Mitch destroyed roads and bridges, hampering efforts to reach isolated villages in Honduras and Nicaragua with food and medicine.

"Seventy percent of the infrastructure in the entire country is gone," says Chet Thomas, director of Proyecto Aldea Global (PAG), a Christian aid agency based in Tegucigalpa, Honduras. Groups used boats, planes, and four-wheel drive vehicles to reach stranded survivors.

Thomas says the region has no drinking water, and cholera and typhoid outbreaks are imminent. PAG, an affiliate of Mercy Corps International of Portland, Oregon, is purchasing piping to repair community water systems. Thomas expects it will be at least 15 years until the country recovers.

In addition to emergency food rations, PAG and other agencies such as World Relief are helping farmers replant crops. "If no one plants right now, we won't have any corn or beans until next September," Thomas says. "That's too long to wait."

Thomas wants to help survivors rebuild their lives so they will not be trapped by dependency on foreign aid. "We're pushing to get people going, even though they've been knocked down many times. We trust the Lord will give us the strength," he says.

Entire villages disappeared when Hurricane Mitch brought 180-mile-per-hour winds and dumped several feet of rain on some aid agencies had fewer emergency funds available due to commitments to other crises. World Vision, which had used reserve funds for aid in Kosovo and Hurricane Georges relief in the Caribbean, is seeking to raise $5 million in private donations to help in Central America. "We are in dire need of relief supplies," says World Vision's Ralph Merriam.

Eye of the storm: Salvadoran refugees escape rising waters on an army helicopter (above) while a Honduran mother flees a flood with her baby.

By Christine J. Gardner.

Evangelicals Seek to Refocus WCC

The World Council of Churches (WCC) has strayed far from its historical roots and needs to reaffirm unity in Jesus Christ as the basis for ecumenism, according to a group of evangelicals from North American mainline churches.

The WCC is about to chart its future, and evangelicals' voices must be heard, says Thomas Oden, chair of Project EC-Z (Evangelical Challenge—Zimbabwe) of the Association of Church Renewal (ACR), representing 4.5 million evangelical mainliners. ACR is issuing its appeal at the WCC's Jubilee Assembly in Harare, Zimbabwe, December 3–14.

"We want to announce our presence and seek to bring the WCC into far greater accountability to the one body of Christ," says Oden, a United Methodist theologian. Evangelicals are a significant part of the WCC, but their views have been overshadowed by the liberal minority in control, he says.

The Zimbabwe declaration is in response to a WCC document that aspires to "macroecumenism," which would allow non-Christian faiths to join.

The declaration calls for churches in Africa, Asia, Latin America, and Eastern Europe to lead the WCC renewal movement. The 50 million-member Russian Orthodox Church, the largest of the WCC's 330 members, is demanding a "total reconstruction" of the organization. Evangelicals see parallels with the Lambeth Conference of Anglican Bishops, where liberal North American bishops were outnumbered by conservative Two-Thirds World bishops (CT, Sept. 7, 1998, p. 32).

Parker Williamson, editor of the Presbyterian Layman and member of the Project EC-Z steering committee, says North American mainline denominations are showing signs of a declining membership and "watered-down gospel." North American Christians need to shed their cultural bias and see the gospel through the eyes of Christians in the Two-Thirds World, many of them products of North American missionary efforts, Williamson says. "We need their vision to correct our accommodation of the gospel. It's sort of a reverse thrust," he says.

Along with the Zimbabwe declaration, ACR is releasing seven position papers on topics including homosexuality, syncretism, and feminism. [CT]

In Brief

◆ A plane carrying short-term missions volunteers with Caddo Mills, Texas-based Living Water Teaching International crashed into a mountain in western Guatemala November 1, killing 11 people and injuring 7. Rain from Hurricane Mitch may have contributed to the crash. The volunteers were returning from a medical outreach in Playa Grande. Mission founder James Zirkle, 57, and his son, James II, 30, one of the aircraft's pilots, both died in the accident.

◆ Graham Hutt, a British yachtsman convicted of smuggling Bibles in Morocco (CT, Aug. 10, 1998, p. 27), sailed out of the country October 6 in his yacht, which had been impounded four months earlier. Hutt was allowed to keep the yacht after paying a $10,000 customs duty fee, but charges of smuggling are still pending.

◆ The Supreme Court of Khakassia has ordered the closure of the Evangelical Lutheran Mission in Tuim in the Russian republic. The mission has been subjected to several court cases during the past year in an attempt to stop its activities. Witnesses reported that judges, under pressure from local secret police, repeatedly tried to intimidate them during a two-day hearing.

◆ Daniel Manase Zindo, 54, acting archbishop of Sudan, died in a car crash October 20 en route to Kampala, Uganda, to set up a regional office for the Episcopal Church of Sudan. His wife was murdered last year.

◆ Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew presided over a pan-Orthodox convention in October that mended a rift between rival factions in the Bulgarian Orthodox Church. More than 30 Orthodox leaders acknowledged Patriarch Maxim as the legitimate head of the Bulgarian Orthodox Church, and former followers of Patriarch Pimen agreed to end the schism.

◆ South Africa's Constitutional Court struck down the country's sodomy laws October 9. The laws classified sodomy, along with rape and murder, as an offense punishable by life imprisonment. [CT]

Zirkles: Father, son killed.

LIVING WATER TEACHING INTERNATIONAL

INDIA

Missionary Expulsions Demanded

The Hindu nationalist Vishwa Hindu Parishad (VHP) wants all foreign missionaries working in India to leave the country because of "forcible conversions."

Even though the Indian government stopped issuing missionary visas to Christians in 1964, VHP general secretary Acharya Giriraj Kishore says missionaries will be "requested" to return to their homelands. "We do not want Hindus to be converted against their wishes," he says. Kishore also accuses foreign missionaries of being involved in insurgency in northeastern states.

In September, Surendra Kumar Jain, the national governor of the Bajrang Dal, the youth wing of the VHP, claimed Christians worked against national interests and did not have the moral right to stay in India.

"We will compel them to leave India by virtually launching a quit-India movement against them," says Jain, who objects to the divine-healing camps of Christian missionaries.

In a sharp rebuke, the president of the Maharashtra unit of the All India Catholic Union, Dolphy De Souza, accused the Bajrang Dal of building a venomous environment against Christians and other minority religious groups. There are an estimated 300 Americans from U.S.-based Protestant missions groups in India.

Meanwhile, Hindu fundamentalists have carried out more than 30 attacks against Christians in the western India state of Gujarat since March.

On October 30, around 40 delegates to the Alpha Missionary Movement were forced out of their lodgings and beaten with sticks, belts, chains, and fists by members of the group Bajrang Dal.

Compass Direct News Service.

Heroic Ministry Efforts Calm Post-Civil War Tensions

Evangelical leader T. Edward Kofi has had an eight-year string of tragedies since the outbreak of civil war in Liberia. He escaped to Sierra Leone after soldiers targeted him for elimination. Three of his seven adopted children have been murdered in the fighting. His oldest son drowned. Rebels captured his oldest daughter and held her hostage for 18 months. He sustained fractured vertebrae in a plane crash. Rebels fatally shot his mother in the back. Armed soldiers looted his home and commandeered his ministry headquarters.

The Joblike list of violence and health-related afflictions goes on, but the 44-year-old Kofi is not looking back. Instead, he is energetically supervising African Christian Fellowship International (ACFI), an independent indigenous ministry he founded in 1986. Kofi oversees the work of 705 full-time volunteer pastors, teachers, doctors, and nurses who evangelize tribes, aid refugees, plant churches, help orphans, and establish schools. ACFI has started 200 congregations, not only in Liberia, but in Sierra Leone, Ghana, Guinea, and Côte d'Ivoire.

The work has persisted despite the tumultuous civil war that left 200,000 dead and 1 million displaced. The mayhem culminated with the destruction of the capital Monrovia—including churches and missions—by warring factions two years ago (CT, June 17, 1996, p. 60). Although rebel-turned-president Charles Taylor has restored some semblance of order, "there still is tremendous insecurity," Kofi says.

MINISTERING AMID CHAOS:

In 1990, Kofi's hardships escalated when he attempted to rescue young children—some of them conscripts—caught in the war zone in northern Liberia. Kofi had planted several churches in the region and then-president Samuel Doe—later killed by a rebel leader—placed him on a hit list. He went into exile in Sierra Leone.

Kofi is no longer on the hit list. In fact, in September the money-strapped government turned over a hospital to ACFI in River Cess, 90 miles southeast of Monrovia. ACFI also is constructing a 50-bed hospital in Baffu Bay, 130 miles southeast of Monrovia. The ministry operates five clinics in the nation, treating 500 patients daily with volunteer staff.

Besides meeting medical needs, ACFI feeds and educates 25,000 children, nearly two-thirds of them refugees and most of the rest orphans. Some had been recruited during the civil war, where they became addicted to drugs and had to kill—sometimes their own parents.

Learning grounds: Children at a displacement camp north of Monrovia.

"This is a generation of children that has been without hope," Kofi says. "The only life they've known is anguish and grief." ACFI is trying to change that. The ministry has established six orphanages to provide meals, schooling, medical care, and religious instruction.

Kofi identifies with the orphans. For six years, starting at age six, he lived on the streets of Monrovia as a gang member. He became a Christian at age twelve through a Baffu Bay mission station founded by American businessman, inventor, and missionary R. G. LeTourneau. At the compound, he learned to read, and he learned about the Lord.

Now, with help from more than 300 volunteer Christian educators, ACFI is operating 50 tuition-free schools. The government also has given ACFI 500 acres at Baffu Bay, where the ministry will open a university next year. Kofi is recruiting American Christian professors to train nationals.

OVERSEAS ASSISTANCE: Among those U.S. groups helping is the non-denominational Fellowship Bible Church of Tacoma, Washington, which has sent everything from vehicles to medical supplies. Families in the congregation have adopted 11 orphans, and church leaders have conducted four leadership-training seminars in thatched-wall, tin-roof buildings on topics such as evangelism and moral purity.

"I deeply respect the commitment of these people who have suffered so much for Christ," says pastor Bruce Stabbert. "They are so hungry for encouragement from the Scriptures."

ACFI maintains a U.S. office in Harrisburg, Oregon (541-995-2252), and for now relies entirely on American generosity to keep going.

"We don't want to be dependent on foreign support," Kofi says. "We want to get to the point of being self-sufficient, but for now it is not possible."

Christian Aid Ministries (CAM) of Berlin, Ohio, ships a monthly container of food and clothing for the ACFI orphans. "Because of the war, education is especially difficult," says CAM program administrator Mark Yoder, who has been to Liberia five times since the 1996 anarchy. "But we are commanded to care for the widows and orphans."

Although Christian missionaries, who resettled former slaves, founded Liberia more than 150 years ago, indigenous occult practices now dominate the country's religious makeup. Fewer than 10 percent of Liberians are Christian; twice as many are Muslim, especially in the north.

Yoder is impressed that ACFI outreach workers continue in their calling: they travel to isolated villages, live in refugee camps, and identify with the poverty-stricken and hungry.

Fellowship Bible Church wants to ship tractors and fishing boats to speed self-sufficiency. "Few people are working, because they don't have the means to make a living," Stabbert says. "They have the land, but they just need help to get rolling."

By John W. Kennedy.

Kofi

EAST GATES INTERNATIONAL

憑 信
超 越 難 成 的 事

BIBLES for China

"For only $4.00 you can place a Bible into the hands of a Chinese House Church Christian.

These Bibles are full Bibles — both Old and New Testaments. They are hard bound and printed LEGALLY in China.

Because these Bibles are printed and distributed legally, there is not the associated risk to the Chinese believers as with smuggled Bibles."

Billy & Ruth Graham

Billy Graham

Rev. Ned Graham teaching in a House Church in Mainland China.

A House Church family in Jiangxi Province with a new East Gates Bible.

East Gates Bibles being shipped to House Churches.

For more information contact

EAST GATES
INTERNATIONAL

P. O. Box 2010, Sumner, Washington 98390

1-800-959-3464

www.egmi.org

Ned Graham, President

"Since 1992, East Gates has legally placed over 1.5 million Bibles in every province of China — bringing new hope and life to hundreds of thousands."

Nonprofits Tap New Donors with Internet Fundraising

Seth Goldberg, a New York executive with a medical malpractice insurance company, is a self-described Internet "news junkie." He had followed reports of the North Korean famine with great concern. So when an October 1997 North Korea news story he read on the Yahoo Web site linked him to the World Vision (wv) Web site, Goldberg decided to give $5,000 for relief efforts with a few strokes of his keyboard. "That made the difference to me, that I was able to get enough information to come to a decision," he says. "It was a very intelligent, easy way [to donate]."

Confronted with donor attrition and the increasing cost of direct mail, Christian nonprofits are turning to technology, especially the Internet, to attract new donors such as Goldberg.

World Vision U.S. (www.worldvision.org), which has had a Web site since April 1997, created an emergency campaign on its site for Sudan, with facts, photos, and video clips of relief work. In July, nearly 170 people donated $70,000 to World Vision through its Web site, about 10 percent of the total amount the agency raised.

The four-year-old Web site of Food for the Hungry (www.fh.org) already has become the group's second-largest source of new child sponsors, nearly doubling to 7 percent over 12 months and generating annual income near $190,000.

Web sites with .org in the domain name (typically used by nonprofits) have grown from a few hundred in 1992 to 115,000, according to Network Solutions, Inc., the company that registers new Web sites. Most of those that accept online donations use secure sites with encryption technology. But not all organizations have been successful in recouping the cost of Web site creation and maintenance. The Billy Graham Evangelistic Association (BGEA) added a donation page to its two-year-old Web site (www.billygraham.org) in August, but has received few online gifts. The BGEA, though, believes the purpose of the site is evangelism, not fundraising.

NO FAST MONEY: Those looking for quick financial returns from the Web will be disappointed, industry experts say. Tom McCabe, CEO of KMA, a direct response agency based in Dallas, advises clients, including World Vision, American Bible Society, Concerned Women for America (CWA), and Trans World Radio (TWR), to invest in a Web presence as an information tool to reach a younger, technology-savvy audience.

Brian Kluth, president of the Christian Stewardship Association (CSA), says organizations that clearly communicate ministry goals using the Internet could see an increase in donations through traditional means.

The 182-year-old American Bible Society (www.americanbible.org), with donors on the average in their sixties, launched its Web site last year with daily Scripture readings and a catalog of Bibles and Bible products to try to attract younger donors.

CWA (www.cwfa.org) uses its site as a lobbying tool to inform constituents about pending legislation and link them online

Study in Israel

it can make all the difference!

- MASTER OF ARTS DEGREES • GRADUATE OR UNDERGRADUATE SEMESTER ABROAD
- SHORT-TERM ACADEMIC STUDY TOURS • CREDITS TRANSFERABLE

Jerusalem University College

an evangelical Christian institution of higher learning celebrating 40 years in Jerusalem

formerly: INSTITUTE OF HOLY LAND STUDIES

For literature and free video: 1-800-891-9408
or (815)229-5900 in North America, all others 972-2-671-8628

with members of Congress. The site also sells resources such as books, cassettes, and bumper stickers.

For organizations without traditional products to sell, "virtual" gifts such as goats or medical checkups for poor families purchased in someone's honor provide direct donations to the organizations and Christmas cards to the gift recipients (CT, Oct. 26, 1998, p. 14).

World Concern (www.worldconcern.org), which has had a Web version of its Global Gift Guide since 1996, raised more than 7 percent of its total 1997 catalog income from online donations, up from less than 1 percent the previous year.

GOSPEL STUMBLING BLOCK? Not everyone is thrilled about the potential of the Web for fundraising. Robby Richardson, director of the three-year-old Gospel Communications Network (GCN), believes Internet fundraising could be a "stumbling block for the gospel." GCN (www.gospelcom.net), which is part of Gospel Films, is a network of 112 Christian nonprofit Web sites. GCN covers the $1 million per year total maintenance costs for the organizations in exchange for their adherence to GCN's doctrinal statement and guidelines of no political activity and no fundraising. "We didn't want to minister with one hand and ask for donations with the other," Richardson says.

TWR, which uses GCN's Internet service, would like to use the Web to raise money for missionary support but cannot afford the high cost of maintaining its own Web site, says spokesperson Rich Greene. But the organization (www.gospelcom.net/twr) has received 25 Web inquiries from potential missionary candidates.

E-MAIL APPEALS: The passive nature of the Web means it does not pose a direct threat to traditional fundraising methods such as direct mail, industry experts say, but many are convinced the Web will increase in popularity for charitable giving as electronic commerce continues to grow.

Some organizations are considering blending the directness of mail and the immediacy of the Internet to send requests for donations via e-mail. WV Internet programming manager Larry Short says WV already has collected 5,000 e-mail addresses on its Web site and is discussing an e-mail appeal strategy. The plan may include renting lists of e-mail addresses, a controversial new practice among some Christian nonprofits, even those that regularly rent lists for direct-mail appeals. But Tom Watkins, who has collected thousands of e-mail addresses as TWR's director of donor services, sees e-mail appeals as a matter of financial stewardship. "Our donors recognize it as an economical way to communicate," he says.

CREATING COMMUNITY: Short sees the Web as building virtual communities. "I know the technology has the ability to increase global relationships." He points to WV's online guestbook during the height of its Sudan campaign where supporters could write notes of encouragement to workers in Sudan. Short predicts a new form of child sponsorship that will use an extranet to link a community of sponsors with a community of children through posted messages, photos, and video.

Organizations need to focus on the interactive, relational aspects of the medium, says CSA's Kluth, who sees the fundraising pendulum swinging back from direct mail to relationship-building. But fundraising methods are not as important as ministry. "Trust the Master, not the methods," he says.

By Christine J. Gardner.

What Would I Do ? Make Connections In High Places Join Jesus.

STERLING
SILVER

STERLING SILVER
LAYERED 24K GOLD

ACTUAL SIZE: 1 1/8"

LIMITED EDITION

THE JOIN JESUS PINS HAVE BEEN CREATED AS A SYMBOL OF FAITH. LET IT BE YOUR EXPRESSION OF LOVE AND DEVOTION TO OUR LORD AND SAVIOR...JESUS CHRIST.

THESE PINS ARE DISTINCTIVELY CRAFTED IN STERLING SILVER, REPRESENTING THE HIGHEST QUALITY AND WORKMANSHIP.

* NOTE: PINS HAVE SPRING CLUTCH BACKS, WHICH PROVIDES FOR SECURE FASTENING.

 ORDER TODAY
24HR TOLL FREE
(800) 909-5704

• STERLING SILVER . . . $8.95 EA.
• STERLING SILVER LAYERED

• CHRISTMAS ORDERS: SPECIAL RUSH DELIVERY AVAILABLE
• VISA OR MASTERCARD ONLY (SORRY NO C.O.D.'S)
• SHIPPING & HANDLING $4.95
• CA. RES. ADD 7.75% SALES TAX
• 30 DAY MONEY BACK GUARANTEE (EX. S&H)

Homeless Overwhelm Shelters

Four months after Russia's economy began its latest tailspin, 10,000 people are living on the streets of Moscow. Sandra Reid, the Salvation Army's chief of social services for Moscow's 9 million people, sees her budgetary resources fully stretched, even though the Russian winter is yet to hit with full force.

Priorities for her office's care for needy Russians are first the homeless, then pensioners and prisoners. "Refugees and the homeless are the most disadvantaged people," Reid says.

Although Moscow has 10,000 homeless, the city-operated shelters can accommodate only 1,200 a night. And those shelters accept only people who can produce documents proving Moscow residency. Most of the city's homeless live in underground transit passages or sleep in waiting areas of train stations. Russia's recent attempts to reform its state-run economy have led to sharp drops in the value of its currency along with many other economic woes.

GOING TO THE NEEDY: Salvation Army employee Vasili Alexeiev supervises a program to help care for the physical and spiritual needs of Moscow's homeless. Hot borscht and bread are served from the back of a van each afternoon near the city's two largest train stations, where the Salvation Army feeds about 200 homeless a day. Once a week he distributes warm clothing. Alexeiev began feeding the homeless in 1990, the year the Salvation Army began working in Russia.

Late in the afternoon, Alexeiev tries to form relationships with the homeless, handing out soap and socks. Because of increasing restrictions on freedom of religion (CT, Oct. 26, 1998, p. 24), he is forbidden to distribute Christian literature.

An important piece of the Salvation Army's work among the homeless is to help them restore necessary personal documents. Without proper papers that verify identity and residency, they are cut off from receiving any government assistance.

Viktor, Leda, and Luba participate in the Salvation Army's feeding program. All in their fifties, the three share sleeping quarters in an abandoned construction shed under a bridge. They curl up together on a makeshift bed in a feeble attempt to keep warm as winter sets in.

Leda collects discarded beer bottles from trash containers and redeems them for small change to supplement her food supply. She lost her official identification documents in a fire and thus has not received a pension in three years.

The Salvation Army conducts church services in five locations in Moscow where additional spiritual and material assistance is given. Welcoming the destitute to church leads to problems of its own. The Salvation Army must rent meeting facilities, and wherever there is an increasing number of destitute people, building administrators are more apt to evict.

DIRE TIME FOR ELDERLY: The most desperate of Russia's elderly are also aided by the Salvation Army. The current minimum pension, which was about $50 before the economic crisis, is now around $19. The official poverty line is set at $37 a month. Pensioners with no family to assist them receive barely enough money to keep from starving. And in many cases, pensions have not been paid for months.

The financial stresses rocked the Salvation Army's budget and cut into its

What better gift for Christmas

Help your friends and relatives read the Bible in one year.

Yes, ten minutes a day is all it takes. Read short sections each day from the Old Testament, New Testament, Psalms and Proverbs. Each day's readings are printed together, so you don't need to turn to different parts of the Bible. They are all right there in front of you! This year, give a friend or family member the greatest gift of all—God's gift to us—His Word!

Next Christmas, they'll be able to say they've read the entire Bible. And you'll be glad you helped change their lives!

Find The One Year Bible at most bookstores.

ability to help the needy. Food intended for distribution as humanitarian aid is purchased in bulk to hold down costs, although costs have tripled.

Currently, Russia and the Commonwealth of Independent States receive the highest percentage of the Salvation Army's missions budget worldwide, according to spokesperson Jennifer Fagerstrom. Three months ago, the Salvation Army intensified its work to develop financial support within Russia. "Russia must start supporting Russia," Fagerstrom says.

Charitable giving is not yet an established practice in Russia. And Russians are still wary of releasing their money ministry: The Salvation Army feeds the homeless near Kursky train station in Moscow.

after being burned by financial scams in the early 1990s.

The Moscow city government appears to quietly consent to the Army's work. Salvation Army soup kitchens are the only ones that have operated without problems since the fall of communism, Fagerstrom says. On the other hand, the Salvation Army has received no breaks from the government in advancing its work. The organization pays the same high rents as noncharitable works. "Let's face it," Reid says. "People here want money."

Desperate times also have led to Salvation Army workers being robbed at gunpoint. An additional barrier to the work is the official Russian Orthodox Church position, which considers most other churches to be false faiths. But Fagerstrom adds that, even though the Orthodox hierarchy lists the Salvation Army as a cult, some Orthodox priests work with the group.

By Beverly Nickles in Moscow.

Bible Tutor brings the Bible to Life

Dr. Craig Koester is Associate Professor of New Testament at Luther Seminary in St. Paul. A noted scholar and teacher, he is the author of Symbolism in the Gospel of John (1995); A Beginner's Guide to Reading the Bible (1991); and The Dwelling of God (1989).

<http://bibletutor.com>

Bible Tutor

Luther Productions
Saint Paul, Minnesota

Order CD-ROM through
Web or call 651-641-3219

Generations '99 A CONFERENCE FOR SENIORS

Phoenix, Arizona
February 6, 1999

Orlando, Florida
February 27, 1999

Washington, DC
March 13, 1999

St. Louis, Missouri
March 27, 1999

Join us for this intense conference featuring some of America's most sought after speakers. This year alone, thousands will experience Generations '99. You will find value and esteem from our inspiring speakers. This special conference will lift your spirits. This is one conference you will not want to miss...
BECAUSE LIFE IS JUST BEGINNING!

Art Linkletter

Janette Oke

Paul Newman, M.D.

Barbara Johnson

Mary McCormack

COST:
Ticket Price - $33/Person
At The Door - $43/Person

To Order Tickets
For More Information

Phone: (800) 851-9100
Fax: (314) 521-6300
www.cwba.net

Sponsored by:

Gospel closer: Graham confers with former President George Bush before the final service.

Graham Journeys to Cyberspace

As John Glenn prepared to become the oldest man launched into space, Billy Graham may have become the oldest evangelist to preach in cyberspace. On October 24, during his only U.S. crusade this year, Graham boldly took his message where evangelists have rarely gone live before: the Internet.

While Graham preached in person to more than 74,000 in Tampa, Florida, on that Saturday night, another 6,257 simultaneously logged onto computers to hear his presentation of the gospel. The Internet event included music by dc Talk and Jars of Clay in a "Concert for the NeXt Generation," the traditional youth night of Graham's four-day crusade.

INNOVATIVE OCTOGENARIAN: During the 1990s, Graham, who turned 80 in November, has strived to keep pace with technological advances. In Tampa, video cameras shot the event and uplinked the video from the crusade to a satellite that beamed the signal to a Webcast server in Virginia, where the video was converted to a computer-friendly format and presented in real time on the Internet.

Although the video aspect of real-time Internet presentations is not yet perfected, and Graham's movements seemed somewhat stilted and awkward, the clear digital audio feed put Internet crusade "attendees" right into the action. Digital still photos were also loaded during the entire crusade onto the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association's Web site, which received more than 43,000 visits the week before the crusade.

PREACHING ROOTS: For Graham, the crusade took place in familiar territory. Tampa is the city where the evangelist first preached 60 years ago while attending Tampa's Florida Bible Institute.

"I began preaching here in Florida in front of 30 to 40 people," Graham said. "Now, for the first time, the Internet is being used for evangelizing. My hope is that it will reach additional thousands of people in the years to come. The Internet is only the beginning of what is on the way."

Graham recalled revival meetings he held. "I had prepared four different sermons to preach if I was ever called to preach," Graham said about his beginnings in Tampa Bay. "[That first time] I preached all four of them in about the first eight to ten minutes, I was so nervous. I still get nervous before I preach."

Graham, whose movements are slowed by Parkinson's disease, describes himself as old and tired. But during each of the four nights, Graham never faltered when preaching. The final night of the crusade drew the largest crowd, as more than 78,000 filled the stadium and two overflow lots outside.

More than 1,000 churches from 70 denominations came together in preparation for the crusade. Attendance exceeded organizers' expectations. Audiences averaged 64,500 each night, with an average of 4,900 people becoming Christians each night. Graham previously held crusades in Tampa in 1953 and 1979.

By Natalie Nichols Gillespie in Tampa.

A large, dark, artistic image of a person's face, possibly a woman, with text overlaid. The image is in a high-contrast, almost black and white style, with the person's face partially obscured by shadows and their hand near their face.

For we don't even know what we should pray for,
nor how we should pray.
But the Holy Spirit prays for us with groanings that cannot be expressed in words.

ROMANS 8:26

NEW KING
JAMES VERSION
Live It Now

The next great leap for equipping church leaders

is really a

step back.

Back to the way Jesus himself
equipped and trained the 12.

Smelly fishing boats. Dusty streets. Windblown hillsides. Not much of a campus! But the student body of 12 sure learned the secrets of effective ministry. At Denver Seminary, we're following the example of the Master Professor with an emphasis on hands-on learning directed by experienced mentors. Learn more about the seminary education with an innovative approach to knowing, being and doing. We borrowed it from the best!

Take the leap.

DENVER SEMINARY

1-800-922-3040 Ext. 278
P.O. Box 10,000

e-mail: admit@densem.edu www.gospelcom.net/densem/
Denver, CO 80250

Jesus Christ

How Do You Help People See the Truth
In a Culture that Will Believe Anything?

We live in an age that grants plausibility to every idea and certainty to none." With those words, Alistair Begg puts his finger on the pulse of a culture that can't separate fact from fiction. And issues an urgent call for all of us to discern, defend, and cling to the absolute truth of our faith. Not since John Stott's Basic Christianity has one author so definitively presented the essential facts of the gospel—in a way that speaks not just to the mind, but to the heart. And it's available as a two book set—one to keep, and one to give to a friend. Ask for What Angels Wish They Knew at your bookstore, or call 1-800-678-6928. (For the Christian bookstore nearest you call 1-800-991-7747.) And discover what the Bible really teaches about a salvation so glorious, it's beyond the grasp of any angel. Yet freely available to us all

MOODY
The Name You Can Trust
www.moodypress.org

SIGN OF THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A GOOD DEAL AND A CUT-RATE LOAN.

Church financing from Bank of the West comes with a wealth of experience and a bond of commitment that has served religious organizations for a decade and a half. No other bank has been as single-minded in its dedication to church lending. Churches are the only customers we serve in our Religious Organizations Lending department.

It's why we are the market leader among banks in religious lending. In the last 15 years, we've committed more than half a billion dollars to the religious community, nationwide.

We understand how to work with stewardship campaigns so you can keep construction moving without costly delays. We can help you with the intricacies of environmental law. We know what's realistic to expect in construction costs, schedules and quality, and how to ensure you get full value for your money. And we're experienced in church refinancings, land acquisition, renovation and expansion loans, as well as underwriting construction projects.

Lending to religious organizations isn't something new that we're "trying out." Unlike some banks, we haven't jumped in and out of church lending as the economy changed. We don't think of this as something to sandwich in between loans to multinational conglomerates, high-flying technology companies or foreign governments. We think of it as our mission.

Because we're a full service bank, we can do more for you — leases or loans for sound systems, church furnishings, computers, vehicles, and more. And our service extends to cash management, deposit services and investments. We can introduce you to recognized professionals who specialize in working with churches in the fields of construction and stewardship development.

We made our commitment to support churches, their schools and ministries a decade and a half ago. We've been fulfilling it every day since, with dedicated professionals whose sole mission is to deliver financial services to the religious community.

So, if you really want the best team for a successful outcome for your project, look beyond short term rate-cutters. Look to building a relationship with a financial partner that knows how to help, and is committed to doing so, long-term.

That's what you'll get with Bank of the West. Give us a call at 1-800-405-2327.

And get a good deal more for your money.

BANK OF THE WEST

Member FDIC © 1997 Bank of the West

Preparing for the Brave New Millennium

We might be ready for the Rapture, but are we prepared for babies engineered for perfection?

A year from now, readers may already have reached their limit in what promises to be a nonstop year-long barrage of chatter in anticipation of the new millennium. We would like to get in a word before you are thoroughly jaded.

It is not given to humans to know the future, but as long we are mindful of our limited vision we can construct probable scenarios. Here is a forecast for the twenty-first century: More than any previous era, the century to come will demonstrate the awesome extent to which God has granted to his creatures the power to create, to manipulate, and to destroy.

We are made in God's image and likeness; we are, as J. R. R. Tolkien said, "sub-creators." That theme has long been a staple of Christian anthropology—so, we say, J. S. Bach was imitating his Maker when he composed great cantatas, and so is every artist and architect and storyteller, every human maker, whether or not he acknowledges the source of his gift.

But in the century to come, "sub-creator" will take on a new intensity. We are likely to see, within the next hundred years, the cloning of human beings. We are likely to see artificial intelligences that are not merely—merely!—supremely good at specialized tasks such as chess or blackjack but rather are able to interact intelligently with the blooming, buzzing, category-crossing Real World. We are certain to see widespread and diverse approaches to genetic enhancement, not only of potatoes, but also of people; human enhancement via neural implants is also likely. We are certain to see reproduction divorced from the human setting in which it has always taken place; many children, to be sure, will enter this world the old-fashioned way, but many others will not (see "Biotech Babies," p. 54).

None of this should startle anyone who has read a newspaper in the last year. All of these prospects and many more have been duly reported and analyzed. Occasionally a group of academics will gather to discuss the ethics of cloning or the new reproductive technologies. Some good books by Christian scholars have addressed these questions and related ones. But what has not gotten started yet is a sustained conversation within the church about the Brave New World we are about to enter: a world rich with new possibilities for good and evil.

In the world of the twenty-first century, age-old assumptions about what it means to be human will be proclaimed obsolete. On the one hand, humans will be able to exercise a control over their own making that encroaches on what have always been regarded as divine prerogatives. (Not a few scientists are saying, Listen, we are as gods; we'd better get on with it.) On the other hand, so we will be told, the development of ever more intelligent machines will give the lie to notions of human specialness. After all, as the MIT artificial-intelligence guru Marvin Minsky likes to say, we are just machines made out of meat.

How will Christians respond to such developments? One scenario calls for a wholesale rejection of science and all its works. This is a favorite of science-fiction writers such as the novelist William Gibson, who often gives Christians distinctly unflattering bit parts as Luddite terrorist fundamentalists. That would surely be a tragically mistaken response. We need more Christians on the frontlines of research—like Francis Collins, who directs the Human Genome Project—and we need thoughtful, informed critiques, not apocalyptic rants.

Another scenario, one that is starting to be played out in some quarters, is blandly accommodationist, refusing to recognize the extent to which the vast and far-flung networks of science and the biotech industry are already moving willy-nilly into that Brave New World. Sometimes reality is apocalyptic.

Neither of these responses will do. To begin with, we must affirm that, disturbing as they are, these prospects do not undercut our faith. Cloning, artificial intelligence, genetic enhancement: all these are evidence of our nature as subcreators. They suggest that we have not previously realized how deep in us the image of God goes.

And, yes, all these prospects reveal our God-given freedom, the implications of which theologians and artists need to wrestle with more than ever before. The God who gave us the freedom to create cities and cathedrals has not prevented us from enslaving other human beings, raping and murdering, annihilating our fellow subcreators with the ruthless efficiency of the gas chambers or with the intimacy of a Hutu mob beating their Tutsi neighbors and former friends to death. God has also given us the freedom to sit in the kingdom of our living room with a second helping of fat-free ice cream and the TV droning on while the world about us comes apart. Yet we may not opt out of the responsibilities that creative power brings.

Will God permit human creativity to bring forth the Brave New World that seems to be taking shape? Will he see a second Tower of Babel rising and once again sow confusion among the arrogant builders? We don't know. But until Christ returns, we must use our powers as he has called us to. We are in part responsible for the way that world will look. We need to begin preparing for it now—not with the desperate tactics of survivalists but with the equanimity modeled by Jesus, wise as serpents, gentle as doves. CT

Who Killed Matthew Shepard?

When Dr. Barnett Slepian was gunned down by an apparent anti-abortion extremist, the murderer was hailed as a hero by Donald Spitz, a founder of Pro-life Virginia. Thankfully, Spitz's reaction does not represent the mainstream pro-life movement. More people listened to Bob and Paul Schenck of the National Clergy Council, some of the organizers of the "Spring of Life" abortion protest in 1992 in Buffalo, who admonished "all people of conscience to defend life peacefully," and they called Slepian's murder "wrong, sinful and cowardly."

Media savants in high places (the New York Times, the CBS Evening News) were quick to blame the pro-life movement for fostering crazies who act out their opposition to abortion violently. But such scapegoating lacked credibility: most Americans recognize that pro-life forces have moderated their rhetoric and tactics. We no longer simply protest abortion; we also serve women with problem pregnancies and provide care and services to the babies who enter the world through them.

The situation was different in response to the killing of Matthew Shepard. The brutal murder of this gay university student was immediately politicized, despite his father's plea not to "use Matt as part of an agenda." On the one side, representatives of Fred Phelps's church in Topeka, Kansas, picketed Shepard's funeral brandishing signs that read, "No Fags in Heaven" and "No Tears for Queers."

On the other side, spokespersons for gay liberation were quick to accuse the so-called Religious Right of creating the hostile environment in which hate crimes against gays flourish. Their surreal thesis indicted anyone who publicly condemns homosexuality as playing a part in Matthew Shepherd's death. Gay activists cited as Exhibit A the recent "truth in love" advertising campaign, which claimed that a change of sexual orientation is possible and produced ex-gays to prove it.

It is not enough simply to point out the inconsistencies in these accusations. We need to wrestle with the fact that many people found them credible. Just as we did in the pro-life movement, we must find ways to communicate that our motives arise from love, not hate, that our vision is not fear, but hope.

First, we should use this occasion to plumb the depths of our own souls, individually and corporately, to see if we harbor any hatred toward those who have a same-sex orientation. Human nature being what it is, we can too easily cross the line between hating the sin and hating the sinner.

Second, as we are doing in the abortion debate, we need to seek out forums for trying to reach mutual understanding over why we hold to our positions on homosexuality. Not enough traditional Christians have engaged in dialog with people on the other side over the implications of sanctioning same-sex behavior.

Third, Christians must demonstrate the same degree of compassion toward homosexuals as toward women with unwanted fetuses. A few churches have reached out heroically to those suffering from AIDS while maintaining their witness against gay sex. We need more such action.

We can learn a lesson from the early church. First-century pagans were bound by sexual addictions, the magic arts, a quest for material things, and hostility toward people of other cultures, tribes, or nations. The early Christian community demonstrated a joyous freedom from such bondage. Despite restraints on evangelistic proclamation, people were drawn to the faith because of the attractiveness of the corporate and individual lives of the Christian community itself.

It was not possible for the early church to wage a public-opinion campaign against the forms of bondage in their own culture. But they knew they weren't fighting against flesh and blood; the battle was spiritual, against the principalities and powers, against "the spiritual forces of evil in the heavenly places" (Eph. 6:12). They knew that using carnal weapons for a spiritual war spells defeat from the start. Spiritual wars are spiritually won. CT

Human nature being what it is, we can too easily cross the line between hating the sin and hating the sinner.

THE Dragon S

He fights for religious liberty, defends the civil rights of homosexuals, and funded Paula Jones's case against the President—the enigmatic John Wayne Whitehead.

Is this what Paul meant when he said to be all things to all men? Four years ago, John Whitehead warned fellow Christians—in speeches, articles, books, and videos—that their religion was under attack by Nazi-like secularism. He called it “religious apartheid.”

“From the removal of crosses and nativity scenes, to the prohibition of individual prayer in schools, religion is being systematically separated from American society,” he wrote in a June 1994 editorial for Rutherford magazine, the house organ for his Rutherford Institute in Charlottesville, Virginia. Elsewhere he ominously informed us that “Clinton is quickly constructing a despotic government and a new society of intolerance to traditional values.”

Today Whitehead says he likes Clinton and, if it weren't for the President's position on abortion, would vote for him. “No modern President has done more for religious rights than Clinton.” He has also publicly called on conservative Christians to stop using homophobic rhetoric. In 1996 he criticized Colorado's Amendment 2 (an amendment prohibiting state and local governments from passing laws that ban discrimination against homosexuals), which Focus on the Family strongly supported. In 1997 he opposed the Religious Freedom Restoration Act and is critical of the current Religious Freedom Amendment. His magazine has even run positive reviews of several violent and disturbing films, including The Last Temptation of Christ (“a sympathetic and reverent treatment of Christianity's origin”).

With just this evidence, one would be tempted to conclude that a captain of the Religious Right has had a leftward political conversion. But before this into the enigma. When First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton talked about a right-wing conspiracy to bring down her husband, many people saw John Whitehead and the Rutherford Institute sitting at the center of the web.

The Rutherford Institute is currently involved in 230 legal cases; but since last November, one case dominated all others. It alone changed the Rutherford Institute's moniker as media reports from “a religious liberties group” (USA Today, 1995) to “the conservative legal foundation paying Paula Jones' legal bills in her sexual misconduct case against President Clinton” (Nation Magazine, 1998).

That Whitehead would ally himself with such a controversial case alarmed plenty of past supporters who were eager to support religious liberties but not a political vendetta. Other supporters have been turned off by the other changes the 52-year-old Whitehead (and thus his organization) has been undergoing.

John Wayne Whitehead almost seems to be deliberately marginalizing his supporters. If so, it wouldn't be the first time. In the 16 years since he founded his pioneering religious-liberty ministry, the Rutherford Institute, Whitehead has been arguing for Christians to engage "secular" culture. He pursued lawsuits to fight religious discrimination eight years before Pat Robertson founded his American Center for Law and Justice—back when Christians were quoting Paul's disdain for "ungodly" courts (1 Cor. 4:3; 6:1–11). He told evangelicals to be politically active six years before Robertson ran for President—when many conservative Christians still rejected politics as dirty. And now he is enjoining Christians to engage the most pervasive instrument of secular culture—popular culture—by encouraging Christians to produce art, film, and television—and this in a day when "engaging popular culture" for many evangelicals means boycotting Disney.

TED OLSEN

ayer

So is John Whitehead once again two steps ahead of the curve, or is he just unstable?

Soldier, hippie, prophecy zealot

While many conservative leaders point to the 1960s as the beginning of America's moral downfall, John Whitehead looks back with fond remembrance. His office is covered with sixties' icons: the Beatles, Bob Dylan, the Beat Poets. A lava lamp illuminates his desk. He says he was a sixties radical; he doesn't regret it; and yes, he inhaled.

Ironically, he "got radicalized," not in the context of the college campus, but in the army. He signed up after college eager to fight against communism in Vietnam, but a congenital back defect kept him stateside. Stationed at Fort Hood, Texas, as a supply officer, he says, "All I could see was a lot of incompetence. It was just this big killing machine that demanded a total lack of freedom."

Lieutenant Whitehead registered a formal complaint when a captain made a joke about the killing of four Kent State students the day before. Whitehead participated in antiwar protests whenever he could, and a peace symbol adorned his windshield. Every time he drove to the base, his superiors made him scrape his newest one off with a razor blade.

Whitehead eventually got out of the military alive and entered the University of Arkansas law school, where he became a stereotypical left-wing radical. He grew his hair long (it's still long for a 52-year-old) and continued to participate in demonstrations. He also began his writing career, working for the underground student newspaper, The Grapevine. Among those he interviewed while on the paper was a young University of Arkansas law professor running for Congress: Bill Clinton (who lost that election). The hot topic of the interview? Whether then-embattled Richard Nixon should be impeached over Watergate.

Later that year, Whitehead received his law degree and began work at a prosperous law firm. He was a young idealistic lawyer angry about injustice. But a brief trip to J. C. Penney changed his life forever.

Before college, Whitehead had never read a book from cover to cover. As a freshman he read Ian Fleming's James Bond thriller Goldfinger and was hooked on books. He especially loves science fiction, on the screen or on paper (it doesn't even have to be good science fiction; he loved the 1996 Tim Burton film flop Mars Attacks). So when he saw what he was sure was a bestselling science fiction book at J. C. Penney ("Eight Million Copies Sold!"), he bought it and devoured it. The book was Hal Lindsey's The Late Great Planet Earth.

"It spooked me right into heaven," he recalls. "The thing that got me was that actual prophecy had come true. I couldn't stop reading after that."

Left, right, left

Today Whitehead isn't sure if he thought being a lawyer was a bad career, or just a bad career for him. But after he converted he knew God didn't want him to be a lawyer. God wanted him to be a preacher. Whitehead gave away his clients to other lawyers, and he and his wife, Carol, packed their belongings (and $300) into a 1965 Dodge and headed out to Hal Lindsey's Light and Power House seminary in Los Angeles.

About six months after he enrolled, an elementary teacher approached Whitehead for legal help. She had worn a crucifix to her classroom, and when a student asked what it was, she was reprimanded for answering his question and threatened with losing her job. Whitehead explained the teacher's rights to the principal, and he backed down from his threats.

After that success, several more friends, acquaintances, and friends of friends began asking Whitehead for legal help. On the side, working for free with other legal organizations and law firms (his wife worked as a legal secretary for one), Whitehead did what he could. In the process, he made peace with the fact that he was a Christian and a lawyer.

But others did not make peace with him. He was told by some believers that Christian involvement in the courts was unbiblical. "Religious people had mostly withdrawn and were not participating in their culture," he says. "Some of it was due to fear of discrimination; for others it was a conscious choice."

Whitehead combated the attitude through penning articles for Christian magazines and publishing his first book, The Separation Illusion: A Lawyer Examines the First Amendment. The courts, he says, were an integral part of American democracy; to avoid any lawsuits was to cede the battleground: "Once you say you're not going to be involved in that part of culture, you create a vacuum, and other voices are going to fill it up."

Whitehead also sketched out proposals for an organization that would try such cases without charging the clients. Church leaders and lawyers cautiously backed the idea in theory, Whitehead says, but knew it would never work. The conservative Christian world was simply too antilawsuit to gain any kind of financial support.

In 1979, the Whiteheads moved east, and John began practicing again in the Washington, D.C., area. Before long, he could not afford the rent for his office and was forced to move his practice into his basement. Still, he took pro bono religious-liberty cases. One case, defending a family arrested for home schooling their children, cost Whitehead $25,000 of his own money. But he won the case. He was broke but now convinced that he was on the right track.

"A friend of mine offered to pay our house payment for a year; still, I knew the path I was on was no mistake," he says.

One year into the Reagan presidency, John Whitehead published his The Second American Revolution. In essence a repackaging of The Separation Illusion, the book utilized militaristic imagery, righteous indignation, and "fighting words." But the times had changed since the book's first incarnation. Evangelicals were now warming to the idea of political involvement. Jerry Falwell, who would be one of Whitehead's closest allies for years, founded his Moral Majority in 1979. Pat Robertson was gaining influence through his television empire. James Dobson founded Focus on the Family in 1977 and created his more political Family Research Council in 1982. Conservative evangelicals had been credited with electing Reagan. By 1982 evangelicals had caught up to Whitehead's notion that it was okay, perhaps even necessary, for Whitehead says he likes Clinton and, if it weren't for the President's position on abortion, would vote for him.

conservative Christians to be involved in the political process.

"He has definitely contributed to a higher visibility of the issues," says Stephen T. McFarland, director of the Center for Law and Religious Freedom for the Christian Legal Society (CLS). "And he helped to stiffen the backbone for believers when it came to getting involved." Still, McFarland's CLS has been around for 36 years, and he doesn't think Whitehead singlehandedly brought Christians into the courtroom.

The Second American Revolution sold over 100,000 copies, making Whitehead a minor celebrity in the Christian media, regularly appearing on radio programs such as Dobson's. Whitehead's office phone began ringing with Christians claiming they were suffering religious discrimination. They'd kept silent for years, they said, but now knew they could do something about it.

Whitehead suddenly found himself with enough money, enough cases, and enough interested lawyers to create his organization, the Rutherford Institute, named for Samuel Rutherford, a Scottish Presbyterian minister in the early 1600s who, in his book Lex Rex, "resisted the idea of divine right of kings." (Rutherford also wrote a treatise supporting religious persecution. Says Whitehead: "Nobody's perfect.")

After his conversion, Whitehead became as extremely right wing as he had been left wing. "I swung to the other side. I thought I had to," he explains. "I became a Christian from being a Marxist, so I still believed the one central idea that Christianity has this political thing tied to it."

One friend in particular convinced him that Christianity had specific political implications—Rousas John (R. J.) Rushdoony, the father of American Reconstructionism (also known as Theonomy). Rushdoony, who helped found the Rutherford Institute, sat on the group's board for a number of years and wrote the introduction to The Separation Illusion. As a Reconstructionist, Rushdoony believed U.S. laws should reflect biblical teachings, which meant supporting the death penalty for sinners such as abortionists, homosexuals, and "incorrigible sons."

It is an association that to this day Whitehead can't shake. Ask Religious Right watchdog groups such as Americans United for the Separation of Church and State or the Institute for First Amendment Studies about Whitehead, and Rushdoony's name will be one of the first things you'll hear. But even if Rushdoony were to be excised permanently from Rutherford's history, there are enough quotes from Whitehead himself in his early years with the Rutherford Institute to make the watchdogs nervous:

- "Courts must place themselves under the authority of God's law."
- "All of civil affairs and government, including law, should be based upon principles found in the Bible."
- "Take the initiative. Sue rather than wait to be sued. That's where we've been weak. We've always been on the defensive. We need to frame the issue and pick the court."
- "Public schools are . . . satanic imitations of the true God's institutional church."

John Whitehead argued that America is a Christian nation and that the Constitution was written to protect the right of states to uphold Christianity through law.

Now, he says, he doesn't really believe those things anymore. In fact, he says he is surprised that leaders of the Religious Right still do. He recently attended a meeting of Christians he had not seen in several years (he won't say how long or what group) and says, "I was surprised at how dated everything appeared. It seemed that there was no evolution of thought, no real evaluation of things."

"I'm not a Darwinian," he explains, "but I believe that people's brains evolve. There are things today you believe that you won't ten years from now."

Or, as Whitehead's hero would say, "The times, they are a-changin'." Whitehead places Bob Dylan second only to Jesus on his heroes list; the Beatles come in third. He and Dylan, he says, have walked the same path from radical progressive, to politically conservative Christian, and halfway back again. "If you look at Slow Train Coming, which Dylan recorded shortly after his conversion, there's a lot of political stuff on there. But as Dylan rethought things, he realized this is not what Jesus is all about." Whitehead believes Dylan is still a Christian but, as not every Dylan song is about Jesus anymore, neither is every Rutherford lawsuit about Christian liberty.

Whitehead's "evolution of thought" began when he started having second thoughts about his earlier hero's notion of Lex Rex, where law is king: "I kept coming back across this concept where the adulteress is brought to Jesus and he lets her go. You know, that was capital punishment, and he lets her off. The way Christ looked at people was not in terms of the law but was in terms of the fact that they were human beings. Human beings can be above the law at some point, if you look at it from Christ's compassionate viewpoint."

That idea—that the law was not ultimate, that the gospel transcends the law—changed the way Whitehead saw some issues, especially regarding homosexuals and non-Christians.

"We didn't change our basic beliefs, but we did change how we approached subjects. For example, we're now making clear that gays have rights. They pay taxes. They're American citizens. Are we going to allow discrimination against them in this day and age in America?" He argues for the broad interpretation of the antidiscrimination laws that already exist and has never argued strongly for any new protection.

Whitehead says many of his past fundraising letters were homophobic in that they viewed homosexuals as the enemy, and he regrets sending them. He has made public announcements saying so not only to the Washington Post but also to the Washington Blade, D.C.'s homosexual newspaper. That has angered conservative critics (including Family Research Institute president Gary Bauer).

"Not only was I wrong, but a great majority of evangelicals are out to lunch on the subject," he told the Post.

Alexis Crow, chief counsel for the Rutherford Institute, told the Blade, "Other Christian groups spout all these words like 'God is love; hate the sin but love the sinner,' and . . . when [we] make a move to do that . . . we get attacked. Come on hypocrites, get on the bandwagon!"

Whitehead is unapologetic. "Christians have lost their witness to the gay community," he says. "The people at the Blade are just amazed that we would hold this view, that we would protect their rights. They think that Christians are out to do them in." He pauses. "Actually, there is a large Christian element that would do them in and yells at me over the issue. There's a word for that. It's called homophobia."

"The Rutherford Institute is being punished by some in the Christian community for not doing the popular thing and for standing true to its principles," Whitehead wrote in a March fundraising letter. "A number of Christian, pro-family groups are working in concert to blackball the Rutherford Institute and spread false gossip about our work."

Whitehead places Bob Dylan second only to Jesus on his heroes list.

Whitehead is making a conscious effort now to make the Rutherford Institute known more as a civil-rights organization rather than simply a religious-rights one. This means making sure it is not known as merely a Christian-rights organization. He says that while Rutherford doesn't actively seek cases, they are taking more related to religious discrimination against non-Christians. In their monthly litigation report they mention several:

- A Jewish inmate in Arizona was denied kosher meals.
- An Orthodox Jew air force chaplain was required to wear regulation headgear instead of the traditional yarmulke.
- A Muslim father had his children taken from him even after he was found innocent of abuse.
- Native Americans were charged with felonious possession of raptor parts, even though they were using them in a religious ceremony.
- A Hindu religious leader was forced to serve jury duty.

In fact, this report does not explicitly identify any of the litigants as Christians, save one case where Amish hunters were punished for refusing to display hunter orange on their buggies.

That is not to say Whitehead's organization isn't defending Christians against discrimination. In fact, Whitehead says an overwhelming majority of their cases are about Christian religious freedom. Still, he sees helping non-Christians as part of Rutherford's ministry.

"We're working to help this pretty highly placed Tibetan [nun] who works with the Dalai Lama," says Whitehead. "When she came here, we talked about Christianity. She knows and I know I'm not going to be a Buddhist and she's probably not going to be a Christian. But the point is she takes it as it is. It's not a Buddhist lawyer helping her; it's a Christian lawyer. And we're for real. We're practicing what Christ preached. That's where the satisfaction is: that she could come to us knowing who we are."

Whitehead leans back in his chair and pats his leather-bound Bible lying on the shelf behind his desk. "I've got my Bible back here," he says, "but I'm not going to bring it out for everyone who comes in here and say, 'Oh, let's read John 3:16 together.' We're service oriented. We preach by acting."

Crow, who has been with Rutherford since 1989, says Whitehead hasn't changed as much as he says he has. "He has always worked for the underdog," she says. "And today homosexuals are an underdog. What I see as the difference between 1990 and now is that John has the confidence in himself to go with his instincts and not so much by the conventional wisdom of what it is to be a contemporary Christian in America. He's always been a particular way, but never felt he could reach out in the way we are now."

But Whitehead gives another reason why he's no longer decrying America's fast track to hell in a handbasket: the country is actually better off than it was.

"You could write a book like Religious Apartheid today [a 1994 book and film in which he likened the ACLU and government officials to Nazis], but you'd be straining it." Christians, he says, are now more free.

"Everything in Religious Apartheid was footnoted. It was happening. To us, at that time, it looked like that. Then Clinton got in and there was a significant shift in the way he viewed things. In my view, Clinton stopped appealing to the private-interest groups and decided to set a legacy. He tried to promote Christian teachers in schools and Christian rights in the workplace. And everything else started shifting. The President had a lot to do with that. It was his State Department that recognized Christians are being persecuted in China. Bush and Reagan never did that. Other than the partial-birth abortion thing, I'm with that group that says he's doing a good job as President."

He qualifies that last statement. This is, after all, the man who approved hundreds of thousands of dollars of his organization's money for the Paula Jones case. "As President," he reiterates. "His private life is another matter."

Why Paula Jones?

When asked about the Jones case, Whitehead leans back in his chair a good 45 degrees, placing his hands behind his head. He looks like he's going to take a nap while he answers "the Jones questions." He even closes his eyes, opening them only to hear the questions he knows are coming: Why did you take the case when you're known for religious-liberty cases? Didn't this make you appear to have a vendetta against the President? What did you hope to gain from this case?

Milton Berle used to tell reporters, "That's a lousy question; ask me another." If he was unsatisfied with that one, he'd grab any notes out of the reporter's hand and flip through questions until he found one he liked. John Whitehead, a Southerner, is too polite for that, so he'll just nap.

For the record, here are the answers: (1) He took Jones's case because "we believed her" (he also believes Anita Hill, whom he lectured with at Oral Roberts University Law School and who babysat for his kids) and because sexual harassment is a "human-rights issue"; (2) he believes the case may actually help eradicate rumors of a vendetta because reporters will now ask his opinion instead of guessing at it based on his earlier writings; (3) in terms of what he has to gain, he says, "The press hasn't historically cared about religious-liberty cases, but they read our press releases now."

Time to wake up.

Whitehead says he hoped publicity from the case would result in a higher public profile and more support for the Rutherford Institute. Instead, he estimates that the case has cost the organization $400,000 of that in legal expenses—and hundreds of thousands more in lost donations. Hundreds upon hundreds of letters poured in from angry supporters. Moody Broadcasting network and other radio stations dropped his program Freedom Under Fire. Donations dropped so substantially that the organization recently had to lay off seven of its sixty employees, close its Washington office, and rely on its reserve funds. More than two years after taking the case, it's suddenly over—with an $850,000 settlement and no apology.

The postlawyer

It is obvious that Whitehead's passion long ago moved beyond the Paula Jones case. When talking to him, one gets the sense that his real excitement may have moved beyond the legal world altogether. Whitehead hasn't actually argued a case in years. He spends his office hours managing, being interviewed, "setting vision," and writing. Lots and lots of writing. He has written 15 books by now and produced as many videos to go with them, but he is still looking for a publisher for his latest project.

Too bad; he considers it his masterpiece. There are no Nazis breaking down doors to enforce tolerance in this one. There are not even any courtrooms or mentions of Supreme Court decisions. This one is about art. This one is about popular culture.

Grasping for the Wind, the title of Whitehead's video series and book, is, on the surface, about "humanity's search for meaning." But it's no Francis-Schaefferesque jeremiad on the fall of Western culture. He may start at Rembrandt's Adoration of the Shepherds and end up at the punk group the Sex Pistols, but he leaves the viewer/reader feeling as though neither ideal satisfies (or damns).

That Whitehead really likes—loves—pop culture may be somewhat hard to pick up from the video series, but it is clear from his office. Except for one small corner papered with diplomas, the office is a wall-to-wall shrine to late-twentieth-century entertainment. There is a John Wayne autograph next to an inflated, four-foot Godzilla. A Superman action figure stands guard on a table next to the alien from Alien. On Whitehead's desk, a Jurassic Park dinosaur carries the torso of some poor, dismembered action figure in its mouth.

Whitehead is convinced Jesus was not just a pop culture phenomenon of his day, but a pop culture participant. "We're supposed to enjoy the good things in life like Jesus did. He drank wine with people, had a good time, told jokes, and was a normal human being. There can't be an automatic litmus test to these things. You can't say a movie is automatically bad just because it has nudity in it or violence."

Whitehead—who insists that all Christians should at least watch each year's nominations for the best picture Oscar—gets visibly irritated when people criticize all movies as evil. Before he became a Christian, one of the first things Christians told him to cut out was his film viewing. For a man who was used to watching three or four movies a day when he was on vacation, it wasn't easy. But at the Light and Power House, where he and his fellow students would sit around and discuss the religious aspects of Woody Allen films, he became convinced Christians were doing themselves a disservice by disengaging from the culture.

If Whitehead has a crusade today, it's to involve Christians in popular culture. Like his efforts in other avenues, he does not want to see Christians cede the battle because they don't like the battleground. Movies, television, music, and art are the language of the people. If Christians cannot speak that language, he says, it doesn't matter what they say—they won't be heard.

"We're told to be salt in a world where people can't name the vice president, but they can name everyone on TV," he says. "And for salt to work, it has to be on something. It can't just sit there." But like his crusade 20 years ago to engage Christians in legal culture, it has not been an easy case to make. When he tried to use his Rutherford magazine to this end, with subjects like "The X-Files and the Return of Metaphysical Horror," conservative readers rebelled.

"Your sugar-coated coverage of the Beatles was one-sided," complained one reader. "If I wanted to patronize the secular media, I would have read Time."

"Everyone agrees that the origin of rock music is found in rebellion . . . against authority, against morality, and against God," wrote another. "To justify communicating the message of the Gospel with the carnal rock/rap sound is a lie."

Faced with two mutually exclusive facts —Whitehead wanted his readers to hear his message; his readers didn't—Whitehead relaunched the magazine as a separate publication supported by subscriptions, not donations to the organization. Donors now got the Rutherford Institute Litigation Report, purged of all pop culture. The magazine, rechristened Gadfly, was purged of all Rutherford Institute references.

"If you picked up Gadfly magazine without knowing who published it, you'd be perplexed," wrote a glowing review in the Washington Post. "If you picked up Gadfly knowing that it's published by the Rutherford Institute . . . you'd be even more perplexed. . . . It's a cultural magazine that fits no identifiable ideology. It's odd, eccentric, and eclectic."

Indeed. But though about half of the magazine's writers are not Christians, Whitehead would disagree that the magazine has "no identifiable ideology." "We're not afraid to address Christian topics, but it's within the context of the magazine. We did an issue called 'Does Fame Kill?' and included a sidebar on 'Did Fame Kill Jesus?' We don't sneak it in there. It's always relevant. I wrote a piece on Francis Bacon [an existential expressionist painter known for his gruesome paintings and sadomasochistic homosexuality], but if you read the article closely, it's about Christ and Bacon's view of Christ. But it's honest. There's no sneak."

Still, most conservative evangelicals are going to be uncomfortable spending a few hours with a magazine that's often dark and bloody. Whether Christians will eventually follow Whitehead down his road of pop cultural immersion remains to be seen. Actually his case for what Christians will gain by going down this road remains to be seen. So far, Gadfly has only 10,000 subscribers. Many Christian critics predict it is not going to make it.

But he has heard that before. Back when he told Christians they had to get involved in the courts. Back when he told Christians they had to get involved in politics. Back when he wrote, "Getting involved in politics will eventually mean Christians running for office. This will include attending and eventually taking control of party conventions where grass-roots decisions are made." Back a decade before Pat Robertson's Christian Coalition, or even before Jerry Falwell's Moral Majority.

Is John Wayne Whitehead our future?

C1

Ted Olsen is assistant editor of CHRISTIAN HISTORY magazine.

Walk With Jesus

CHERISH THAT YOUR FAITH IN HIM IS EVERLASTING.
REMEMBER... HE IS ALWAYS BY YOUR SIDE.

ACTUAL SIZE
1 1/2" x 3/4"

THE WALK WITH JESUS BRACELET® HAS BEEN EXQUISITELY DESIGNED AND FINELY HANDCRAFTED, BEAUTIFULLY LAYERED IN 24K GOLD.

WE ARE EXTREMELY PROUD OF OUR CREATION, AS YOU WILL BE.

ORDER TWO (2) AND GIVE A PERFECT GIFT OF LOVE.
CAN YOU THINK OF A MORE CHERISHED KEEPSAKE.

LIMITED EDITION

ORDER TODAY

VISA PLEASE CALL 24HR TOLL FREE

800-909-5704

$15.95 EA + $4.95 S&H
CA RES. ADD 7.25% SALES TAX

CHRISTMAS ORDERS: SPECIAL DELIVERY AVAILABLE

30 DAY MONEY BACK GUARANTEE (EX. S&H)

VISA OR MASTERCARD ONLY (SORRY NO C.O.D.)

PLEASE ALLOW 4-6 WEEKS FOR DELIVERY

Have It On Good Authority.

"The New Living Translation opens up Scripture so all people can more easily understand the life-changing truth that transforms the non-believer into a devoted follower of Christ."

- Bill Hybels, Pastor
Willow Creek Community Church

"The Living Bible has been used by God around the world for many years to introduce people to the Scriptures. ... Now I am pleased to recommend the New Living Translation for even greater readability and accuracy."

- Billy Graham

"The New Living Translation has been welcomed by Bible translators around the world as a translation that combines a high level of accuracy with strong dynamic impact."

- Katie Barnwell
International Translation
Coordinator, Wyndale Bible
Translators and Summer
Institute of Linguistics

"As I read the New Living Translation, I keep thinking about my congregation and how such a clear translation will bring a greater clarity to the word of God and result in a deeper walk with the Lord. I am very excited about this new translation."

- Doug Halsne, Pastor
Lakeland Evangelical
Free Church

EASY TO UNDERSTAND

RELEVANT FOR TODAY

Holy Bible

Our world is a better place today. Every passage and inspired word is preserved in the New Living Translation. And since it's also the easiest to understand, the New Living Translation is ideal not only for the pulpit but the pew. So whether it's a small group looking for a text they can trust, or a new believer asking for a Bible that's easy to understand, refer them to today's fastest growing translation. The New Living Translation. Wherever Bibles are sold,

Live It Now

www.newlivingtranslation.com

For a free informational pamphlet on the New Living Translation, call 1-800-323-5400 ext. 914

Onward Christian Soldier!

George Washington's prayers at Valley Forge, during the darkest days of the Revolutionary War, were answered and a great country was born. Is it time for another revolution...a revolution against the amoral and immoral elites dominating our public institutions? It's past time and the Conservative Book Club has been fighting since 1964 to preserve the ideals that Washington fought for so long ago. Join the fight today by choosing 3 books for just $1 each.

The Secret Life of Bill Clinton - From Ambrose Evans-Pritchard, the reporter the White House most fears - and with good reason - comes an assiduously documented expose of the crimes that have characterized the Clinton presidency as the most corrupt in history.

Item #4756 Retail $24.95

Slouching Towards Gomorrah - Robert Bork, one of the nation's most distinguished conservative scholars, assails the unprecedented decline of morality in America, and points a finger at the culprit-modern liberalism.

Item #4427 Retail $25.00

Disney: The Mouse Betrayed - When Walt Disney died in 1966, he left a company known as a bastion of family entertainment. Now, thirty years later, Disney has grown into a multi-national conglomerate selling pornography, violent song lyrics, and anti-Christian messages to your children.

Item #5010 Retail $24.95

The Millennium Bug - January 1, 2000: you have no electricity, your bank has no record of your account, and the police are unable to respond to calls for help. Learn about the causes and issues surrounding the biggest crisis in the information age and prepare yourself for the inevitable chaos.

Item #4881 Retail $25.00

The Death of Outrage - Best-selling author and former cabinet secretary William J. Bennett examines the lack of public outrage about Bill Clinton's sexual and criminal misconduct. He analyzes the Clinton defense and looks at how our acceptance of the lies is damaging our culture and our moral authority.

Item #5027 Retail $20.00

The Historical Jesus - Prof. Gary Habermas gives a rigorous defense of the accuracy of the Gospels, based solely on extrabiblical evidence. Here are the facts that support the biblical Jesus, from His birth through His resurrection and ascension.

Item #4561 Retail $13.99

Race and Culture - If a white man wrote this book, the liberals would lynch him. Find out why, after more than a decade of research, Thomas Sowell came to the conclusion that some cultures are better - yes BETTER - than others.

Item #4079 Retail $25.00

Bible History - This book follows the whole history of the Bible in a concise and readable manner that will teach you and your children.

Item #4799 Retail $19.95

Boy Clinton - Blockbuster expose by the publisher of The American Spectator, R. Emmett Tyrrell has unearthed the truth about the real Bill Clinton - including facts that have never been revealed before.

Item #4367 Retail $24.95

Burden of Truth - Charles Colson shows how to confront the deceptions of the world with God's Word on topics as diverse as medical ethics, education, crime, science, pop culture, family, art, and government.

Item #4796 Retail $19.99

Defeating Darwinism - Finally, a survival guide for Christians battered by the creation/evolution debate. Phillip Johnson, Darwin's most respected critic, helps you grasp the essentials of the dispute and gain confidence in upholding and defending the truths of God's Creation.

Item #4665 Retail $15.99

The Strange Death of Vincent Foster - With remarkable first-hand research, investigative journalist Christopher Ruddy details the disturbing inconsistencies surrounding Foster's alleged suicide. "A persuasive case that the American public has not been told the complete facts about the case."

-William S. Sessions, Former Director, FBI

Item #4711 Retail $25.00

The Parables of Christ - Since it was first published in 1915 this work has been instrumental in helping Catholics understand and interpret all of the parables of Jesus Christ.

Item #4705 Retail $35.95

Jesus: Who is He? - Based on years of extensive research, this hard-hitting book will convince even the most hardened skeptic that Jesus was who He claimed to be.

Item #20479 Retail $18.99

Losing Our Virtue - David Wells offers a bold new critique focused on the fractured moral vision of society at large and its reflection in today's evangelical church. He argues that now is the best time for the church to regain its moral weight and become a missionary of truth once more in a foundering world.

Item #4971 Retail $25.00

Mere Creation - Leading creationist scholars Phillip Johnson and Michael Behe attack evolutionary ideology on two fronts: scientific and philosophical. They bring you the latest evidence that debunks biological evolutionary theories. Win the next argument with a professor, teacher, or liberal journalist - hands down.

Item #5030 Retail $24.95

The Book of Virtues - In a time where smut, violence, and immorality pervade the media, this inspiring collection of fables, poetry, stories, and other readings is a lesson in morality, and a must-read for our nations families! This #1 bestseller by Ronald Reagan's Secretary of Education will provide a solid foundation of morality for you and your family.

Item #3884 Retail $30.00

The Great Betrayal - Poised to announce his candidacy for the Republican presidential nomination in 2000, Pat Buchanan has refined his message on trade and economic nationalism. Agree with him or not, this is a must read for the grass roots conservative.

Item #4860 Retail $22.95

An Education for Our Time - Josiah Bunting attacks the modern higher education system by constructing a fictional story about the ideal university. Bunting lays out a curriculum dedicated to instilling young Americans with virtue and knowledge.

Item #5028 Retail $24.95

The Coming Conflict With China - Bernstein and Munro present overwhelming documentary evidence that communist China has targeted the U.S. as its chief global adversary and is aggressively pursuing a well-mapped plan for achieving dominance. Chilling reading in the light of recent history.

Item #4573 Retail $23.00

Choosing the Right College - This comprehensive guide to America's top 100 schools "sheds the light of day on what college presidents and admission offices choose to conceal"

- Walter Williams, George Mason University

Item #5040 Retail $25.00

Unlimited Access - Former FBI Special Agent Gary Aldrich takes you inside a counter-culture White House and shows how Clinton and his cronies dismantled security protocols to allow drug users, drug dealers, gun runners and foreign campaign donors full access. This updated, quality paper-back edition includes three new chapters.

Item #5048 Retail $15.95

Ronald Reagan: How an Ordinary Man Became an Extraordinary Leader - Dinesh D'Souza presents a vivid portrait of the man himself, revealing the moral sources of his vision and leadership. "Move over, President Clinton, and make room for a real leader!"

-Rush Limbaugh

Item #4751 Retail $25.00

The New Age Movement and the Biblical Worldview - What makes the New Age movement so dangerous to your family? Dr. John Newport uncovers every area of this many-sided movement and explains the need for Christians to understand the New Age threat and how it differs from Christianity.

Item #4915 Retail $35.00

Spirit Wars - Peter Jones, professor at Westminster Seminary ties the apparently disparate movements of feminism, homosexuality, multiculturalism, civil rights, abortion, euthanasia, mystical spirituality, and moral relativism. His basic thesis: Judeo-Christian America had become the incubator of revived paganism.

Item #4740 Retail $18.95

The Prayer at Valley Forge by Arnold Friberg.

Paul Ineson
A HISTORY
of the
AMERICAN PEOPLE

A History of the American People - In a single sweeping volume (1,136 pages); the American story in full -- as it's never been told before. Paul Ineson's conservative outlook erases a half-century of liberal thrumaking on everything from America's founding principles to the misadventures of Ronald Reagan.

Item #4840 Retail $35.00

High Crimes and Misdemeanors - Ann Coulter, a legal affairs correspondent for Human Events, outlines the 6 categories of impeachable conduct and demonstrates how Bill Clinton has violated all of them since 1993. This hard-hitting work takes the reader through the web of lies that the Clinton administration rests on.

Item #4923 Retail $24.95

Year of the Rat - Mochtar Riady, John Huang and Charlie Trie: these are the men who gathered illegal foreign campaign contributions and funneled them into the Clinton White House. Now, you can read the details of this chilling tale and learn how Bill Clinton has been selling American security for Asian money since 1992!

Item #5070 Retail $24.95

Take 3
for just $1 each

AND GET A 4TH
FOR ONLY
$4.95

Benefits of Membership and How the Book Club Works

TANT SAVINGS! Join today and get any 3 of the books pictured in this ad for just $3 plus shipping and handling. Then take up to two years to buy four more books at regular low Club prices (20-50% below retail) or three books over two years, if you've selected the New Member Bonus. After you have paid your books, your Membership can be ended by you or the Club. Plus you also get opportunities to buy from our list of Superbargain books that the Club regularly offers. These books are offered at 70-90% discounts!! (Sorry, superbargain books don't count toward your book commitment.)

FREE BULLETIN! Up to 15 times a year you will receive the Club Bulletin packed with the kind of books you will want to read and own. Each bulletin will describe a Featured Selection chosen just for our Members. Also included are a number of alternate selections about politics, religion, history, home schooling, investing and other areas of interest to conservatives.

READ AT HOME CONVENIENCE! When you receive your Bulletin you will have the chance to examine the many books of interest and read reviews for them. If you want to receive the Featured Selection, do nothing and it will be sent to you. If you don't want the Featured Selection or you would like an alternate selection, simply indicate your wishes on the handy card enclosed with your Bulletin and return it before the deadline date. CBC is an easy way to build your conservative library from the comfort of your own home.

100% SATISFACTION GUARANTEED! If you are not completely satisfied with any book, return it and receive a complete credit. Plus you will always have at least ten days to make your decision to receive the Featured Selection. If you ever have less than ten days, you simply return the book at Club expense for a full credit. One Membership per household please.

Send No Money Now!

☒ YES! Please enroll me as a Preferred Member of the Conservative Book Club under the terms outlined in this ad. Send me the three books I've indicated and bill me just $3, plus shipping and handling. I then need to buy only four additional books at regularly discounted club prices over the next two years. Please write book numbers here:

C0579-A-Y

☐ YES! I want to take advantage of the New Member Bonus! Please send me a 4th selection as I've indicated below. I understand I will be billed an additional $4.95, plus shipping and handling. I then need to buy only three additional books at regular club prices over the next two years. Please write book number here:

C0579-A-X

☐ Please, send me information on obtaining a print of The Prayer at Valley Forge by Arnold Friberg. #8007

Name

Address

City

State

Zip

Signature

* Prices slightly higher in Canada * Membership subject to approval by the Conservative Book Club

Fill out this coupon and mail to:

CONSERVATIVE BOOK CLUB

PO Box 97196, Washington, D.C. 20090-7196

REFLECTIONS/ART GALLERY

Classic and contemporary excerpts

© Penguin 1986

Walking Bewildered in the Light

*The world grows terrible and white,
And blinding white the breaking day;
We walk bewildered in the light,
For something is too large for sight,
And something much too plain to say.*

*The Child that was ere worlds begun
(. . . We need but walk a little way,
We need but see a latch undone . . .)
The Child that played with moon and sun
Is playing with a little hay.*

—G. K. CHESTERTON, FROM "THE WISE MEN" IN A MOTLEY WISDOM (NIGEL FORDE)

God's Great News

At Christmas time God cups his hands over his mouth, as it were, and shouts at the top of his voice, so that with all the din going on around them, human beings might hear what he has to say: "Listen! I've got great news that will bring you glorious joy!"

—STUART AND JILL BRISCOE IN MEET HIM AT THE MANGER

Walking with the Shepherds

Send, O God, into the darkness of this troubled world, the light of your Son: let the star of your hope touch the minds of all people with the bright beams of mercy and truth; and so direct our steps that we may always walk in the way revealed to us, as the shepherds of Bethlehem walked with joy to the manger where he dwelt who now and ever reigns in our hearts, Jesus Christ our Lord.

—JOHN WALLACE SUTER IN THE COMMUNION OF SAINTS: PRAYERS OF THE FAMOUS (ED. HORTON DAVIES)

The Gift Unspeakable

*Again they play, the children with their toys,
Gay parties draw the older girls and boys;
Regathered families hail the festive day,
And jovial revellers their gifts display:
How strange!—how almost inconceivable,
So few receive Heaven's "Gift Unspeakable!"*

*Yet none the less, as carol strains resound,
Adoring hearts will everywhere be found;
The throne-room of the soul they will prepare,
To give the Saviour-King new welcome there:
And He will see, and say, with gentle smile,
"The nails and thorny-crown were all worthwhile."*

—J. SIDLOW BAXTER FROM "ANOTHER CHRISTMAS" IN SOURCEBOOK OF POETRY (COMP. AL BRYANT)

ART CREDITS: (PREVIOUS PAGE) ERICH LESSING/ART RESOURCE. THE SHEPHERDS FOLLOW THE STAR TO BETHLEHEM, BY OCTAVE PENGUILLY-L'HARIDON. (THIS PAGE, CLOCKWISE, STARTING WITH TOP LEFT) SUPERSTOCK / ANGEL ANNOUNCING THE BIRTH OF CHRIST TO SHEPHERDS BY ROBERT LEINWEBER; DETAIL FROM CHRISTMAS DAY BY WARD SMITH; SUPERSTOCK / DETAIL FROM THE NATIVITY BY JULIUS GARI MELCHERS; I HAVE COME BY COREY WILKENSEN.

When I Give Birth to Christ

We are all meant to be mothers of God. What good is it to me if this eternal birth of the divine Son takes place unceasingly but does not take place within myself? And, what good is it to me if Mary is full of grace if I am not also full of grace? What good is it to me for the Creator to give birth to his Son if I do not also give birth to him in my time and my culture? This, then, is the fullness of time: When the Son of God is begotten in us.

—MEISTER ECKHART, QUOTED IN GOSPEL MEDICINE (BARBARA BROWN TAYLOR)

Greet the New Day

And so at this Christmas time I greet you. Not quite as the world sends greetings, but with the prayer that now and forever the day breaks and the shadows flee away.

—FRA GIOVANNI, QUOTED IN THINK ON THESE THINGS

Birthday Presents

Who started the rumour that one needs a lot of money to remember, to rejoice, to celebrate the birthday of the one who chose to become poor for us?

—A WORKER AMONG THE POOR IN MEXICO IN A PROCESSION OF PRAYERS
(COMP. JOHN CARDEN)

O Holy Night

*This [Christmas] night bestowed peace on the whole world;
so, let no one threaten;*

this is the night of the Most Gentle One—let no one be cruel;

this is the night of the Most Humble One—let no one be proud.

*Now is the day of joy—
let us not revenge;*

now is the day of good will—let us not be mean-spirited.

In this day of peace let us not be conquered by anger . . .

*Today the Bountiful impoverished Himself for our sake;
so, rich one, invite the poor to your table.*

*Today we received a gift, for which we did not ask;
so let us give alms to those who implore us
and beg.*

*This present day cast open the heavenly door to our prayers:
let us open our door to those who ask our forgiveness.*

Now the Divine Being took upon Himself the seal of humanity, in order for humanity to be adorned by the seal of Divinity.

—SAINT ISAAC
OF SYRIA; 7TH C.
"CHRISTMAS SERMON"

AFTER THE REVOLUTION

Kordell Richardson's mother, a devout Baptist, taught her children never to accept a handout. But when Richardson separated from her husband more than 20 years ago she faced a dilemma. She suffered from asthma, had two young girls at home, and a third was on the way.

A neighbor encouraged Richardson, of Battle Creek, Michigan, to apply for welfare assistance, and she began receiving a monthly stipend through Aid for Families with Dependent Children (AFDC).

"They helped me all right—they helped me get in such a big mess," Richardson recalls.

"There was nothing else I could do at that time," she says. "I was pregnant, I couldn't work."

From the start, Richardson says she strived to become self-sufficient. She found a babysitter for her girls and took piecemeal jobs. "Every time I would make a little money, thinking I could safely get off welfare, I got dragged back into it." Richardson tried numerous government-conceived strategies to wean her family from public aid. "It was a dead-end situation," she says. "They always had some program, but it didn't last long enough for you to really benefit, or it closed down."

In 1995, Richardson moved to Lansing, Michigan, where she qualified to rent an apartment at a government-subsidized rate of $8 a month. Her Section 8 caseworker, Mary Ann Harkema, directed the local affiliate of Love in the Name of Christ (Love INC), a community clearinghouse of area churches that links laypeople with neighbors in need.

Harkema encouraged Richardson to obtain work experience through volunteer opportunities. Eventually Richardson landed a paying job, but she told Harkema, "I'll go crazy 'cause I'm going to have some money now, and I'm going to spend, spend, spend." Harkema introduced Richardson to Quality Living, a Love INC 36-week, biblically based life skills class conducted by South Church of the Nazarene in Lansing. She went from welfare to being a homeowner in two years. Richardson, baptized in October, is now a budget counselor in the program at South Church.

"If they can get a handle on a budget, they can get in control of something in their lives," Harkema says. The Lansing Love INC, one of about 100 affiliates nationwide, helps support the Quality Living program in a dozen area churches. In all, 125 families in Lansing have gone through the program, which places churches in a mentoring relationship with families transitioning from welfare to work. Only 10 percent have dropped out.

"True compassion is living with someone, loving, and being close to someone during their ups and downs over a long period of time," Harkema says.

Richardson knows that South Church's help enabled her to break free from welfare. "They didn't just say, OK, this is how you do it," she says. "They were my friends."

WILL CHURCHES FILL THE BREACH?

Richardson's metamorphosis has come in the midst of an upheaval in the federal welfare system. Two years ago, Congress passed legislation that ended welfare as America has known it since the New Deal (CT, April 7, 1997, p. 46).

Welfare-reform legislation has been a tremendous success if measured solely by reduction in the number of welfare cases. But when it comes to reducing the number of people trying to escape a lifestyle of poverty, reform has a ways to go. And willing churches have a historic opportunity to help poor people across the board, meeting their spiritual needs as well as their need to earn a living.

The radical overhaul of the system has been based partly on the assumption that

ART MOORE

Conservatives won the welfare debate. Are churches stepping up to the challenge?

faith-based assistance to the poor could not only provide a buffer, but help transform lives far more effectively than the government ever could.

"Society is saying in a way it hasn't for decades that we need help from people of faith," says Evangelicals for Social Action (ESA) president Ron Sider.

The Personal Responsibility and Work Opportunity Act of 1996 replaced AFDC—by then an entitlement to one out of seven American families—with block grants to the states called Temporary Assistance to Needy Families. States are given the freedom and responsibility to design their own programs within certain limited federal guidelines, one being that adults receiving benefits must get a job within two years of receiving aid.

Across the country, caseloads are down, and churches and ministries have taken the lead in many areas in moving people from welfare to work (CT, Sept. 7, 1998, p. 21). But many weaned from welfare rolls still are without jobs.

In Oregon, caseloads have fallen from 42,700 four years ago to 19,300. Some of that decline may be due to a robust economy, analysts say, but studies indicate that welfare reform is likely the major factor.

One to one: Robert Jones, a Presbyterian pastor in South Carolina, counsels a young mother and her daughter.

Many critics of welfare reform note the decline in welfare recipients, but claim that there has also been a dramatic increase in homelessness. The U.S. Conference of Mayors a year ago indicated that homelessness had risen 12 percent, in part because of welfare reform.

"A lot of those families that are leaving welfare are not necessarily leaving because they found a job," says Wendell Primus, director of income security for the federal government's Center on Budget and Policy Priorities. Surveys indicate that only 30 to 60 percent of the families who have left welfare are actually earning money, Primus says.

"The feds have never required the states to do much more than say, By how many has your caseload been reduced?" says Anita Beaty, director of the Atlanta Task Force on Homelessness. "That's the goal—reduce the caseload, reduce the caseload." A true gauge of welfare reform is, rather, how many people are attaining a living wage, Beaty says.

FINDING WORK IS KEY: Finding a job, any job, is the first step toward self-sufficiency, says Lisa Van Riper, executive director of Putting Families First (PFF), a privately financed foundation that places South Carolina welfare families in mentoring relationships with churches and other community groups.

Established in 1996 when Gov. David Beasley authorized the use of $200,000 of his private inaugural funds, PFF has contributed to a 40 percent reduction in South Carolina's welfare role. Around 28,000 welfare families have been required to move toward employment within two years. Fewer than 400 have been terminated for lack of a job, says Van Riper.

"We have 27,600 people in South Carolina who have gotten jobs," Van Riper says. "Our ultimate goal is restoration of a living wage, but it starts with the restoration of a personal work ethic and responsibility—if you have those two, you will get to a living wage." Through PFF's direction, churches form a partnership team to mentor a family for one year, helping meet material, emotional, and spiritual needs, and encouraging them through a two-year transition to build a résumé and enhance job skills.

Van Riper says PFF finds that for people to reach a point where they can trade in their benefits for a job, it takes at least $9 an hour, which is more than many entry-level jobs pay. "If they will pay in their monthly stipend check, we counter with health care, transportation, and food stamps, and they can still stay in Section 8 housing," she says. "We don't just pull the rug out and say, Hey, you've got an entry-level wage; bye."

CHARITABLE CHOICE DEBATE: The government's new welfare-to-work emphasis largely complements the philosophy of the Denver Rescue Mission. The 106-year-old mission has a six-month to two-year spiritually based program for women, New Life Rehabilitation, that includes counseling, training in basic life skills, and academic and vocational education.

The program enabled Lynn Harrington, who had been on welfare for five years, to obtain a high-school equivalency degree and qualify to become a medical assistant.

"Without welfare reform I might still be sitting on my butt and not doing anything with my life," Harrington says.

Of special interest to faith-based organizations is the "charitable choice" provision of the federal welfare reform law (CT, Dec. 11, 1995, p. 65), authored by U.S. Sen. John Ashcroft (R-Mo.). It encourages states to contract with faith-based organizations to provide federally financed welfare services while protecting their religious character.

Whether because of lack of knowledge, confusion, or apprehensions about the law, few religious organizations have taken advantage of it, says Joe Loconte, a welfare reform expert at the Heritage Foundation in Washington, D.C. Many are concerned that charitable choice will lead to significant dependence of the church upon the state.

"The great strength of Ashcroft's legislation is that it codifies this respect for the religious convictions of faith-based agencies and it recognizes in law that the religious dimension to life—what these groups bring—is important and significant," Loconte says. "But I think that as groups begin to get significantly involved in government money, then they're going to run into trouble." Opponents of charitable choice, such as Washington, D.C.-based Americans United for Separation of Church and State, say that it violates the Establishment Clause. But charitable choice is embraced by a broad stream of evangelicals, from the Family Research Council (FRC) to ESA.

Charitable choice's primary strength, says ESA's Sider, is that it allows faith-based organizations to hire people according to its own standards and beliefs—a major sticking point for Americans United, which contends that this amounts to federally financed employment discrimination.

"One of the main things that charitable choice has done is it has helped to build relationships between the [government] human services community and the faith community, even if the faith community is choosing not to formally partner," says FRC director of community outreach Deanna Carlson.

Sider believes that faith-based organizations should not fear a relationship with the government. "It's neurotic to think that we're going to be swept in by the secular forces if we go the route of charitable choice," Sider says.

FAITH PLAYS A ROLE: A close church-state relationship has been crucial to the success of Michigan's welfare reform, which began five years ago under Gov. John Engler. In 1996, Good Samaritan Ministries (GSM) in Holland, Michigan, contracted with a state program aimed at no unemployment, Project Zero.

Through the help of GSM and other faith-based groups, Ottawa County last year became the first in the nation to move every able-bodied welfare recipient into a job.

While GSM receives government funding, the churches it mobilizes, trains, and supports do not. GSM's network of more than 90 churches represents a broad array of Christian beliefs, from Pentecostal to Roman Catholic.

GSM director Janet DeYoung says, "We try to help churches be sensitive to where families are in their spiritual journey, to listen to the questions that they are asking."

Betty Williams, director of the Women's Christian Life program at the Los Angeles Union Rescue Mission, says her clients must be willing to receive Bible instruction and attend church, because it is essential to the program.

"If we received government funding we would not be able to do that," Williams says. "Those women who make serious changes reinforce what the Bible says—change happens on the inside." The charitable choice provision, in fact, states explicitly that funds going directly to religious organizations cannot be used for sectarian worship, instruction, or proselytizing. Efforts are under way in Congress to give taxpayers credits or special deductions for contributing directly to a group of their choice that is helping fight poverty.

TAKING THE FIRST STEP: "For a church to get involved helping people make the transition off of welfare, you don't need a government contract," says Kevin Hunter, director of Vision Northwest, a domestic ministry of World Vision in Federal Way, Washington. "The need is not for the technical services—the state does a pretty good job providing those. What they need is a relationship, somebody to help walk them through the rocky road, up and over the barriers and down through the valleys of the setbacks and the emotional damage."

Last year, a Denver homeless shelter evicted Janice Hannon and her two sons after they had used their maximum 30 days. They moved to a $190-a-week hotel frequented by prostitutes and drug addicts. Though she worked both a day and a night job seven days a week, Janice could not come up with enough cash to pay for a deposit and advance rent on an apartment.

On weekends she left then 12-year-old Ryan and 5-year-old Scotty alone, instructing them to push a chair up against the door for added security.

Hannon unsuccessfully sought help from several agencies in an effort to obtain enough money for an apartment. Finally, Hannon learned about Pros with a Purpose, which recruits church groups to adopt homeless, working families with children under 16. The organization, which this year came under the direction of the Denver Rescue Mission, paid the first month's rent and security deposit for an apartment.

"The manager knew we were coming from a motel and didn't do a credit check—he knew we wouldn't pass," Hannon says. Members of the church team came over each month to help with her budget. "I would still be homeless if not for them."

Del Maxfield, president of the Denver Rescue Mission, warns that many of the people to whom his group ministers face enormous and complex problems that cannot be addressed simply through informal relationships and short-term programs. Both church and government officials sometimes have difficulty understanding that, he says.

A belief that persists in ministry to the poor is that "if you could sweep all the street guys in off the street into a chapel and give them a good message and have them all come forward to the altar, it would mean the end of homelessness," Maxfield says. "That is the single biggest spiritual myth that ever happened in our work."

"These folks walk back out the doors and face some of the most difficult, practical, social, political, and every other kind of problem on the face of the earth," Maxfield says. "And if we say, Here you have Christ, and you can walk out the door and your prob- lems are solved; what we've done is just given them a piece of paper armor."

In 1987, the Denver Rescue Mission designed the first five-phase, two-year program in the nation. "It was almost unheard of that you would keep anybody beyond a maximum of 120 days," Maxfield says.

NATIONAL SUMMIT IN FEBRUARY:

How will churches respond to a call for help by government that essentially amounts to reclaiming its historic role in

Increasingly, socially conservative churches are dialoguing with their more liberal colleagues on ministry to the poor and finding a basis for agreement and cooperation.

"The heart is there to help their neighbor," the FRC's Carlson says of conservative evangelical churches. "On the practical side, they need some assistance in creating an infrastructure where they can actually help the poor, whereas the liberal churches seem to have that infrastructure, but maybe the heart isn't there as much as it used to be."

In February, church leaders will have a fresh opportunity to examine ways to debate additional welfare reform measures. Call to Renewal, the Washington, D.C.-based organization directed by Sojourners head Jim Wallis, will convene the social ministry? "We're so trapped in our materialism and our self-centered narcissism that not many of us will do it," Sider says.

On the job: Mary Ann Harkema (left) helped Beth Bryant through Quality Living classes. Bryant (below) is now a budget counselor in the same program.

Maxfield agrees. "We can't get churches to respond," he says, despite the mission's $9 million budget and outreach to thousands of people.

He finds much more success in recruiting individual Christians to ministries such as Pros with a Purpose, which has pulled together 100 groups from churches since the beginning of the year.

"The vast majority of churches are doing very, very little and just beginning to say, Yeah, we've got to do something," Sider says. "And they don't know how to do it; so one of the most important things right now is work with local congregations."

ESA is launching Network 935, a program to provide tools for local churches that want to combine evangelism with social concern.

National Summit on the Churches and Welfare Reform February 1-3. Participants will include the National Council of Churches, the National Association of Evangelicals, the U.S. Catholic Conference, the FRC, and World Vision.

Sider says, "The conservatives are sort of getting what they wanted on welfare reform and are now realizing that it's more in the court of churches and volunteer organizations: We asked for it; we had better put up or shut up."

0 1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 9

DETECTIVE

DETECTIVE

DETECTIVE

BIOTECH BABIES

How far should Christian couples go in the quest for a child of their own?

It is probably natural to want a child of one's own. Is it also good? Perhaps if it is truly natural, in accord with our created nature, it must also be good. But the seemingly innocent desire to have "a child of one's own," combined with the high-tech possibilities of modern medicine and the ever-present pursuit of commercial gain, has fashioned a world in which we regularly create moral conundrums that are beyond our ability not only to solve but even to name. The things we are willing to do tell a story—a story about the point of having children.

Consider the following cases, all roughly adapted from "real life," chosen almost at random:

- A woman unable to have a child "of her own" had her ovum fertilized with her husband's sperm in the laboratory. The resulting embryo was then implanted in the womb of the woman's mother, who, having carried the pregnancy to term, gave birth to her own "grandchild."
- A husband and wife who thought they wanted a child "of their own" contracted for the conception of a child who would be conceived from sperm and ovum that came from anonymous donors and who would then be gestated in the womb of a hired surrogate. Shortly before the child was born, the husband and wife who had wanted this child divorced. A judge felt compelled to rule that the baby girl actually had no legal parents at all.

- A woman undergoing infertility treatment in order to have a child "of her own" conceived triplets. For medical reasons she was advised that it would be safest if she were to undergo "fetal reduction"—that is, reduce by abortion the number of fetuses she was carrying to one. She did, but weeks later, having undergone amniocentesis, she learned that the one remaining fetus had a genetic anomaly. She therefore aborted that fetus as well.

- An infertile married couple desiring a child "of their own" underwent in vitro fertilization (IVF) and conceived a child. Four-and-a-half months into the pregnancy they learned from amniocentesis that the child they had wanted so badly and worked so hard to make had Down's syndrome. Having learned that, they decided to abort.

- An infertile married couple sought in vitro fertilization in hopes of producing a child "of their own." Before undergoing the procedure, the couple signed an agreement saying that the resulting embryos could not be used without the consent of both parties and that, should they divorce, ownership of the embryos would be decided either in a property settlement or through a court decision. Nine attempts to implant embryos fertilized in the laboratory failed to result in a pregnancy that could be carried to term. Four embryos were implanted in a surrogate, the woman's older sister, but that procedure also failed. Shortly thereafter the couple divorced and the woman sought a court order giving her sole custody of the embryos so that she could try again to have a child "of her own." Given the prior agreement the couple had made, the court ruled that the woman could not do this without the consent of her former husband.

CHRISTIANITY BUT WE MUST CHILDREN

- A young woman about to undergo chemotherapy for leukemia but hoping nevertheless some day to have a child "of her own" had her ova harvested and fertilized with donor sperm before treatment—and the resulting embryos frozen. After she died of leukemia at age 28, her parents sought a surrogate who would agree to gestate the embryos. In this search they used the Internet and an appearance on the Oprah Winfrey show, intending that their son and daughter-in-law would raise the child if the pregnancy could be successfully carried to term.

- A 63-year-old woman, wanting a child "of her own" had implanted into her hormonally primed uterus an embryo made in the laboratory from her husband's sperm and an ovum from a younger donor. She then completed the pregnancy and gave birth to a child.

Such cases could be multiplied almost without end, and we may sometimes find it hard to remember or believe that the first "test tube baby" was born only 20 years ago, in 1978. Two decades later we live in a world in which a woman can give birth to her own "grandchild"; in which a child can have as many as five "parents" (the donors of sperm and ovum, the surrogate who carries the child during pregnancy, and the two "rearing parents"); in which people can "have children" posthumously; in which parents can go to great trouble and expense to conceive a child whom they then abort if prenatal diagnosis shows that the child is "defective" in some way; in which quite soon it may be possible to give birth to identical twins born years apart; and in which it may soon be possible for a woman without ovaries to receive an ovary transplant from an aborted fetus, making that fetus the biological mother of her child. And none of this comes cheaply. A recent report of the New York State Task Force on Life and the Law notes that "[c]onservative estimates place the cost of a successful delivery via IVF at more than $40,000."

Taken together these cases display the story we have begun to tell each other about the meaning of children. The story line is, roughly, as follows: Because having children is something many people want for their lives to be full and complete, and because it is such a fundamental aspect of human life, we ought to use our skills to help them achieve that desired fulfillment. Indeed, having children is an entitlement to which there are few limits. Of course, we ought not exercise this right in a way that directly harms children, but in many cases, after all, the children would not even exist were it not for the use of new reproductive technologies. If the suffering that infertility brings can be relieved, and if children are not harmed, then high-tech reproductive medicine is a good thing. This is the story that, more and more, we tell ourselves in this society.

Is there a different image of the child, an image that tells a different story about what it means to have children? Christians should hope so, and they should search for it. The poet Galway Kinnell, in a wonderful poem titled "After Making Love We Hear Footsteps," provides such an image: The child is, he writes, a "blessing love gives again into our arms." What makes this a better image than that emerging from the examples with which I began? What story of the meaning of a child underlies this image? One way to think about such questions is to reflect upon the desire to have "a child of one's own." This desire, which is simultaneously quite natural and problematic, needs examination.

THE STORY CHRISTIANS TELL

Christians have a story to tell, a story we regularly teach to our children—of an infertile woman who deeply desired a child of her own, how her wish was granted, and what she then did. It is the story of Hannah, her husband Elkanah, and their son Samuel (1 Sam. 1–2). Why did Hannah want a child of her own? In part, it seems, it was because she suffered the scorn of Peninnah, Elkanah's other wife, who had children. But that only presses the question a step further. Why should this be an occasion for scorn? What is so important about having a child? Why do people care so deeply?

Sometimes today, when we ask such questions, answers of the following sort come back: "I desire the experience of pregnancy and childbirth." "I want the experience of child rearing." "Having a child is an important part of defining who I am." No doubt there is some truth about us buried in such answers. There are deep psychological, and even biological, imperatives at work in the impulse to give birth. But such answers, which make of the child a means of meeting our needs, cannot be satisfactory. To think that way is already to begin to think of children as products made to satisfy some of our desires. And, of course, if and when the product turns out not really to satisfy us, we may be hard pressed to muster the kind of unconditional love children require if they are to flourish. That we do, nevertheless, often learn to love our children unconditionally suggests that the experience of child rearing teaches us about something more important than our own identity.

There are, though, deeper and better reasons for having children. We would make a little moral progress were we to say, "I want a child because I want a link to future generations." Surely that was part of Hannah's desire. In her world the link between the generations may have had greater economic importance than it now does, but even in our world it is of considerable human significance. We are not angels or free spirits who can choose to be whatever we wish; rather, we are embodied creatures, located in a particular time and place. In part, at least, it is lines of kinship and descent that identify us, even though we never choose our particular location. To learn to affirm and give thanks for our place in the world is part of growing up—and, more important, part of learning how to receive the mysterious gift of life. It is, therefore, quite natural that we should want to give life even as we have received it. That takes us some considerable way beyond the narcissism of wanting a child simply as a means to fulfilling ourselves.

UNDERSTAND THE DEEP DESIRE TO HAVE CHILDREN. ALSO CONSTANTLY REMIND OURSELVES THAT THEY ARE NOT OUR POSSESSION; THEY ARE GIFTS OF GOD

But it does not take us quite far enough, for it continues to think simply of a child of my own, still part of the project by which I make my way in the world. We get much closer to a satisfactory understanding if we think of a child of our own. Elkanah is already a father, but he and Hannah together—as one flesh—are not parents. Even in so ancient a story as this one, there are hints that this too is part of the reason for wanting a child. We are specifically told that Elkanah loved Hannah. He himself tells her that she is more to him than ten sons. Their love-giving has not yet been life-giving, however. It is natural that they should want a child, for that child would be the sign that the love by which they give themselves to each other is creative and fruitful.

Indeed, this last step—in which they seek a child not of his own or her own but of their own—begins to take them still further. It presses almost toward elimination of that little word own. In the passion of sexual love a man and woman step out of themselves, so to speak, and give themselves to each other. That is why we speak of sexual ecstasy—a word that means precisely standing outside oneself. No matter how much they may desire a child as the fruit of their love, in the act of love itself they must set aside all such projects and desires. They are not any longer making a baby of their own. They are giving themselves in love. And the child, if a child is conceived, is not then the product of their willed creation. The child is a gift and a mystery, springing from their embrace—a blessing love gives into their arms. They could and should, if they think the matter through, quite rightly say that they had received this child as a gift of God, as the biblical writer says of Hannah: "The LORD remembered her."

Samuel is neither Elkanah's "own," nor Hannah's "own," nor even "their own." He is "God's own"—asked of the Lord and given by the Lord. He is not, therefore, simply Hannah's or Elkanah's to hold onto; rather, he must be offered back to God, as Hannah does. Lent to the Lord, for as long as he lives.

Christians, then, do not underestimate the sheer human significance of biological ties. We understand the deep desire to have children. But we must also constantly remind ourselves that children are not our possession; they are gifts of God. They exist not simply to fulfill us but as the sign that, by God's continued blessing, self-giving love is creative and fruitful. And what if the Lord does not "remember" us as he remembered Hannah? That is reason for sadness, but it is not reason to take up the "project" of making a child. The couple who cannot have children may adopt children who need a home and parents, or they may find other ways in which their union can, as a union, turn outward and be fruitful.

LIVING OUR STORY

If this is how Christians understand the meaning of the presence of children, how shall we evaluate the vast array of new reproductive technologies—not, for the moment, as a matter of public policy, but simply as possibilities within our own lives?

The first thing to note is that many of the new techniques involve parties other than husband and wife in the reproductive process. (This is usually the case because the couple is infertile. There are also circumstances, however, in which fertile couples might turn to assisted reproduction techniques—for example, if one of the spouses carries a serious recessive genetic disorder. The moral issues remain essentially the same, however.) Artificial insemination and in vitro fertilization very often involve sperm and egg from anonymous donors, and there is an irony here that we should not ignore. If what infertile couples want is a child "of their own" in the genetic sense, techniques using donated gametes will not provide it. They are, in a sense, deceiving themselves. In the name of having a child of their own, they fail, in fact, to honor the importance of biological connection, of kinship and descent.

Imagine a case in which a married couple seeks donor insemination because of the husband's infertility. Someone might say, of course, that the child whom they produce is at least genetically related to the mother—it is her own, even if not also his own in the same sense. And for Christians that is exactly the cause for worry. The child is to be theirs, not hers or his. The deliberate and willed asymmetry of relation—so unlike the mutual asymmetry that exists in adoption—is precisely the problem. This child is no longer the fruit of their one-flesh union. Its genetic connection to the mother or the opportunity it provides for her to experience pregnancy and childbirth are her individual projects. Even if her husband also desires that connection and wants her to have the experience, he shares this project only in thought, not in the body. The child cannot be the fruit of an embrace in which husband and wife step outside themselves, their aims and projects, and receive a child as a gift, a sign that the Lord has remembered them.

If we imagine the opposite sort of case—in which the ovum rather than the sperm is donated, or, even more, in which the child is gestated by a surrogate—the same concerns will be in play. In addition, however, something disturbing happens to the relation of mother and child. Fatherhood, paternity, has always been a somewhat detached and "intellectualized" relation during pregnancy. Paternity is not obvious. It can be disputed. Fathers must think themselves into relation with the child in the womb. Not so with maternity. A pregnant woman need not think herself into relation with the child—she experiences that bond constantly. But once more than one "mother"—genetic and gestational—has become part of the process, maternity also becomes a disputable fact, and we have the court cases all around us to prove it.

Moreover, Christian spouses who set foot on what was once a back road but has now become an interstate highway of assisted reproduction should know how difficult it may be to find an exit ramp once they have begun this journey. They are not really seeking to correct a medical problem but to bypass it. To bypass it in order to satisfy a deep and very important desire—to have a child. But if it is the couple's desire that is being treated, we need to remember that they may not simply desire a child. They probably also desire, for example, a healthy child. And new reproductive technologies more and more commonly involve genetic diagnosis of the newly formed embryo before it is implanted in the uterus. The pressure to discard embryos who do not meet desired specifications—and to try again—may be almost impossible to resist. Spouses who undertake this journey are likely to have invested many dollars and years—not to say tears—along the way. It is only human to want the best possible result. Understandable as that is, however, it is no longer quite the same kind of unconditional love for a child who is not our product but God's gift.

I can think of one possible exception to the claim that Christians ought not participate in new reproductive technologies that involve sperm or ovum from third parties. Rather than using either sperm donation alone or egg donation alone, a couple might "adopt," gestate, and rear a donated embryo. In such a case, unlike sperm or egg donation, the child will not be genetically linked to either parent. Although this very fact may cause concern to some who think of reproductive medicine as providing new ways to get a child "of one's own," from the Christian perspective it is preferable. We might think of it as adoption that occurs before rather than after the child's birth. The relation of husband and wife to the child is symmetrical, and they do not deceive themselves into supposing that this is in any genetic sense a child of their own.

Unfortunately—at least in our society at the present time—embryo donation is not likely really to be analogous to adoption. There are already, in fact, a few clinics that sell embryos to infertile couples who want a child. Sometimes the embryos are custom made—allowing prospective parents to choose a combination of sperm and egg donors that best satisfies them. Other times the embryos are extras that were made for an infertile couple who achieved a pregnancy without using them. Christians could, of course, understand themselves to be rescuing such children—who as spare embryos can only be implanted in a womb, used for research, frozen and stored indefinitely, or discarded. But if we are looking for needy children to rescue, they are, alas, all around us in our foster-care system. Prebirth embryo adoption is not likely to signal similar attempts at rescue. It is far more likely to be one more way of exercising quality control, of finding the child whom we want—rather than loving the child we have been given.

In short, many of the new reproductive technologies will involve the use of third parties. In doing so, they break the connection between love-giving and life-giving in marriage. That is not just a minor nuance, for it is this connection that teaches us to think of the child as a gift, that keeps us from thinking of children as our project, as existing for the sake of satisfying our desires. It is no accident, then, that these technologies usually encourage genetic diagnosis—whether before implantation or after—of the "fitness" of the embryo or the fetus. If we understand the child as our project, if we accept that kind of responsibility, then we may inevitably find that "quality control" seems like an obvious—perhaps even imperative—part of the process. This is a journey we ought not even begin.

But what if no third parties are involved? There are certainly some circumstances in which an infertile couple might make use of new reproductive technologies while using only their own sperm and ova. Women may take drugs to influence ovulation. This may be combined with assisted insemination—when the sperm are placed directly in the vagina, cervix, or even uterus—if the man's sperm count is low. Either or both of these may often be part of an in vitro fertilization procedure in which both sperm and ovum are externalized and fertilization takes place in the laboratory. It is even possible now, within the IVF procedure, to inject a single sperm into the ovum.

Even when no third parties are involved there are serious moral concerns in the use of new reproductive technologies. The couple will be encouraged to "screen" the embryos formed in the laboratory, to consider whether a particular embryo is really the child they desire. If more embryos are produced than are implanted in the woman's uterus, they will have to ask themselves what should be done with the extras. Even apart from any IVF procedure, the use of ovulation-enhancing drugs alone means that the possibility of multiple fetuses—triplets and even higher-order multiple births—is greatly increased, and such pregnancies involve significant risks for the children conceived. They are much more likely to be born prematurely and to have low birthweight, and they may suffer lifelong complications as a result. Multiple fetuses also mean that the couple will have to deal with recommendations of "fetal reduction." In general, and even entirely apart from the use of donated sperm or eggs, it becomes increasingly difficult to think of the child as a gift and not a product. These are simply some of the hazards of the road they are traveling.

When we remember again the number of needy children who go unadopted precisely because of their needs, when we consider the degree to which new reproductive technologies have—in a very short time—begun to teach our society to think of reproduction as a right to which everyone is entitled, when we ponder the implications of these technologies for our society's understanding of children, we must ask whether Christians should not call a halt—at least for themselves. We do not have a story that teaches us to think of children as our entitlement or our possession. Indeed, the story we tell goes even beyond that of Hannah, Elkanah, and Samuel. For knowing as we do that God has already provided The Child, we can free ourselves of the feverish need to have a child of our own, whatever the cost. Perhaps the greatest service we can perform for our own children and for the world into which they will be born is to live in such a way that we remind ourselves and others that each child is indeed not our product, our project, or our possession, but a "blessing" that "love gives again into our arms."

Gilbert Meilaender holds the board of directors chair in Christian ethics at Valparaiso University. A second edition of his book The Taste for the Other: The Social and Ethical Thought of C. S. Lewis has just been released by Eerdmans.

Spinning the Truth

Diane M. Komp

Why we find a multitude of ways to avoid telling painful truth.

Some years ago I cared for a nine-year-old boy with a deadly brain tumor. I have never known a child with that tumor to survive more than a year. One of my partners had the difficult task of telling his parents the diagnosis and prognosis. This doctor had told them the whole truth and nothing but. I know his style—patient, thorough, compassionate.

Young Kyle went through radiation treatments. With that and the help of steroids, most of his symptoms went away. About a month after the treatment ended, I repeated the MRI to see where things stood. The pattern of black and white and gray said that nothing had changed. How much nicer it would have been if all the sinister shadows had disappeared, if only for a little while. How, I wondered, would I tell the family this?

Kyle was in the room when his mother asked the results. "I have some good news," I told her. "The tumor has not progressed." Well, my hopeful spin was true—half true. But neither had the tumor gone away.

That evening Kyle's mother and I were guests on a local television talk-show. Kyle was there, too, sitting between us in a spiffy three-piece vested suit. At the end of the interview, his mother said directly to the camera, "I have to tell you what happened today. Today Doctor Komp told me that my baby is going to be okay. There was another doctor we called 'Doctor Gloom and Doom,' but Doctor Komp told me my son would be okay."

How could I correct her in front of her son, in front of the television audience? I smiled weakly, regretting that I had so softened the news that she had drawn that incorrect conclusion.

When Kyle died, the family did fine, even with the less euphemistic doctor they called "Gloom and Doom." But I've been thinking about my choice of words ever since.

There is so much bad news in this world that seems to beg to be softened, especially in the field of medicine. This verbal softening-up process intends to console the hearer, but more often it comforts the euphemizer rather than the "euphemizee."

Euphemizing risks the dissolution of the truth, and sometimes it covers up danger.

One morning in Chicago I set off early from my hotel to mail a package and met two friendly police officers standing on the street corner. I asked them if there was a post office nearby.

"Whew!" said one cop shaking his head. "Not around here."

"Where's the nearest post office?" I wondered aloud, looking to his partner who might be more informative.

"Not within walking distance," his partner answered. "About six blocks that way," he said, waving his hand in the direction somewhat vaguely south.

"Not within walking distance," both officers repeated. "UPS will be open at 10:00 A.M. Why don't you just wait?"

Why wait when six blocks is not too far to walk? Having the time and needing the exercise, I set off past handsome banners that proclaimed "Illinois Medical District." The flags pointed to the illuminated crisp medical towers of South Ashland's Bedpan Alley.

There were many churches along my route to the post office. Bullet-shaped holes marred the simple glass cross on a Lutheran house of worship. A sign was broken off another church, but her boarded doors still proclaimed her watchword: "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." Hard to serve God on South Ashland, it would seem. Hard to come within walking distance.

My path took me down the streets of Cook County's encatchment area. Encatchment area—that's medspcak for the 'hood that fills the bedpans of this Chicago Hope. When I was a young doctor, Cook County had 3,000 active beds. Today fewer than 500 beds remain open for the sick of South Ashland who are sicker now than they have ever been before. I wondered whether visiting nurses need police escorts here as they do in the neighborhood that surrounds New Haven's Pill Hill where I work. It's not easy to serve those who have been managed-cared out of those 2,500 other beds.

"Not within walking distance" was the policeman's way of saying to me, "You shouldn't walk there." But the people who live on South Ashland walk there every day. As I strolled past an old brownstone house on that nippy autumn day, a young working woman in stilettoed heels and micro-miniskirt shouted final instructions to her latchkey son before moving toward a shiny new Lincoln Town Car blasting gangsta rap music at the curb. The people of South Ashland live within walking distance of poverty and prostitution and crime.

Not within walking distance is a way we can use words to stand at a distance from truth, when truth is too uncomfortable. A euphemism is one way, but there are other wordy ways to separate ourselves from that which is truthful but painful.

With euphemisms and passive voice, it's nobody's fault. No-fault syntax, says John Leo, is crucially important when issuing vague, no-apology regrets (Charlestown Daily Mail, Feb. 11, 1997).

We don't slice our hospital budgets these days. We participate in patient-focused child's life, someone interpreted my loving enthusiasm as an emblem of relationship.

Is it a lie, really, for me to perpetuate this warm, cozy myth of kinship? More a half-truth than a lie, it's a proud piece of puffery. Perhaps even literary license. Certainly not as black as sin. Surely my tender words of appreciation for a fragile young life won't poison the entire world. What difference does it make after all, I tell myself, if a childless, middle-aged woman embroiders a harmless piece of dining-room brocade?

The strangest thing about half-truths is how easy it would be most times for us simply to tell the whole truth. That day at deepest desire of my heart. Right there, on my knees, I began to weep, but I still held back from being honest with God.

"No! No! I can't!" I insisted. Toby encouraged me to look into Jesus' eyes. "Tell Jesus about the deepest desire of your heart."

I resisted for the longest moments. Then, I told Jesus that I wanted a child.

There are those who might say that God never answered my prayer that day. I'm 58 years old and "barren," as King James English puts it. Perhaps God has never fulfilled my heart's desire in the way that I envisioned, but my prayer bore fruit at that conference when I told those women doctors the story of my recaptured tears.

The next afternoon, other women wept and shared deeply the wounds of their own hearts. Unlike the courtroom where the judge sternly warns witnesses to control their emotions, we gave each other permission to cry.

A beautiful young mother mourned as she told the story of her infertility, then later the crib death of her lovely, new adopted child. She and her husband were devastated by their double loss. More tears poured down her cheeks when she confessed her jealousy of that other mother whose baby stole the show at our opening dinner. Then, other women took off their smiley masks as well, and we all were healed as we listened to each other's true stories.

Back at the Chowder Pot, I should not have crossed over the line from fact to fantasy with Sasha. I'm not at all certain that he would have heard what I had to say, but I don't really know that for a fact. I should just honestly have said, "This is the child I always wished that I could have had." That is the truth. I love my little Crumb Bunny with all of my heart.

If I had told Sasha that truth instead of my charming little puffed-up lie, who knows what desires of his own heart might have had the opportunity to rise to the surface? His own longings might have been translated into healing words or reconciling tears. CT

Diane M. Komp is professor of pediatrics at Yale University School of Medicine. This article is taken from Anatomy of a Lie, by Diane M. Komp. Copyright © 1998 by Diane M. Komp. Used by permission of Zondervan Publishing House.

Euphemizing risks the dissolution of the truth, and sometimes it covers up danger.

operational redesign. Patients don't die in our midst. They just expire. Following their expiration, we don't send them to the morgue. We discharge them to Brady. A dead body isn't a corpse either. It is the remains.

I like what Hannah More said about precision with words. "Let us fortify our virtue by calling things by their proper names" (Religion of the Heart, Paraclete, 1996).

Sasha is a recent college grad who had hoped by now to have found a high-paying engineering job. Instead, he's hoisting trays at the Chowder Pot and is mighty, mighty eager to please.

"Did the Shrimp Florentine meet with your satisfaction, Ma-dam?" he purrs to me. Ma-dam beams back her approval as she reaches for her Visa Gold.

My wallet falls open, revealing the photo of a sweet-faced baby, my little Crumb Bunny. Praying for a better tip, Sasha seizes the moment and coos, "Your daughter?" (Well, not unless Sarah and Elizabeth move over for another late-life miracle!)

"No," I explain. "My granddaughter." Sasha bows respectfully from the waist, "You must be very proud."

I am proud. And in a way, I am Crumb Bunny's "grandmother"—albeit an honorary and not a biological one. At my hospital a few years back, someone who didn't know that I was her doctor mistook me for one of her grandmas. In all the excitement that day about the bone-marrow donation that was arriving from England to save the the Chowder Pot I convinced myself that Sasha had no real interest in hearing my answer to his question. He was only making chit-chat, I concluded, just warming me up for a better tip. Does a brilliant young engineer cleverly disguised as a menial waiter really want to hear about me? Perhaps it is not Sasha but I who don't want to invest the time in the truth.

Awhile back I spoke to a group of women physicians who gathered to discuss the impact of their Christian faith on their personal and professional lives. One doctor came to that conference with her young baby. At the opening banquet, that tyke made quite a hit. Weary after a long work week, we now had a special reason to relax and smile together.

"Children are important to all of us," I told that audience of professional women, "even for those of us who will never be biological moms." Then I told these women doctors a story I had never told anyone else before.

One of the things a woman doctor learns early in her education is to put away her tears, even when the normal response would be to cry. "It's not very professional." "Big boys don't cry." "I'm tired of crying." Name your own tear-stopper. But the most important day for us can be the day that we reclaim our canceled tears. For me, that date came soon after I came back to Christian faith at the age of 40. I wanted to learn how to pray, so I asked a hospital chaplain to be my guide.

Toby caught me off guard when he encouraged me to ask God for a gift, the

Moody Bible Institute's

Founder's Week 1999

February 1-6

A Passion for Souls

A life consumed
by God

I am not ashamed of the gospel, because it is the power of God for the salvation of everyone who believes.

Romans 1:16

Come and experience A Passion for Souls at Moody Bible Institute's Founder's Week 1999 in Chicago, Illinois. During this week-long conference on February 1-6, some of the foremost evangelical leaders of our day offer their words of inspiration to ignite your passion for those who don't yet know Christ.

Tony
Evans

Franklin
Graham

Bill
Hybels

Luis
Palau

Jan
Silvius

Joseph
Stowell

Ravi
Zacharias

For more information, call 1-800-DL MOODY.

The Re-education of Jim Bakker

Back on the streets, this fallen televangelist is preaching good news to the poor and predicting an asteroid-studded Second Coming.

Jim Bakker is a mover. For years he used television to move people to Christ and to move money from their pockets into his ministry. But after being indicted for fraud by the federal government, he was forced to sit still in prison for five years. During that time, Bakker renounced his faith-equals-fortunes message and embraced the Jesus of the poor. After prison, he wasted no time writing two books and, this fall, taking a new wife. (Tammy Faye divorced him six years ago while he was in prison.) These days he does penance on the streets of Los Angeles, volunteering with the staff of the Dream Center, a large, ministry-intensive church pastored by Tommy and Matthew Barnett. CT associate editor Kevin D. Miller along with managing editor Michael G. Maudlin talked with Bakker about his journey and his latest book, Prosperity and the Coming Apocalypse (Nelson).

On doing time. The first months of prison were devastating. After being in a public ministry every day of your life and then finding yourself with everything gone—not only the material things but friends and reputation—and facing 45 years, you wonder, Is God gone too? I began to seek God, but I couldn't find him. I even prayed what I call stupid prayers—God, wiggle a plant or something in the room.

One night I had a dream. I was sitting next to Christ. He reached up into his eye and took out a sliver of his eye and then put it in my eye. He said, "I want you to see everything and everyone through my eyes." That was the first time I had even an inkling that maybe God might still talk to me. When I woke up, I knew immediately I had to start reading the Word of God—if I was going to look at everything through Christ's eyes, I had to know him.

I began to read and write down every word as recorded in the Gospels. I wept that I could have been so wrong, preaching another gospel and another Jesus. Jesus called riches "deceitfulness of riches." He even said, "Woe unto the rich!" He was saying things like, "You can't serve God and money." He never cast wealth and riches into a good light. How could I have spent so much time emphasizing financial blessing?

On prosperity preaching. I'd always quoted 3 John 2, saying, "Above all things God wants you to prosper." I loved that Scripture. It looks great on a TV screen when you're raising funds, and I interpreted it as God wants you to be rich. But when I got to the words of John, I said, "Now this don't make sense." So I took the word prosper apart in the Greek and found out it's made up of two words—the first word means good or well and the second road. It's a progressive word, so it's like a journey. So, here's John saying, basically, "Beloved, I want you to have a good journey through life as your soul has a good journey to heaven." It was a greeting! Building theology on that is like building the church on "Have a nice day."

I began to look up all the Scriptures used in prosperity teaching, such as "Give and it shall be given unto you." When I put that Scripture back into its context, I found Christ was teaching on forgiveness, not on money. He was teaching us that by the same measure that we forgive, we will be forgiven.

I had gotten my sermons from other people. The Bible warns about the shepherds who get their messages from each other. I think today the reason we have another gospel and another Jesus being preached is because men have gotten their sermons from each other and from motivational teaching. A lot of what's being taught today is simply motivational teaching with a few Scriptures put to it.

On E. coli and asteroids. I believe the harlot of the Book of Revelation is materialism. Our denomination [the Assemblies of God], at least, used to teach that the harlot was the Catholic church. That was escapist—we wanted to blame somebody else and never look at ourselves. If you study the attributes of the harlot, she's all about materialism. Everything is about the commerce of buying and selling and stuff. It's about loving this world and the things of this world.

I believe the four horsemen of the apocalypse are already out of the barn. They're saddled up; they're riding. The last horseman is about death and the animals. I couldn't figure out how animals could kill one-third of the population—you know, like elephants charging down our streets. Then I saw that the word death means pestilence or disease. And I thought, well, where does HIV come from? Where does E. coli come from? Animals! In Africa, millions of people are infected with HIV. So the stage is set for the horse-men of the apocalypse.

COURTESY OF DREAM CENTER

You'll probably brand me a fanatic for saying this, but the Bible says 17 times that the sun will be darkened before Jesus returns. In Matthew 24:29 it says the sun will be darkened and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars—that word is aster—and the powers of heaven shall be shaken. I believe aster means asteroid. Revelation 6 says the sun shall become black as sackcloth of hair, and the stars (asteres) of heaven will fall unto the earth. Revelation 8:8 talks about a great mountain burning with fire that is cast into the sea. What is that? That's an asteroid. I believe that an asteroid or comet will hit the earth.

We have another
Jesus being preached because men have gotten their sermons from motivational teaching.

I saw a science documentary called Fire from the Sky. They said that when an asteroid hits the earth it will cause a cloud to go around the earth and cause a nuclear winter for one year. The sun would be darkened and even look blood red. I'm seeing this documentary thinking, These are the same things I read in the Bible!

On suffering. People say, "God's not going to allow me to go through any tribulation." I believe we have been teaching people an escapism gospel. I believe the Bible teaches clearly that the church will go through tribulation. Pretribulation rapture is fairly new theology. I know it's in the beloved Scofield Bible, but I can't find any solid Scripture except maybe a verse here and there. And as I studied the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, I couldn't find one man or woman of God who lived a charmed life. All I could find was fiery furnaces and lion's dens and deserts and pits. Jesus said John the Baptist was the greatest man to walk the earth. Not only does John end up in prison, but Jesus walks away and goes on teaching. Jesus lets John go to prison and get his head cut off! Well, that just flies in the face of modern prosperity teaching.

The whole Bible is built around knowing Christ and the fellowship of his suffering. Those kinds of things don't preach very well. But I found that through the fellowship of his suffering, my time in prison became not a time of loneliness—though it was horribly lonely—but a time of solitude. It became a time where I walked closer with Christ than I ever had.

On returning to television. I don't want to say never on anything. But with the money it takes to be on television—my budget was a million dollars every two days—the tail wags the dog. I don't want money to be my consuming force again. Now I live in the ghetto of Los Angeles, where I work under a group of men that I highly respect. There are 160 different ministries working together. It's like a New Testament church, a daily thing, where we are feeding people, working with drug addicts, and repainting whole city blocks. We have about 4,000 in our sidewalk Sunday schools, and 12 different language churches at the center.

On the Graham family. Franklin came to prison over and over again to see me. He wrote me every month. The funny thing is, when he'd come I'd ask him to teach and preach in the chapel. I didn't want to just have him to myself in the visiting room. And the chaplain always would say to him, "Now don't give an invitation to accept Christ and

A series of 24, available individually or in a boxed set (ISBN 0-7363-0136-4)

New believers earnestly desire to know the Lord Jesus in a deeper way. They have a hunger for the Word of God and long to understand and fully experience the reality of salvation. In twenty-four simple yet profound messages, Watchman Nee guides new believers through some of the most pressing issues that they face, helping them to mature in the Lord and to be built up with other believers.

Topics in this series include:
 Baptism Confession with the Mouth
 Terminating the Past If Anyone Sins
 Witnessing Separation from the World
 Leading Men to Christ Consecration
 Confession and Repentance Prayer
 Reading the Bible Seeking God's Will
 Forgiveness and Restoration Meeting
 Rising Early The Discipline of God
 Governmental Forgiveness Our Life
 Deliverance Withstanding the Devil
 Loving the Brothers The Priesthood
 The Discipline of the Holy Spirit
 The Body of Christ

Now Available
 at Christian Bookstores from Living Stream Ministry
 through Spring Arbor

don't admit you know Jim Bakker." He broke the rules every time, both of them. You know when you're down in prison and Franklin comes and says, "Jim Bakker's my friend," it would just elevate my life for that moment. And then he'd give an invitation to accept Christ, and guys would come to the Lord.

When I was transferred to my last prison, Franklin said he wanted to help me out when I got out—with a job, a house to live in, and a car. It was my fifth Christmas in prison. I thought it over and said, "Franklin, you can't do this. It will hurt you. The Grahams don't need my baggage." He looked at me and he said, "Jim, you were my friend in the past and you are my friend now. If anyone doesn't like it, I'm looking for a fight."

So when I got out of prison the Grahams sponsored me and paid for a house for me to live in and gave me a car to drive. The first Sunday out, Ruth Graham called the halfway house I was living in at the Salvation Army and asked permission for me to go to the Montreat Presbyterian Church with her that Sunday morning. When I got there, the pastor welcomed me and sat me with the Graham family. There were like two whole rows of them—I think every Graham aunt and uncle and cousin was there. The organ began playing and the place was full except for a seat next to me. Then the doors opened and in walked Ruth Graham. She walked down that aisle and sat next to inmate 07407-058. I had only been out of prison 48 hours, but she told the world that morning that Jim Bakker was her friend.

Afterwards, she had me up to their cabin for dinner. When she asked me for some addresses, I pulled this envelope out of my pocket to look for them—in prison you're not allowed to have a wallet, so you just carry an envelope. She asked, "Don't you have a wallet?" And I said, "Well, yeah, this is my wallet." After five years of brainwashing in prison you think an envelope is a wallet. She walked into the other room and came back and said, "Here's one of Billy's wallets. He doesn't need it. You can have it." It reminded me of the time I was in prison when she took all of Billy's

Bibles in his library he wasn't using and gave them to me to give to other inmates.

On The Apostle. I'm not sure the film is good or bad. I think Franklin [who denounced the movie, which stars Robert Duvall as a wayward Pentecostal preacher] is coming from his perspective. He perhaps hasn't seen that side of Christianity. But talking to some of the old-timers, they told me they felt that that Southern preacher portrayed a hard reality, that there are people with that kind of roughness to them.

The thing that did impress me in the movie was the salvation prayer near the end. It was the most moving conversion experience that I've ever seen portrayed by Hollywood. I went to see the movie with some friends, and I was determined not to have any emotion about it. But as it got near the end and Robert Duvall—the preacher—had gotten his life somewhat together and was loving those people and that church, and then the police came and put him in handcuffs, I began to sob in that theater. I didn't realize the pain was still deep inside of me. I tried not to cry, so it came out in loud bursts. My friends didn't know what to do. I guess I identified with the character at that point as I remembered the pain of being shackled and being taken away myself.

I grew up in an era of law. But either we believe in grace or we don't. So I have to accept the grace in that story—even though it's fictional—if I'm going to accept grace for myself. And to forgive me is the hardest thing I have to do today. I have no problems forgiving others. When I was in prison, God spoke in my heart that if I didn't forgive my enemies and pray for God to bless them, I would never leave prison. But I am still struggling with my own forgiveness. The pain of my failure is something that's hard for me to deal with. So for me The Apostle is the story of a man who did a terrible thing, but yet his heart, like David's, was toward God. David murdered. David committed adultery. But the thing we learn from the life of David is that he kept his heart toward God. That's why we can't judge one another, because God sees the heart.

God spoke in my heart that if I didn't forgive my enemies,
 I would never leave prison.

Want To Be World Class?

Grab A Towel.

It's a great paradox. If you want to be the greatest, become the least. At Bethel Seminary, we are committed to developing ministers who are world class in every sense of the phrase. And we know doing great things for God requires that we help prepare our students to serve others.

The church needs servant leaders, as all over the world people are coming to Christ in record numbers. They must be persons grounded in Scripture, growing in integrity, and increasingly reflecting Christ's character in all aspects of life. In addition, ministering effectively both here and abroad requires training that is sensitive to a host of cultural nuances throughout the world. World class training? You'll find it at Bethel Seminary.

Is God tugging at your heart? Do you sense His calling to ministry? If so, call Bethel Seminary today at 800-255-8706 for more information and a copy of our brochure.

Bethel Seminary

ST. PAUL • SAN DIEGO

CHANGE THE WORLD www.bethel.edu

Hollywood on Holy Ground

Michael G. Maudlin

Jeffrey Katzenberg, the ex-Disney movie exec, was sipping wine at Steven Spielberg's house along with ex-Sony music czar David Geffen, where the three were discussing the next frontier for animation. Katzenberg had shepherded the genre's renaissance at Disney with such hits as The Little Mermaid and The Lion King. He felt animation was ready to burst its fairy-tale-for-toddlers trappings. This led to a discussion about what went into a cinematic epic. When they listed the different elements, Spielberg blurted out they all added up to The Ten Commandments. And with that, the three of them decided to start a new studio, DreamWorks, with its first project being an animated telling of the life of Moses, The Prince of Egypt (to be released Dec. 18).

But Geffen added a caution: They shouldn't Disneyfy it—that is, reconfigure the ancient story in order to tell an upbeat American tale. "Moses is not our story." And because of that injunction, I got to enjoy a special preview at DreamWorks' state-of-the-art animation studio. Katzenberg took Geffen's advice to heart and made an effort to transform Hollywood's relationship to the religious community from enmity to partnership. At every stage of production—from storyboards to previewing the close-to-final film—hundreds of religious leaders have been brought in to consult, including Jerry Falwell, James Dobson, and Ralph Reed.

"Dozens and dozens of changes were made," said Katzenberg. Of the ones he is willing to comment on, he tells of the song lyric that was already recorded as "You can work miracles when you believe." "All three religious groups let us know that that line was a problem," says Katzenberg. It was rerecorded as "There can be miracles when you believe." The change was not cheap.

While DreamWorks decided to eschew crass commercialization—and so waved off opportunities to merchandise Burning Bush night-lights—they tapped Christian publisher Thomas Nelson to produce a smorgasbord of mostly children's offerings, from The Prince of Egypt A to Z to The Exodus: Moses' Story from the Bible with Notes by Charles R. Swindoll. Look for the cardboard dump in a bookstore near you. The books will be placed alongside three albums: the soundtrack and two "inspired by" productions, one called "Nashville" and the other "Inspirational."

But merchandising and networking do not a hit movie make. If the movie flows, DreamWorks' brave attempt at a positive relationship with faith communities might backfire, making other studios less likely to pursue religion-friendly projects. Then again, Steven Spielberg's instincts were right: The Prince of Egypt is a great story. And Jeffrey Katzenberg was right: MovieGuide's Ted Baehr calls the film "a quantum leap in animation."

In fact, the movie is more entertaining than the book. To speed up the action, the role of Aaron is severely downgraded (the Val Kilmer-voiced Moses speaks for himself), and at the time of the Exodus, Moses looks more like a spry 32 than a robust octogenarian. And there are none of those awkward scenes of Hebrews grumbling in the wilderness; the movie ends at the hooray-for-our-side moment on the other shore of the Red Sea. Yes, there are certain advantages to having entertainment rather than revelation as your goal.

Still, unlike in most entertainment vehicles, God plays a major role. God's white fire in the burning bush wonderfully captures both his nurturing love and his majestic holiness. The plagues can only be interpreted as a revelation of Yahweh's supremacy over the Egyptian gods. And the parting-of-the-waters scene would cause Cecil B. DeMille to faint. There is no doubt who pulled these wonders off.

DreamWorks sought a PG rating. They thought scenes of soldiers killing Hebrew babies and God killing all of Egypt's firstborn—no matter how tastefully done—might be too much for toddlers. Still, the movie is one of those rare gifts from our consumer culture where what they are selling happens to further the work of the kingdom. My advice: Let the people go.

CI

DreamWorks has a fresh idea for avoiding the wrath of the religious community. They are working with us.

Bible Presentation Software can help grow your church

Visually impaired people can read giant text projected on a screen
Hearing impaired people can listen when text is seen as well as heard
Youth and teen-agers can pay attention when beautiful images from Europe and the Holy Land flash in front of their eyes

1000 CHURCHES SLIDESHOW brings big-screen television and LCD projector technology to smaller churches without the expense of dedicated equipment. Your notebook computer with TV-out can display Scripture along with art from the world's finest cathedrals—without computer icons and windows

Turn a movie screen into a beautiful landscape
Let your computer read the Bible to your children
Print beautiful art on your programs and newsletters
Project a Vatican Ceiling onto the ceiling of your church
Copy scripture and text into other applications
Use as a screensaver where you work

1000 CHURCHES is the testimony of William B. Prescott's two year pilgrimage to the Holy Land across the Atlantic alone in a 20 foot boat. He photographed the most beautiful Christian art on the world so you can share with your church how other Christians spread the Gospel

330 full screen images with 600x800 resolution
4,500 page super-giant print King James Bible
3½ hours of spoken Bible stories in 16 bit sound
Pop-up notes for hearing impaired viewers
Automated interactive 45 minute narrated presentation
Thumbnails, maps, and searchable indexes with links
Programs from Europe's most famous cathedrals

EXAMPLE:
3: And God said, Let there be light and there was light.
4: And God saw the light, that it was good: and God divided the light from the darkness.
5: And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night. And the evening and the morning were the first day.

Only $39.95! Works on any computer† with 16mb, soundcard, & 6x CD-ROM. Call 1-800-247-6553 to order or see www.1000churches.com or send $39.95 and $5 s/h to:

NAME : _____ 1000 Churches
PO Box 4265
Bay City, Texas
77404-4265

Ship to: _____
City, _____
T, zip: _____
† Contains Adobe Acrobat Reader® software for Windows, Mac, & Os2. The Cathedral at Palma (above) is just one of the 380 images in 1000 Churches!

The Jesus I'd Prefer to Know

John G. Stackhouse, Jr.

Searching for the historical Jesus and finding oneself instead.

Almost a century ago, the scholar-turned-medical-missionary Albert Schweitzer published a little bombshell of a book with the bland title of The Quest of the Historical Jesus (1906; reissued this year in paperback by the Johns Hopkins University Press). Schweitzer reviewed the history of critical studies of the life of Jesus, starting with the early eighteenth-century skeptic Hermann von Reimarus and concluding with the late nineteenth-century liberal theologian William Wrede. The central argument of Schweitzer's book at the opening of the twentieth century is startlingly appropriate also at its end.

Scholar after scholar, Schweitzer contended, had looked for Jesus down the deep well of history and had seen instead the scholar's own reflection. Some writers on Jesus marshaled impressive intellectual tools, from archaeological research to literary analysis, from comparative studies of Near Eastern religions to examination of talmudic materials. Others relied on personal intuition, perhaps a journey or two to the Holy Land, and vivid imagination to construct their own "lives of Jesus." But in almost every case, Schweitzer concluded, two centuries of supposedly rigorous investigation had produced a wide range of portraits of Jesus, each of which bore a suspicious resemblance to the artist and none of which was conclusive.

Charlotte Allen has come to the same conclusion after almost another century of biblical scholarship. In her new book, The Human Christ: The Misguided Search for the Historical Jesus (Free Press), she begins by surveying early Christian understandings of Jesus, and then takes up her story proper with eighteenth-century Enlightenment inquiries into the "human" Jesus—that is, the "real" Jesus stripped of the superstitions and myths that had attached to him somehow over the centuries. Drawing her narrative up virtually to the present—yes, the Jesus Seminar appears, as do other contemporary scholars—Allen's rather lightly argued verdict is Schweitzer's redux: so-called critical examinations of the Gospels in search of Jesus over more than three centuries have been typically uncritical of the author's own governing biases and have resulted, time after time, in the projection of one's own ideals onto the figure of Jesus of Nazareth.

Skeptics dismiss Jesus as a lunatic, a charlatan, a troubled poet, or an impotent revolutionary—or embrace him as an ironical, detached, innocuous fellow such as they see themselves to be. Rationalists who do not discard him discover him to be logical, sensible, and practical. Liberals admire him as idealistic, brave, kind, and wise. Romantics extol him as passionate, vital, and free. Reformers revere him as bold, visionary, impatient, and forceful. Some modern Jewish scholars find Jesus to be, in fact, a pretty good Pharisee (while Paul, the ex-Pharisee, turns out to be the troublemaker who actually started the Christian religion).

The worst kind of scholarly self-indulgence is revealed in Allen's painstaking account of two centuries of "lives of Jesus" that share one damning trait: whenever the historical evidence fails to fit the preconceived theory, the evidence has to give way. Books of the New Testament are assigned earlier or later dates of composition and to this or that author in order to conform to somebody's scheme of how early Christianity developed. At the end of the nineteenth-century, the eminent scholar Martin Kähler—no friend of orthodoxy—condemned the entire life-of-Jesus movement as having contributed virtually nothing to the store of historically reliable knowledge about Jesus. And many observers of the Jesus Seminar today see a similar dynamic at work in their deliberations: since "we" already "know" what Jesus typically said or did on the basis of our "study" of hypothetical documents such as "Q" or "proto-Luke," or our reading back of Jewish or Gnostic texts from centuries later, then we can confidently assess the veracity of this or that report of a saying or action of Jesus. Yeah, sure.

Particularly striking in Allen's account is how far back some of the purportedly "modern" and "critical" arguments go. Her earlier chapters show the second-century archcritic Celsus to have better claim on the title "first of the demythologizers" than D. F. Strauss, much less Rudolph Bultmann. So, too, Allen traces the fundamental modern critical disjunction between "the Jesus of history" and "the Christ of faith" to the second-century career of the heretic Marcion. Indeed, she asserts that "few modern skeptics about Jesus have improved on the theories of the early pagan critics." So much, then, for the breathless announcements of cutting-edge scholarship by the Elaine Pagelses and John Spongs who, in fact, offer theories that are decades, if not centuries, old.

From a more traditional point of view, Allen's account raises intriguing questions. Why, for starters, do traditional/orthodox/conservative critics get so little space in her story—and, to be fair to her, in most summaries of the history of biblical criticism? Allen notes with approval the nineteenth-century work of Konstantin von Tischendorf, who gave us a rendition of the Greek New Testament that still stands as the basis for all modern translations. And she does mention contemporary scholars such as N. T. Wright and Martin Hengel. But Tischendorf was a textual critic and thus did not work on the same problems as the life-of-Jesus scholars. Wright and Hengel barely get mentioned. And the work of previous worthies such as J. B. Lightfoot and Adolf von Schlatter receives little or no attention. This is a pity, because a survey of more conservative scholarship would have served as an important test of Allen's hypothesis.

What happens, in other words, when orthodoxy is assumed? Have evangelicals, like their heterodox counterparts, simply remade the figure of Jesus in their own image? Yale scholar Jaroslav Pelikan's book Jesus Through the Centuries has shown that, in fact, all Christians everywhere have tended to picture Christ according to their ethnic, economic, and political situations as well as according to their distinctive theological beliefs. And given that Jesus is the representative for all humanity, some of that variegation of portraiture is understandable and even splendid.

But when modern North American evangelicals picture Jesus on T-shirts as a righteous Rambo (yet recall "Behold, the Lamb of God"), or archdefender of the nuclear family (but see "Who are my mother and my brothers?"), or champion of our political causes (but "my kingdom is not of this world"), then we also are guilty of—to use a Bible word—idolatry.

The biblical presentation of Jesus refuses to remain nicely confined to any of our containers. In particular, Allen shows how one picture after another of Jesus in this long line of nontraditional portraits fails before one question dear to the hearts of all faithful Christians: "What about the Cross?"

I once encountered an articulate, angry young Marxist at Speaker's Corner in Hyde Park, London. As we had come upon a small knot of people during an afternoon stroll, it had appeared that the young Communist had silenced a gentle Christian preacher by loudly proclaiming that Jesus Christ was "not a pleasant person!" As he waved a New Testament under the nose of the abashed speaker, still marooned a foot above the rest of us on his soapbox, the assailant thought he was scoring an impressive point. But then another Christian in the audience, one with a firmer grasp of the gospel, spoke up: "Of course Jesus wasn't a pleasant person. You don't crucify nice guys!"

Why would anyone crucify the reasonable Jesus of the Enlightenment? Why would anyone crucify the dreamy poet of Romanticism? Why would anyone crucify the Law-abiding, mild-mannered rabbi of revisionist Jewish scholarship? Why would anyone crucify the witty, enigmatic, and marginal figure of the Jesus Seminar?

What Jewish scholar Jacob Neusner says about revisionist Jewish views of Jesus is true of most of Allen's long line: "Theologians produced the figure they could admire most at the least cost." But the Cross stands amidst each such easy path, each attempt to avoid the heart of the matter and the cost of discipleship. The Cross remains a stumbling block for all who encounter this Jesus. He is perhaps not the person we want, but he is surely the person we still—desperately—need. CT

John G. Stackhouse, Jr., is Sangwoo Youtong Chee Professor of Theology at Regent College, Vancouver, and author of Can God Be Trusted? Faith and the Challenge of Evil (Oxford University Press).

The Twelfth Calvin Symposium on Worship and the Arts

JANUARY 8 AND 9, 1999
GRAND RAPIDS, MI

A Conference for

- Worship Leaders
- Worship Planners
 - Pastors
- Visual Artists
 - Musicians
 - Dramatists
- Campus Chaplains

For a brochure, call (616) 957-6822
or email, choltrp@calvin.edu

Visit us at our Web site: www.calvin.edu/worship

Oprah's Misery Index

Her book club's selections' recurring theme:

Sufferers who save themselves.

Susan Wise Bauer

One October morning, Dominick Birdsey's schizophrenic twin, Thomas, chops off his own right hand in the middle of the public library. And this is a good day for Dominick, the hero of Wally Lamb's bestselling novel I Know This Much Is True. He's almost bankrupt, his wife has left him after the crib death of their infant daughter, he's living with a dumb-as-dirt aerobics instructor who just got pregnant by someone else (her uncle, but that's a whole different subplot), his stepfather, Ray, hates him, and his mother is dying of breast cancer. "Closing in on forty," Dominick reflects, "I was wifeless, childless. Now I'd be motherless too. Left with my crazy brother and Ray."

I Know This Much Is True (900 pages of wretchedness, weighing in at $27.50 and three-and-a-half pounds) may seem an unlikely commercial success, but Dominick's misery has plenty of company. A sampling of past Publishers Weekly and New York Times Book Review fiction bestseller lists yields the stories of Beth, who loses her three-year-old son to kidnappers; Ruth, a penniless farm wife whose husband goes insane and beats her mother to death while her three-year-old son watches; Ninah, trapped in an abusive fundamentalist cult founded by her own grandfather; Ellen, whose drunken, violent father abandons her to the care of a cruel and distant grandmother; Ada, dying of AIDS in her decaying hometown; Frannie, the battered wife of a dangerous New York City cop, running away to save her life; and Dolores (in Wally Lamb's previous novel, She's Come Undone), who eats her way up to 257 pounds after a neighbor rapes her and her mother is hit by a truck. At least Job had half a chapter of happiness before his world disintegrated. In these novels, life starts out unbearable and gets rapidly worse.

There's a one-word explanation for their bestseller status: Oprah. Each of these books was selected by Oprah Winfrey's on-air book club. Oprah's chosen authors become instant literary lions; even a hint of interest can make a writer's career. (When the news got out that Oprah saw promise in an unpublished manuscript sent to her by a first-time novelist, a publishers' bidding war erupted.) The Oprah effect—a complex mix of celebrity, media synergy, female buying power, and African-American support—can eclipse the most venerable of literary honors. "On the day that [Toni] Morrison appeared on air with Oprah," writes Paul Gray in the December 2, 1996, issue of Time magazine, "Barnes & Noble sold 16,070 copies of Song of Solomon nationwide. Oprah provided a bigger boost for Morrison's commercial clout than the 1993 Nobel Prize for Literature did."

Oprah tends to be evasive about her selection criteria ("I chose these books," she told one interviewer, "because they are readable, poignant, thought-provoking"). But the ongoing popularity of the book club—after 19 picks in two years, the Oprah effect shows no signs of weakening—suggests that Oprah's readers have consistently been satisfied with her choices. These novels resonate with a wide, book-buying American readership. Suffering sells.

The Bible we use begins, chronologically, with the creation of the world and runs in neat, linear fashion to its end. But the oldest book of the Bible is probably Job, not Genesis. The most ancient story of the Christian and Jewish traditions deals, not with origins, but with suffering, that most universal of human experiences. Thematically, Job is the first book of the Bible; Genesis explains our existence, but Job tells us why we started demanding explanations in the first place. Overwhelmed by pain, the sufferer calls up to God: "Who are you?" And God answers, "In the beginning, I made the heaven and the earth."

The Oprah novels are tied together, not merely by the theme of suffering, but by a particular method of depicting all that pain. Like the nineteenth-century sentimental novel, these books intend to connect the reader to the story by appealing to shared emotional experiences. Life with a schizophrenic identical twin is strange territory for most of us, but I Know This Much Is True consistently casts Dominick's anguish as common weariness. "I was just tired," Dominick decides, halfway through his saga, "just wanted to stop fighting and give in." This is an emotion that dates back at least to Job: "I am worn out," laments Job, "I despise my life, I would lie down in the dust, in peace." Beth, the mother of the kidnapped three-year-old in Jacquelyn Mitchard's The Deep End of the Ocean, wishes she could even summon the energy for a suicide attempt: "The best she could summon was a sort of perpetual sluggishness. . . . She would live her threescore and ten. She was damned if she could see what she would do with it."

Sentimental novels are structured, not around rational and neatly constructed plots, but instead around highly evocative feelings and experiences. A sentimental novel is a journey (in the words of Leo Braudy) into the "tumultuous inner emotional world of the novel's main character"—a journey that pulls the reader along for the roller-coaster ride. To get the reader securely buckled into his seat, sentimental authors of the nineteenth century played relentlessly on common life experiences that evoked strong emotions: illness, separation, death, children in peril. Little Women pokes fun at some of the conventions of sentimentality (purple prose, high-flown diction, and gasping heroism) but falls easily within the category. "Don't weep over me," the dying Beth says, bravely placing her thin white hand on Jo's rough head; but generations of readers have done just that.

The Oprah novels are equally shameless. Illness and the loss of love are givens, but almost every book also involves a dead or abused child. The Deep End of the Ocean is centered on the missing three-year-old, Ben; in Jane Hamilton's The Book of Ruth, the murder of Ruth's mother by her unbalanced husband is built around the trauma done to the watching toddler, Justy; the fundamentalist community in Sheri Reynolds's The Rapture of Canaan takes Ninah's illegitimate baby away from her; I Know

This Much Is True returns, over and over again, to the image of Dominick's dead baby, stiff in her crib.

Sentimental novels are traditionally directed toward a female audience, and the Oprah books are no exception. Their preoccupation with dead and missing children, and the continual exploration of difficult family ties (as opposed to job problems, say, or the frustration of ambition, or other more typically "male" concerns) reveals the crowd of women in Oprah's audience. Dreadful marriages abound; the occasional bad wife makes an appearance, but bad husbands are endemic. The wife-beating policeman Bobby Benedetto in Anna Quindlen's Black and Blue is the most obvious, but there's scarcely a healthy marriage to be found anywhere.

In Wally Lamb's two books, bad marriages and

Browse the Net Shop the Store

Books, Bibles, Music and more! By Faith Alone Martin Luther

A yearly devotional collection of writings by Martin Luther, freshly translated from 16th century German into contemporary English.

Reg. Price $17.99
only $12.59 at
www.FirstNetChristian.com

BOOKS

children in peril are fused; Dolores's troubles begin with the disintegration of her parents' marriage after the death of her baby brother, and Dominick's schizophrenic twin, Thomas, is driven deeper into his madness by his stepfather's persistent cruelty. His mother, traumatized, refuses to intervene. "Having married Ray Birdsey for better or worse," Dominick remembers, "[Ma] was determined to believe in his jolly good fellowship, no matter what the evidence said. No matter what the feeling in our stomachs." Even the Oprah books with male narrators turn continually to the lives of the female characters as they marry, divorce, bear and lose children.

To characterize the Oprah novels as "sentimental" ought not to denigrate either their power or their importance. The evangelical community—influenced, perhaps, more by the Enlightenment deification of the intellect than we often admit—has tended to scorn emotion, placing it firmly in second place to the mind. (Emotions, Christian counselor Jay Adams sternly reminds us, are "organic bodily responses that are largely involuntary and are triggered by behavior, thoughts, and attitudes.") But an evocative picture of emotion is as powerful as a well-reasoned argument. If the popularity of these books tells us anything, surely it is that a huge segment of American readers longs to hear that others have suffered as well. The Haitian-born Edwidge Danticat, author of the Oprah novel Breath, Eyes, Memory, confirms this: "Oprah says that when she reads about people who are going through similar experiences to her own, she feels less alone. A lot of us share that feeling."

Nineteenth-century sentimental novels were generally written with a cause in mind; the most famous, Uncle Tom's Cabin, used the common emotion of a mother's love for her children as a tool to link upper-class white women to the suffering of slave mothers, attracting them to the abolitionist cause.

The Oprah novels are more than simple exercises in empathy. They too have a cause: to find meaning in suffering. All the books reveal a grasping for certainty, a dogged determination to find reasons for pain. In the words of an Oprah heroine (Ada Johnson in What Looks Like Crazy on an Ordinary Day), "Discomfort is always a necessary part of the process of enlightenment." And to that end, each book, somewhere, ends up with an enlightened conclusion: Here is

And we know that God causes everything to work together for the good of those who love God and are called according to his purpose for them.

ROMANS 8:28

Live It Now

what I have understood through my pain. I know this much is true.

Theology has nothing to do with this enlightenment; traditional Christian answers to pain must be abandoned by all honest thinking people. When these sufferers cry, "Where are you?" to God, a clanging silence ensues. The Book of Ruth's heroine gives us the news, in case we haven't attained enlightenment on our own:

It came upon me suddenly that Jesus was in the same league as the tooth fairy and the Easter rabbit, not to mention Santa himself. But with Jesus, for some mysterious reason, you had all the grownups kneeling down, praying to him. I was furious with the deacons and the Rev and the Sunday school teachers and the imaginary God who made the whole story unfold. I kept getting madder and madder, all the way to Easter. . . . The whole thing sounded very dumb to me, but mostly I felt sad, because I was sure there was going to be a child who would come to me and make the world light.

In sentimental-novel terms, this sadness is meant to link reader to narrator in common rejection of the Christian fairy tale. In unison, the Oprah novels agree with Ruth's disappointment. It's a beautiful story, but there's no light at the far end of life's tunnel, no merciful Father, no reward after the struggle. "Resurrection," Dolores muses in She's Come Undone. "The word made a pretty sound. . . . God and the Tooth Fairy and Jiminy Cricket." (There's the Tooth Fairy again.) "Listen to how God up there is supposed to make everything and everybody and everything's due to turn out according to his will and all," snaps Jack in Kaye Gibbons's A Virtuous Woman. "And we get the wars and people starving and people hurting people . . . and I'm supposed to go down there to Ephesus on a Sunday morning and say, 'Thank you, Jesus, thank you for the sunshine and the food on my table and all the birds singing and the likes of Adolf Hitler and Roland Stanley.' No thank you! I'll have no part of it!" Heaven, in Dominick's words, is "a Walt Disney ending." He sums up, near the end of I Know This Much Is True:

There was no God. . . . Life didn't have to make sense, I'd concluded:

that was the big joke. Get it? You could have a brother who stuck metal clips in his hair to deflect enemy signals from Cuba, and a biological father who, in 33 years, had never shown his face, and a baby dead in her bassinet . . . and none of it meant a [obscenity] thing. Life was a whoopee cushion, a chair yanked away just as you were having a seat.

The bitterness that seethes from these pages comes in part from a conscious rejection of the Creator, but it also reveals an honest loathing of pat solutions. Certainly the Bible does not offer pat solutions; God's appearance to Job in a whirlwind raises more questions than it answers. Yet God's followers have done plenty to minimize suffering's pain, protecting God's reputation by mouthing platitudes. The villains in the Oprah novels are often clergymen who use mysterious truths as clubs to beat the wounded, like the priest who assures Dominick at his brother's funeral that "God was merciful, whether we understood His ways or not." Dominick thinks (not surprisingly), "This is pap. . . . Hallmark greeting card theology."

Would Oprah pick books that make such consistently hostile statements about Judaism, or Buddhism, or even (for that matter) Scientologism? Probably not; but Christianity suffers in part from its position as a dominant cultural force. Exposure to Hallmark-quality Christian theology is, apparently, a common experience that can give rise to the common emotions the genre demands. Presumably, Oprah's viewers have all run across platitude-mouthing preachers at some point. Platitude-mouthing rabbis, or Buddhist priests, or Scientologists are likely scarcer.

But the rejection of all Christian faith is also assumed to be common, shared by reader and narrator alike. The Oprah sufferers call out to God and hear only silence. This silence, they conclude, proves that they are completely alone. In this, they go far beyond Job, who never doubts that God is in the world with him, linking him to some plan he hates and does not understand. Job stands in an incomprehensible universe, but it is full and noisy; God assails him, Satan torments him, his wife won't leave him, and his friends won't go away. "Will your

CHRISTIANITY ONLINE

America Online Keyword: CO
www.christianity.net

SOMETHING FOR EVERYONE

Chat ~ Message Boards ~ Music
Bible & Reference ~ Shopping
Magazines ~ Fun & Games
Ministries ~ Devotionals

WOMEN TO WOMEN

--Daily Bible Study Chats
--Today's Christian Woman,
Marriage Partnership, Virtue
--Free E-mail Newsletter

BROTHER TO BROTHER

--Weekly Men's Bible Study
--Promise Keeper's Links
--Men of Integrity Devotional

STUDENT HANGOUT

--Free E-mail Newsletter
--Jr. High, High School Chats
--Campus Life Cafe

KIDS OF THE KINGDOM

--AOL Kids Only Access
--Monitored Chats &
Message Boards
--Links to Best Kids Web Sites

SINGLES CONNECTION

--Male & Female Personals
--E-mail Newsletter
--Chat Rooms Categorized by Age

CHURCH LEADERS NETWORK

--Christianity Today,
Leadership & Your Church
--Church Product Guide
--Sermon Illustrations &
Preaching Resources

CHRISTIANITY ON THE 'NET

--Christian Net Search
--Church Locator
--Best Christian Site Reviews

To advertise on Christianity Online call
(630) 260-6202 x 349

So easy to use; no wonder it's #1

For a FREE
50-Hour Trial call
1-800-633-8888

Availability may be limited during peak times.

long-winded speeches never end?" he snaps at his companions. "What ails you, that you won't quit arguing with me?"

Contrast this to the intense isolation of Ruth, who sits in church and thinks, "Despite all the talk of God and Jesus, that there's no one looking after us . . . we are alone, and each of us singular."

Sooner or later, each character comes to the knowledge that she is solitary in her suffering. Dolores of She's Come Undone reaches this epiphany when her neighbor assaults her. "I knew no one was coming for me," she says, "that I was by myself."

Frannie, the abused wife in Anna Quindlen's Black and Blue, acts this out by changing her name, her age, her very identity, concealing her true self even from the man she sleeps with. Dominick is abandoned by his mother, his wife, his baby daughter, his father, and finally his twin brother. He sums up his life, in his final psychotherapy session, in a single word. Fatherless. Alone, without hope and without God in the world. Elie Wiesel said it, in the aftermath of the Holocaust: Intense suffering makes us oblivious to anyone but ourselves. "I was alone," he says, "terribly alone in a world without God and without man. Without love or mercy."

Yet each Oprah novel ends, not with isolation, but with a brave affirmation of solidarity, a glorious decision to find meaning at the brink of the void. These sufferers are on their own, yet they are able to choose significance, to balance themselves between survival and sanity. "If you will only visualize your own beauty, you can make it real," Dolores's psychotherapist promises her. "On a symbolic level, we could say you were midwifing yourself . . . couldn't we?"

Ninah in The Rapture of Canaan also recreates herself, retelling her own story in her own mind: "I weave in lies, and I weave in love, and in the end, it's hard to know if one keeps me warmer than the other. . . . It is imperfect, but I could walk on it."

This willingness to connect voluntarily with the lives of others is at the heart of the sentimental novel, with its goal of shared emotions, shared experiences, shared knowledge. The sufferers, in the end, decide (entirely of their own volition) to open themselves to the rest of the human race. In this, they provide comfort for the hundreds of thousands of Oprah readers who are searching for an answer other than the mysterious God of Job.

"And still," Ruth concludes, "all of us are miraculously the same in our aloneness, with our red blood cells streaming through our veins. . . . The only blessed way there is, I realized, is for all of us to feel deeply with a wounded, or sick, or even dead person. What the Rev meant to say, if he could ever have spoken plainly, without all the paraphernalia of the Gospel, was, 'Each man's struggle is mine.'"

There's a terrible irony in all this, of course; God himself, long before Job (before the foundations of the earth), did make man's struggle his own. The paraphernalia of the gospel makes our suffering part of God's own experience. In I Know This Much Is True, Dominick even calls the Crucifixion to his aid as he tries to describe the agony of watching his brother led away into a mental ward. "That's when I felt it for myself," he says, "the spike against flesh, the hammer's piercing thud."

Yet this is only a fleeting metaphor, and the Incarnation provides the Oprah sufferers only material for creative obscenities. Dominick (aided by psychotherapy) decides to break voluntarily through the isolation caused by his suffering. He agrees to raise his ex-girlfriend's baby, takes his much-hated stepfather out for lunch, and volunteers to help entertain kids at a pediatric cancer ward. He then gets his wife back, finds out that his real father is a Wequonnoc Indian, and suddenly becomes a proud possessor of Native American spirituality: "Wequonnocs pray to roundness. Wholeness. The cycles of the moon, the seasons. We thank the Great Creator for the new life and for the life it sprang from. The past and the future, cinched together."

Conveniently, this new ethnic identity also provides him with gambling revenues. "We 415 members of the Wequonnoc Nation are millionaires," he writes, at the end of his tome. "God—life—can be both merciful and ironic. . . . The evidence of God exists in the roundness of things. This much, at least, I've figured out. I know this much is true."

It's a neat and happy ending: self-created meaning, self-created prosperity, self-created connections to the rest of humanity, even a self-created divinity. To turn from Dominick's sufferings to the concentration camps described by Elie Wiesel is jarring, but necessary. God died for Dominick when his twin brother disappeared behind the metal doors of a state hospital; Wiesel's God died on the day that a child hung on Nazi gallows:

Behind me, I heard the same man asking: "Where is God now?" And I heard a voice within me answer him: "Where is He? Here He is—He is hanging here on this gallows." . . . This day I had ceased to plead. I was no longer capable of lamentation. On the contrary, I felt very strong. I was the accuser, God the accused. My eyes were open and I was alone. . . . In the depths of my heart, I felt a great void.

Stories of suffering, to be honest, must end with one of two truths: the presence of God, or a void where he should be. God appeared to Job, not with answers, but in the overwhelming reality of his creation. Job, still puzzled, still not understanding, placed his hand over his mouth. Not all suffering will end with the epiphany of the whirlwind; not all sufferers will come face to face with the person of God. Those who do, like Job, will bow their heads and admit a riddle that cannot be solved.

Those who do not will live in a world without God.

But this godless world isn't filled with self-sufficiency and self-created meaning. Wiesel ends his chilling memoir Night, not with faith in himself, but with a long look in the mirror. "I had not seen myself since the ghetto," he writes. "From the depths of the mirror, a corpse gazed back at me. The look in his eyes, as they stared into mine, has never left me." And this is why the Oprah novels are ultimately dishonest, offering false consolation that can only lead to deeper despair. For in the end, without God, the sufferer will not find community, courage, newfound love, and gambling profits. She will find instead a void; not self-renewal, but the empty eyes of a corpse. C1

Susan Wise Bauer is the author of two novels: The Revolt (Word) and Though the Darkness Hide Thee (Multnomah). She teaches literature at the College of William and Mary.

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

CRANMER THEOLOGICAL HOUSE

P. O. Box 52591
Shreveport, LA 71135

An Anglican School of Ministry in the Tradition of the English Reformation

FOR INFORMATION CALL:
1-800-REC-0910
(732)

www.cranmerhouse.edu
rsutton@morrisdickson.com

An outstanding opportunity for residence study with leading Christian Scholars. An EARN-
WHILE-YOU-LEARN program is available for incoming students
in the 1998-1999 academic year.

SERVE YOUR COUNTRY WHILE STILL IN SEMINARY.

The Army needs ministers and seminary students to meet the spiritual needs of America's soldiers and their families.

The Army and Army Reserve have even developed a special program for seminary students that won't interfere with your studies. It's called the Army Chaplain Candidate program. And it enables you to use your summer vacation to minister to the diverse needs of America's troops here in the U.S. or overseas.

The need is great, but the rewards are even greater. For specific information call 1 800 USA ARMY or visit the Army Chaplain website at www.goarmy.com

ARMY CHAPLAIN CORPS
BE ALL YOU CAN BE

COVENANT

ROOTED IN GRACE FOR A LIFETIME OF MINISTRY

ROOTED IN GRACE FOR A LIFETIME OF MINISTRY

Scholarship Committed

The academic reputation of Wheaton College Graduate School is no accident. Distinguished faculty, outstanding graduates, and renowned authors have made it what it is today—an educational experience that challenges students to integrate personal faith with academic discipline.

We believe that academic theory—like Christian faith—is meaningless without practical application. For more information about the graduate programs at

to Servanthood.

Wheaton College please call,
1-800-888-0141 or e-mail
us at: gradadm@wheaton.edu.
Check out our website
at: www.wheaton.edu.

Since 1860
For Christ and
His Kingdom
Wheaton
College
GRADUATE SCHOOL
WHEATON, ILLINOIS

Master of Arts degree in
• Biblical Archaeology
• Biblical and Theological Studies
• Teaching • Clinical Psychology
• Educational Ministries
• Evangelism • Interdisciplinary Studies
• Missions and Intercultural Studies

Doctoral degree in
Clinical Psychology (PsyD)

Certificate programs in
• Advanced Biblical Studies
• Leadership and Camp Ministry
• Teaching English as a Second Language

COVENANT THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

and the Francis Schaeffer Institute

Master of Divinity
Master of Arts
Master of Arts in Counseling
Graduate Certificate
Master of Theology
Doctor of Ministry

External Studies Available

1-800-264-8064

12330 Conway Rd. • St. Louis, MO 63141

Website: www.covenantseminary.edu

E-mail: admissions@covenantseminary.edu

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

TOOLS for Effective Ministry

Dallas Seminary's graduate programs are designed to give you the tools you need to communicate God's Word clearly and effectively.

Call (800) 992-0998 for a free brochure.

DALLAS
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY

MA BIB/THEO STUDIES

Biblical/Theological Studies If you long to know the mind of God, you must learn to use your own. The Biblical/Theological Studies program teaches you not just what to think, but how. When you come to RTS, you'll study the Word with men and women who aren't afraid of asking hard questions. And you'll learn how to make your Christian faith practical and effective amid the skepticism of our post-modern culture.

In Jackson 800-543-2705
In Orlando 800-752-4382
In Charlotte 800-755-2429
RTS@rts.edu

REFORMED
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
Make It Count

Preparing Pastors Is Our Specialty

Our Distinctives:

- ◆ Theologically Conservative
- ◆ Dispensational
- ◆ Premillennial
- ◆ Moderately Calvinistic
- ◆ Biblical Languages Emphasized

CALVARY

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

15800 Calvary Road, Kansas City MO 64147
Call Toll Free 1-800-326-3960

BIBLICAL

PREPARING LEADERS FOR LIFE

BIBLICAL'S MISSION:

to serve the church by preparing leaders
who accurately interpret
the bible, live out its truth,
and communicate its
message to the world.

BIBLICAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY
200 North Main Street • Hatfield, Pennsylvania 19440
800-235-4021 or 215-368-5000
admissions@biblical.edu • home page www.biblical.edu

Knox Is Here For You!

"Apply your heart to instruction"
(Proverbs 23.2)

Knox is here with solid
Reformation theology to equip you to change the world for Christ.

• Doctor of Ministry
• Master of Divinity
• Biblical and Theological Studies
• Certificate in Biblical Studies

1-800-344-5669
E-mail: knox@crpc.org

KNOX
THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

Fort Lauderdale, Florida
D. James Kennedy, Chancellor

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

A Graduate School with
M. Phil. F. and Ph. D. 's
in these areas:

Philosophical Theology
History of Philosophy
Philosophy of Science
Aesthetics
Political Theory
Systematic Theology
Biblical Studies
Systematic Philosophy
One-year master's in
Worldview/Education.

For more info contact

Institute for Christian Studies

229 College Street
Toronto, Ontario, Canada M5T 1R4
(416)979-2331

The NEXT GREAT LEAP
for equipping church leaders
is really
a STEP BACK.

Back to the way Jesus himself
equipped and trained the 12. At DENVER
SEMINARY, we're following the example of the Master Professor with an emphasis on
hands-on learning directed by EXPERIENCED
MENTORS. Learn more about the seminary
education with an innovative approach to knowing, being and doing. We borrowed it
from the best!

1-800-922-3040 Ext. 278
e-mail: admit@densem.edu
www.gospelcom.net/densem/

DENVER SEMINARY

P.O. Box 10,000 • Denver, CO 80250

PREPARE FOR IMPACT.

If you want to have an impact on the world, choose the seminary
that can have the greatest impact on
you. At Columbia, we focus first and foremost on your spiritual life, then challenge you to academic excellence
and give you practical ministry skills.
Our customized degree programs offer
the flexibility you need to build on your past as you prepare for the future.

Become a world Christian who serves God with excellence. Call
Columbia today at 1-800-777-2227.

Columbia Biblical Seminary
& Graduate School of Missions

A division of Columbia International University
7435 Monticello Rd. • P.O. Box 3122 • Columbia, SC 29230-3122
803.754.4100 • Toll Free 1.800.777.2227 • www.ciu.edu
Preparing World Christians To Know Him And To Make Him Known
CALL FOR OUR EXTENSION CATALOG

The World Is
Our Campus

Luther
Rice
Seminary

*The Most Recognized
Name in Christian
Distance Education*

- Bachelor
- Master
- Doctor of Ministry

Luther Rice Seminary
3038 Evans Mill Road
Lithonia, GA 30038
1-770-484-1204
1-800-442-1577
E-mail: lrs@lrs.edu
Web Page: www.lrs.edu

Serving Since 1962

Fast-Track Masters.

Long-Term Results.

If you want to earn an MA, but can't find the time, Simpson Graduate School has the answer. It's the MA in a modular format — one-week sessions spaced over three years. Or, simply sign up for individual sessions that suit your needs. For pastors, worship leaders, counselors, missionary candidates, church education staff, church planters, evangelists, administrators, and lay persons, these programs emphasize practical experience and spiritual enrichment.

For a brochure call, 800-598-2493.

Busy minister

Simpson's modular MA

Spiritual enrichment

Practical experience

Be a more effective minister

MA in Christian Ministry

Church Education
Church Planting & Growth
Diversified Ministry
Pastoral Counseling
Pastoral Ministry
Preaching
Worship Ministry
Youth Ministry

MA in Missiology

Graduate School

2211 College View Drive, Redding, CA 96003
800-598-2493 530-224-5606 Fax: 530-224-5627

www.simpsonca.edu

SEMINARY AND GRAD SCHOOL/COLLEGE DIRECTORY

THE • UNSEMINARY

Who's he?

He's John G. Stackhouse, Jr., listed in Canadian Who's Who as an award-winning historian, theologian, and journalist. But here at Regent, he's "the new guy" who teaches Christianity and contemporary culture.

Come study with our new Sangwoo Youtong Chee Professor of Theology, John Stackhouse, who is equally at ease writing theology and speaking on a talk show. When it comes to Christ and culture, he knows what's what.

Admissions Dept
5800 University Blvd., Vancouver, BC Canada V6T 2E4
☎ (604) 224-3245 Fax 224-3097 Toll free 1-800-663-8664
Website: www.regent-college.edu
Admissions e-mail: admissions@regent-college.edu

 Regent College

AN INTERNATIONAL
GRADUATE SCHOOL
OF CHRISTIAN STUDIES

A Change For the Better!

Geneva College announces a revision of its longstanding M.A. in Psychology. This new 60-hour Counseling Masters will help students as they apply for licensure as professional counselors in most states.

The quality remains unchanged, as does the integration of theory and practice within a Christian worldview.

Come and prepare to counsel
from a Christian perspective.

Geneva College

Masters in Counseling

150
GENEVA COLLEGE
PRO CHRISTO ET PATRIA

For information:
Geneva College
Beaver Falls, PA 15010
1-800-847-8255
724-847-6571
rjware@geneva.edu

Carolina University of Theology

EARN YOUR DEGREE AT HOME

YOU ALREADY LIVE ON CAMPUS!

Going to seminary or graduate school once meant packing up the family station wagon and the rental truck so you could move to a strange city, get a minimum wage job, and go in debt. Those days are over! Through Carolina University you can complete an accredited Bachelors of Arts, Masters, or Doctorate degree without leaving your home, your ministry, or your job.

TUITION FINANCING AVAILABLE

AREAS OF STUDY INCLUDE:

*Biblical StudiesMinistryChristian Education
TheologyChristian Counseling Psychology*

FOR MORE INFORMATION WRITE OR CALL

Carolina University of Theology

505-B Woodlawn Street

Belmont, NC 28012

(704) 827-1740 (704) 827-1802 FAX

E-Mail CUT@TNTIE.COM

Multnomah Biblical Seminary

MISSION- Women's Ministry

DR. PAMELA REEVE: MBS

Women's Ministry program adviser; pioneered the first women's ministry program in the U.S. at Multnomah and chaired the first women's ministry conference in the West; best-selling author of "Faith Is..."

MULTNOMAH BIBLICAL SEMINARY is the perfect "mission headquarters," offering the premier Master's degree specifically designed to address the unique needs of women. If you want to join a faith-building community and put solid biblical training to work in a vital ministry internship, then you must explore Multnomah's M.A. in Women's Ministry. There may be no better place to prepare for the mission God has for you.

MULTNOMAH BIBLICAL SEMINARY
Where Ministry is the Word

Toll Free: 1-800-275-4672
Email: admiss@multnomah.edu
Internet: www.multnomah.edu

Church Chair Industries, Inc.

Cathedral Stacker

Free Chair Test Compare
(100+)

Royal Stacker

Plush, tall backs over 1/2" plywood.

Free Lumbar Back Support

Now Only
$25.25
100+

Now Only
$26.25
100+

Design Stacker #1

Plush 4 & 5" deep foam
seats over 1/2" plywood.

Oak Pew Chair

Call 1-800-331-5411
For Free Catalog & Steel
Frame Sample Chair

GREAT PEW LIKE CHAIRS OAK OR STEEL FRAMES
LOCKS TOGETHER TO FORM A CONTINUOUS BENCH

DESIGN PATENT NO.
DES. 333,7333

OPTIONS

Arms

Kneelers

Book & Card Pockets

Build Your Worth without RISKING Your Values

Only one Web site helps you make money—and make it count. At crosswalk.com, you'll find world-class investment and planning tools based on sound Christian principles. You'll discover which companies or mutual funds support your values—and which don't. You'll chat with leading-edge experts, make online investments, check out insurance planning and personalized quote features, and even create a personal home page with your up-to-the-minute portfolio status. No other financial Web site offers services so comprehensive—yet so centered on God's Word. Invest some time at www.crosswalk.com today. And manage your money without making compromises.

- Values-Based Investing Research
- Market Quotes, Research & Charts
- Online Financial Experts
- Financial Planning Tools & Calculators
- Online Investing
- Exclusive Values-Based Products & Services

MONEY

 crosswalk.com

THE MARKETPLACE

Cost: 46 cents per character (each space & punctuation counts as a character); avg. 45 characters per line. Min. $39.10 (85 characters). CT blind box number available at $6 each insertion; checkmark box ☒ $14 each insertion. Supply permanent street address and phone number. Ads set display style: $276/column inch. Combination package available for CHRISTIANITY TODAY, CHRISTIAN READER, & YOUR CHURCH: 2 magazines—44 cents per character per insertion; 3 magazines—42 cents per character per insertion. Display style: 2 magazines—$263 per insertion; 3 magazines—$252 per insertion. All classified ads will now be automatically placed on CHRISTIANITY ONLINE at no additional charge. IMPORTANT: Prepayment & written confirmation required to process ads. Visa, MasterCard, or personal check accepted; fax (630) 260-9401. Employment ads are given priority. All other ads will be placed in first available issue. Deadline for reservation or cancellation is seven weeks prior to actual issue date. Address correspondence to: Classified Advertising, Christianity Today, 465 Gunderson Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

DIRECTOR OF YOUTH MINISTRIES

Position available for full-time youth director. Position requires a dedicated, gifted leader, mentor, and administrator to coordinate the various gifts and activities of the youth as well as the core group of volunteers. Experience and degree in Bible training preferred. Send résumé to: First Presbyterian Church, 512 S. 8th Street, Brainerd, MN 56401, Attn: Tim Lake.

ASSOCIATE PASTOR OF ADULT MINISTRIES

Have a passion for adult discipleship? How about Christian education, small groups, and spiritual gifts? Does a bit of care and counseling on the side and a few Sundays of preaching sound perfect? Do you believe in the inclusive call from our Triune God to all people that Jesus Christ is our Lord and Savior? Far north suburban Chicagoland multid denominational community church may be looking for you. Historic and growing church with a blossoming variety of active, evolving ministries. Send résumés to Dr. Paul Kattner, Chairperson, Pastoral Search Committee, c/o Gurnee Community Church, 4555 W. Grand Ave., Gurnee, IL 60031.

ASSOCIATE PASTOR FOR DISCIPLESHIP AND OUTREACH

Covenant Presbyterian Church, an active, Christ-centered 550-member congregation in Huntsville, AL, a growing community of high technology research, seeks an associate pastor who desires to further God's kingdom while working with all ages of adults. We desire a leader with a contagious faith and good communication/organizational skills. Provide leadership for adult discipleship in Sunday school, Wednesday night, and small groups; develop strong young adult ministry (married and singles); develop strong outreach to community and beyond; work with a wonderfully challenging and encouraging congregation and staff leadership team. Send PIF or résumé to Phil Boss, APNC Chair, 301 Drake Ave. SE, Huntsville, AL 35802.

FULL-TIME CHILDREN'S PASTOR

Vineyard Christian Fellowship of Columbus, a growing, empowered, evangelical church of 3,500+, is seeking a children's pastor for our grade-school children. Contact Linda Heselon, c/o Vineyard Christian Fellowship, 6000 Cooper Rd., Westerville, OH 43081; (614) 890-0000.

TIMOTHY CHRISTIAN SCHOOLS, located in Elmhurst, Illinois, on a beautiful suburban campus twenty miles west of Chicago, is a well-established institution with more than 1,000 students enrolled in K-12. We are seeking qualified, committed candidates interested in serving as the preschool through 8th grade principal beginning August 1, 1999. Please send letters of inquiry by December 15, 1998, to: Search Committee, Timothy Christian Schools, 188 W. Butterfield Road, Elmhurst, IL 60126; phone: 630-833-4616; fax: 630-833-9238.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

SENIOR PASTOR

The Fellowship of Jesus Christ, a 200-member, nondenominational, Spirit-filled congregation, located in a culturally diverse northern suburb of Cincinnati, is seeking a senior pastor who will lead us into the 21st century. In addition to preaching and teaching, strengths must include visioning, shepherding, equipping, and evangelizing. Our worship is contemporary. We have an effective prayer and small-group ministry. Over 1/4 of our congregation are children and youth. We are committed to outreach programs in our neighborhood. Qualified individuals should send résumé and cover letter to Search Committee, Fellowship of Jesus Christ, P.O. Box 367858, Cincinnati, OH 45236.

PASTOR OF WORSHIP & MUSIC

Growing church of 600 near Sacramento, CA. Bible-centered, loving, grace filled. Lead congregation in worship, praise band, choir. Strong staff. Send résumé to First Baptist Church, 19 S. Central, Lodi, CA 95240.

EXECUTIVE PASTOR

A grace-oriented evangelical church (1,100 in attendance) in the wooded hills of northern New Jersey seeks top associate to direct and develop 6 pastoral and 9 support staff, administer church affairs, and strategically plan with senior pastor. Looking for a leader who can motivate people and finish projects. Seminary degree and large-church experience preferred. Résumés to: Art Kolmodin, Jacksonville Chapel, 264 Jacksonville Rd., Lincoln Park, NJ 07035. Visit us at www.jacksonvillechapel.org.

FACULTY POSITIONS: New Testament, counseling. Appropriate doctorate required. Write: Academic Dean, Alliance Biblical Seminary; Box 1095; Manila 1099; Philippines. E-mail: ABS@jmf.org.ph

TRINITY EPISCOPAL SCHOOL for Ministry in Ambridge, PA, is seeking to fill three faculty positions beginning with the 1999-2000 school year: Old Testament, Theology and Ethics, and Pastoral Theology. Also, we are seeking a Registrar: Admissions/Financial Aid Officer to begin January 1999. Trinity is an evangelical Anglican seminary committed to "forming Christian leaders for mission." Non-Anglicans are welcome to apply. Send letter of interest and curriculum vitae to Dr. Stephen Noll, Academic Dean, Trinity Episcopal School for Ministry, 311 Eleventh St., Ambridge, PA, 15003.

PASTOR OF DISCIPLE-MAKING/Small Groups: 900-member Wheaton Evangelical Free Church in Wheaton, IL, seeks full-time small-group ministries expert with a heart for disciple-making to grow small-group ministries and oversee adult ministries. Experience in large church preferred. Send résumé and small-group ministries philosophy to Nancy Sanders, WEFC, P.O. 70, Wheaton, IL 60189.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

TRINITY EVANGELICAL DIVINITY SCHOOL announces the following faculty searches: Church History: One-year, non-tenure-track sabbatical replacement for 1999-2000. Qualifications: graduate theological degree, Ph.D. (or equivalent) in historical studies, significant teaching experience, and publishing record. Expertise in Patristics or Reformation/Church History. TEDS's strategic plan calls for the future addition of a tenure-track position in this department. Applicants will be assessed with this possibility in view. School of World Mission and Evangelism: Tenure-track position starting 1999-2000 for a missiologist competent to teach in master's and Ph.D. programs and supervise Ph.D. dissertations in missiology, cultural studies, and missionary education. Extensive experience in intercultural ministry and Ph.D. (or equivalent) degree in intercultural ministry is required. Faculty must sign Trinity's doctrinal statement, which affirms biblical inerrancy and premillennialism. Résumés to: Dr. W. Bingham Hunter, Dean, 2065 Half Day Road, Deerfield, IL 60015.

GROWING EFCA in central Wisconsin seeks youth pastor. Average attendance 150. Send profile to Living Hope EFC, 132 E. 4th St., Neillsville, WI 54456.

ASSISTANT PASTOR

Growing, recently built (spring 1998), seeker-oriented church of 300 with a contemporary/traditional blend, seeks a "Barnabas" with a heart for discipling, to develop ministries of education, assimilation, small groups, spiritual gifts, and shepherding. Contact: Walter Holloway, Hunt Valley Church (PCA), 13015 Beaver Dam Road, Hunt Valley, MD 21030. E-mail: wmholloway@worldnet.att.net

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES: Advent Group Ministries, a Christian social service agency located in San Jose, CA, seeks resident counselors, night counselors, summer interns for adolescent residential treatment programs. Competitive salary, benefits. Residential positions provide room & board. Contact Carol Fryer: (408) 281-0708; (1-800) 98ADVENT; fax: (408) 281-2658.

ASSOCIATE PASTOR, with emphasis on children/youth and their families, is being sought by the First Baptist Church of Mt. Holly, NJ. We desire a person or couple with training and experience who will participate in and oversee these ministries. We are a multistaffed, evangelical, growing congregation with 500-600 adults in worship and over 100 children and youth. We embrace contemporary and traditional styles of worship with an emphasis on cell groups and Bible studies. Competitive salary and benefits (ABC/USA) are offered. Send résumés and inquiries to: Search Committee, First Baptist Church, 1341 Woodlane Road, Mt. Holly, NJ. 08060; Fax: (609) 267-5747; E-mail to FBCMH@SKYHIGH.com. Visit us at our Web site: www.fbc-mt-holly.com

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

DEAN, COLLEGE OF ARTS AND SCIENCES
Union University continues its search and invites nominations and applications for the position of dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. The college is the largest academic unit of the university, comprising ten departments and approximately 70 full-time faculty. In addition to responsibilities in the areas of performance evaluation, long-range planning, budget planning and administration, professional development, salary, promotion, and tenure, the dean also provides support to department chairs in recruiting and selection of new faculty and program development and evaluation. The dean is the College of Arts and Sciences' principal liaison with other academic and administrative units within the university and is the college's representative to many off-campus constituent groups. Applicants must have an earned terminal degree in one of the disciplines of the College of Arts and Sciences; a research doctorate is preferred. Those applying must have five years of full-time teaching experience, with a proven record of excellence in teaching, interdisciplinary perspective, and commitment to the objectives of Christian liberal arts education. A strong record of effective academic administration in higher education at or above the department chair level is required. The successful candidate will have a history of vibrant innovative leadership, communication skills, and openness with faculty and other groups on and off campus. In addition to evidence of professional achievement, applicants' academic background and scholarly pursuits should warrant appointment to the faculty of one of the disciplines in the college. Union University is located in Jackson, Tennessee, and has a student population of over 2,300. Now, one of Tennessee's fastest-growing colleges, Union is built on a 175-year heritage of academic excellence and Christian commitment. The undergraduate liberal arts curriculum is central to the mission of the university. All faculty and staff are professing Christians and are expected to be active members of an evangelical Christian church. Review of applications will begin fall 1998, and will be accepted until the position is filled. To apply, send a letter of application, curriculum vitae, and names of three references to: Cynthia Powell Jayne, Chair, Dean of Arts and Sciences Screening Committee, Union University, 1050 Union University Drive, Jackson, TN 38305; fax: 901-661-7175; E-mail: cjayne@uu.edu. For more information about Union University, please see our Web site at www.uu.edu. Union University is an Equal Opportunity Employer. Women and minorities are encouraged to apply.

GRAND RAPIDS BAPTIST SEMINARY
invites inquiries for a tenure-track position in the Division of Pastoral Studies. The successful candidate will possess an earned research doctorate in a relevant discipline and have significant pastoral experience. Please contact the Vice President of the seminary for a position announcement, which includes a list of qualifications. Inquiries will be received until December 31, 1998: 1001 East Beltline NE, Grand Rapids, MI 49525.

looking for pastoral staff?
seeking a new ministry?
www.ministrysearch.com
e-mail version also available:
info@ministrysearch.com

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

CHIEF ENGINEER—CHRISTIAN RADIO NETWORK

Chief engineer position available for quality Kansas City-based Christian radio network/group. Position requires strong background in construction, installation, and maintenance of studios, AM/FM transmitters, STLs, digital audio, DCS computer automation, satellite networks, and translators. Min. 5 years exp. desired. FCC General Class license or SBE Certification a plus. Excellent character and professional references expected. Some travel involved. Excellent compensation with full benefits. Please send cover letter, résumé, salary history, and references to: Personnel Director, Bott Radio Network, 10550 Barkley, Overland Park, KS 66212; fax: (913)-642-1319. Bott Radio Network is an Equal Opportunity Employer.

THE BILLY GRAHAM EVANGELISTIC ASSOCIATION, located in Minneapolis, MN, is seeking a qualified candidate for the position of associate producer for its new daily radio program Decision Today. The program is a magazine style, contemporary one-half hour show featuring reports of evangelism and Christian activity from around the world. The associate producer will be responsible for writing and producing compelling program segments for the daily program. The ideal candidate will have strong writing skills and at least two years experience in the area of radio production, along with excellent communication skills. The Billy Graham Evangelistic Association is an Equal Opportunity Employer. Send résumé to: Recruiter, B.G.E.A., 1300 Harmon Pl., Minneapolis, MN 55403.

PRESIDENTIAL SEARCH

The Agros Foundation is looking for a president. Agros is an international Christian nonprofit organization committed to breaking the cycle of poverty of the rural poor in developing countries by helping them buy land and build villages. The person will provide executive leadership and operational management in a rapidly growing international organization. Proven leadership experience necessary. Send résumé to Presidential Search, The Agros Foundation, P.O. Box 95367, Seattle, WA 98145; fax (206) 528-0393; Web site: www.agros.org/agros.

NATIONAL CHURCH PLACEMENT SERVICE

Churches and Ministers are connecting with CMPN, P.O. Box 1132, Barre, VT 05641 (802) 476-8902.

EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR, for 35-year-old creation science ministry based in the Midwest. Ministry promotes the truth of divine creation & global flood through a daily radio program, written resources, & seminars. Successful candidate must be degreed, possess excellent communication and fund-development skills. Send résumé & cover letter to Don Otis @ Creative Resources, P.O. Box 1665, Sandpoint, ID 83864.

IN-COUNTRY COORDINATOR for Extension Ministries of Willow Creek Community Church, So. Barrington, IL, to live and work in Costa Rica developing strategic partnerships with national ministries committed to holistic ministry through the local church. Must be Spanish-speaking with experience in Latin America working in community and church development and be familiar with WCCC. Will administer short-term teams and facilitate development of ministry network. Contact David Bulger, WCCC/EM, 67 E. Algonquin Rd., So. Barrington, IL 60010; (847) 765-5000.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

SOLO PASTOR

Sierra Vista Presbyterian Church, located in the sunny Southwest, is seeking a dynamic pastor to join us in moving into the 21st century. We are an 185-member congregation of believers anticipating the discernment of that individual who will work with us to lead this congregation with enthusiasm, energy, and dedication to God's work in this world. We seek that individual who is deeply rooted in faith; has a sense of humor and adventure; is open and loving; and has a vision for the future. We are a congregation dedicated to proclaiming and studying the Word, nurturing and sustaining our spiritual life in groups and as individuals, caring for our neighbors, and working toward the reconciliation of the world to the words and examples of Jesus Christ. Send PIF to PNC, Sierra Vista Presbyterian Church, 150 W. 28th St., Yuma AZ 85364.

BIBLICAL STUDIES FACULTY POSITION

Ouachita Baptist University invites applications for two full-time, tenure-track teaching positions available September 1, 1999. Requirements: Ph.D. in OT, NT, or related field; secondary area of study, or experience in practical ministries helpful; commitment both to scholarship and to teaching/discipling undergraduates essential. OBU is a Christian liberal arts university with over 200 Christian Studies majors and total enrollment of 1,600. Our department offers majors in Biblical Studies and Ministry, as well as minors in Hebrew and Greek. Applications, including vita and references, should be addressed to Danny Hays, Chair, Faculty Search Committee, Box 3677, Ouachita Baptist University, Arkadelphia, AR 71998.

SIMPSON COLLEGE (Redding, CA) anticipates several FACULTY POSITIONS open for August 1999 due to growing enrollment: Youth Ministries, Church History/Theology, Psychology-Clinical, Psychology-General, Mathematics. Candidates should (1) be committed to the integration of faith and academic excellence, (2) be supportive of mission and in agreement with the doctrinal statement of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, and (3) evidence a strong interest in teaching and working with students. Application forms may be requested from the Provost, Simpson College, 2211 College View Drive, Redding, CA 96003; phone: (530) 224-5600; fax: (530) 224-2051; E-mail: gbrwn@simpsonca.edu. Women and minorities are encouraged to apply.

MINISTRY PLACEMENT for pastors & associates or churches. Call (503) 357-7830 or Believer's Dynamics, POB 596, Forest Grove, OR 97116. Since 1977.

TEACH IN JAPAN: Reach Asians for Christ. Teach in English. Several K-12 & ESL teacher openings. Mission school of 400; 2-year contracts. Must raise partial support. Write Dr. Bob Greninger, Okinawa Christian School, P.O. Box 14250, Gainesville, FL 32604; (1-800) 446-6423.

ASSOCIATE PASTOR MUSIC AND WORSHIP

The First Baptist Church of White Lake, Michigan (suburban Detroit), is looking for an associate pastor in Music and Worship. He would be responsible to develop and enhance the church's overall music ministry (encompassing choral, instrumental, and praise groups; drama; and community outreach) and lead the congregation in vibrant and meaningful "blended" worship. Please send résumés to: Terry Rudd, c/o FBC, 9000 Highland Road, White Lake, MI 48386; fax: (248) 698-1399; E-mail: fbc@flash.net

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

YONGE STREET MISSION, a Christian humanitarian organization bringing God's peace, dignity, and justice to those living with need in the inner city, requires a Drop-In coordinator. This strategic role develops ministry programs to help street-involved youth access resources, meet basic needs, and move away from the street. Ideal candidate is mature, energetic, loves teens; excellent supervisory/organizational skills; able to take initiative/set priorities; strong informal counseling/group facilitation skills; crisis intervention exp.; some eve./wkend work. Degree in SW or related field; 5 yrs. exp. with marginalized youth; able to recruit/supervise volunteers. Fax résumé to D. Adcock, 416-929-7204; 270 Gerrard St. E, Toronto, ON M5A 2G4. Replies to qualified candidates only.

FULL-TIME PASTOR OF WORSHIP AND MUSIC. Evangelical, nondenominational church in suburban Chicago seeks God's man to lead and develop a thriving worship and music ministry in 1,000+ congregation. Strongly committed to traditional and contemporary worship styles. Responsibilities: service planning/leading choirs, music outreach, instrumental groups, development of lay leadership. Warm platform presence, pastor's heart, spiritual maturity, and previous worship/music ministry experience a must. Résumé to: Davis Duggins, Calvary Memorial Church, 931 Lake St., Oak Park, IL 60301; ph: (708) 386-3900; fx: (708) 386-4182; E-mail: CMCDDE@aol.com

FACULTY POSITIONS WAYNESBURG COLLEGE

- Accounting: Teaching tax, auditing, accounting information systems; master's (or JD) required, CPA and experience in forensic accounting or fraud investigation preferred; primarily undergraduate courses with possibility of MBA teaching.
- Education: Two positions: department chair and elementary education; administering and teaching in variety of content. Doctorate preferred; school experience required.
- Graphics & Photography: Teach imaging, computer graphics, photography, and related areas. Master's required; design experience preferred.
- Physics: Teaching Physics (nonmajors), some computer science or mathematics, advising pre-engineering students; doctorate preferred.

See home page at <http://waynesburg.edu>. All positions require commitment to Christian higher education, breadth of teaching skills, plus normal full-time faculty responsibilities. Send CV, copies of transcripts, letter addressing qualifications and philosophy of education, and three references to Richard Stanislaw, Vice President for Academic Affairs, Waynesburg College, Waynesburg, PA 15370 or stanislaw@waynesburg.edu

PASTOR OF CHILDREN AND FAMILY LIFE sought for growing, evangelical community church in southwest Portland suburbs. Sunday attendance 400 adults and 200 children/youth. Contemporary, seeker-sensitive, purpose-driven ministry. Church motto: "Teamwork in Extending Christ's Love." Send résumé and cover letter to Children/Family Search Committee, Mountain Park Church, 40 McNary Parkway, Lake Oswego, OR 97035.

JSE MINISTRY AND LIFE SKILLS to reach the unreached hurting, broken, and lost through creative access to Asia/SE Asia. How? Contact: Gary Brewer, Mission to Unreached Peoples, toll free at (1-888) 847-1950 or e-mail: mupinfo@mup.org or HTTP://www.mup.org/mupinfo/

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

AN EVANGELICAL FREE CHURCH in northwest suburban Chicago seeks pastor of Worship and Music to provide leadership in worship, to direct the music program of the entire church, and to shepherd those involved in worship and music ministries. Music degree with advanced training preferred. Previous experience in worship and music ministry required. We are a growing body of over 600 with a diverse age and interests profile. This is a senior-level staff position and compensation will include commensurate salary, health care, vacation, continuing education, and retirement benefits. For an information packet and application please reply to Worship and Music Pastor Search Committee, The Village Church of Barrington, 1600 E. Main Street, Barrington, IL 60010; phone: 847-381-5221; fax: 847-381-5288; E-mail: vcdbave@juno.com

SPECIAL EDUCATION

For fall, 1999, tenure-track asst. professor to teach general special education courses and provide supervision. Potential work in special ed. M.Ed. program. Doctorate preferred—ABD may apply. Teaching experience with special needs students required. Applicants must be committed to an evangelical Christian profession of faith and to applying that to their discipline. Inquire: Romaine Jesky-Smith, Chair Education Search Committee, Geneva College, Beaver Falls, PA 15010 or E-mail: ris@geneva.edu. Women and ethnic group members meeting the qualifications are encouraged to apply.

DIRECTOR OF CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

Emphasis on Children & Youth Ministry Dynamic, growing church (PCUSA) of 500+ is seeking a full-time D.C.E. for expanding program for all age levels. We desire an energetic leader who loves children and can relate well to all ages. Master's degree and minimum of three years parish experience preferred. Generous compensation package. Join us in Kendall, Miami's upscale southwest suburb, for an exciting opportunity in ministry. Send résumé and cover letter to: Central Presbyterian Church, Attn: Dr. Kathryn Roach, CE Moderator, 12455 S.W. 104 Street, Miami, FL 33186; fax: (305) 598-1239.

DIRECTOR OF CHILDREN & FAMILIES MINISTRIES for thriving Baptist General Conference church, Avon, CT. Sunday worship attendance 950. Director responsible for ministry to 492 birth-5th grade children and their families. Understanding of child developmental stages and family dynamics as they relate to ministry necessary. Master's degree in Christian Education or related comparable field experience required, including supervision of staff members and volunteers. Creativity, excellent leadership, and interpersonal skills essential. Send résumé to: Nicholas Parisi, Valley Community Baptist Church, 590 W. Avon Rd., Avon, CT 06001; (860) 673-6826.

GREAT NEWS! Samaritan House for Boys in Stuart, FL, is expanding our program and is in need of another set of house parents. We are seeking a committed, married Christian couple to minister to boys ages 8 through 12 in a 5-day residential program. Along with training, we provide complete housing, living expenses, salaries, medical insurance, and an IRA contribution. Please contact Orin Linde, Director, Samaritan House for Boys, 1490 S.E. Cove Rd., Stuart, FL 34997; E-mail: linde@gate.net

MAKE A CHANGE! Teach English, business, or computers in China, Russia, Muslim Asia, or C. Europe. Call ESI at (1-800) 895-7955. All college majors/degrees welcome.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

UNIVERSITY PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH (PCUSA), a 3,800+ congregation in Seattle, Washington, is seeking two positions to lead the Department of Urban and Global Mission. Senior Director/Associate Pastor of Urban and Global Mission should have a minimum of 10 years cross-cultural experience as an individual contributor and leader in urban and global mission ministry. This person will be senior member, communicator, leader, and pastor of the department. (This position will be selected first.) Assistant Director/Associate Pastor of Urban and Global Mission should have a minimum of 5 years of similar experience and will have an urban or global focus area that complements the senior director. Both candidates should have the following qualifications: deep personal love for Jesus Christ; ability to lead a department with a staff of 12, over 400 volunteers, and a substantial budget that supports over 70 career missionaries; proven team-building and pastoral skills with staff, missionaries and local, national and international partners; ability to articulate a vision of mission to equip, encourage, and work alongside lay volunteers and career missionaries; effective preacher and teacher of the Scriptures and biblical mission mandate; personal, hands-on, cross-cultural field and administrative ministry experience. Please submit résumé and references to: University Presbyterian Church, Attn: Christi Scovill, 4540 15th Ave. NE, Seattle, WA 98105; (206) 524-7300 or e-mail to: christis@upc.org. Web page: www.upc.org

GRADUATING COLLEGE SENIORS are invited to apply for the 26th annual Pulliam Journalism Fellowships. Twenty journalism or liberal arts graduates in the August 1998-June 1999 class will receive ten-week summer internships. Stipend is $5,250. Early-admissions application postmark deadline is Nov. 15, 1998. By Dec. 15, 1998, up to five early-admissions winners will be notified. All other entries must be postmarked by March 1, 1999. For an application packet, write: Russell B. Pulliam, Pulliam Fellowship Director, The Indianapolis News, P.O. Box 145, Indianapolis, IN 46206-0145.

Marketing

Director of Marketing

Cook Communications Ministries, the leader in Sunday School curriculum publishing, is seeking a Marketing Director. Position requires a high energy level with strong marketing and organizational skills. These include strategic and tactical market planning and execution, budgeting, accurate analysis of market research, team leadership skills, and a heart for the church with experience in local church Christian education programs. Must have 5+ years' proven marketing/leadership experience and a marketing degree. A general knowledge of the publishing industry is a plus.

Send or fax resume to:

Cook Communications Ministries
Attn: HRM
4050 Lee Vance View
Colorado Springs, CO 80918
Fax: 719 536-3279

Cook Communications Ministries
EOE

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

CHICAGO METROPOLITAN CENTER DIRECTOR

CMC is a study and internship program for students from a coalition of six Christian liberal arts colleges in Iowa (Central, Dordt, Northwestern), Michigan (Calvin, Hope), and Illinois (Trinity Christian). The position is full-time (12 months) beginning July 1, 1999. Responsibilities include coordinating staffing, budgets, education programs, and student recruitment. Preference will be given to candidates with doctorates, experience in teaching and experiential education, and a strong commitment to the Reformed Christian faith. Apply to Burton Rozema, VPAA, Trinity Christian College, 6601 West College Drive, Palos Heights, IL 60463; (708) 239-4760; E-mail: Burt.Rozema@trnity.edu. CMC encourages applications without regard to ethnic background, disability, gender, or national origin.

DO YOU NOW, or have you in the past, sold institutional organs at the retail level? A major manufacturer of electronic institutional organs is seeking to fill an entry-level marketing position to work educating a nationwide group of dealers in proper demonstration techniques and modern marketing strategies. The following skills are vital to be considered for our selection process:

- A musical background in organ studies is required. The ideal candidate will be able to perform a variety of music, including contemporary Christian, gospel, and classical.
- Knowledge of MIDI and its applications would be a plus.
- Extensive travel is required.
- Relocation may be necessary.

Please send your résumé in confidence to: CT Classified Ads Box 217, 465 Gundersen Dr., Carol Stream, IL 60188.

SENIOR PASTOR

Winnetka Bible Church is a strong, vibrant faith community of 600 attendees located in the beautiful Chicago/North Shore suburb of Winnetka. We're looking for a deeply committed evangelical who has a big vision, a big heart, and a willingness to lead a talented staff and committed congregation. Our new pastor needs to communicate biblical truth effectively and be capable of thinking strategically and creatively about how a regional church should do ministry. Our staff is in place, programs are in full swing, the congregation is growing in the midst of our transition, and we're financially healthy. For more information, please contact: Ray Zeiss, Chair of the Pastoral Search Committee, by writing him at WBC, 555 Birch St., Winnetka, IL 60093; E-mail: crz528@nwnu.edu. Confidentiality guaranteed.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

SPREAD GOD'S WORD while earning an income. Join Scriptures: 1-800-585-5873 opt 3. Please lv #12801 after msg.

ASSEMBLE products at home for best companies. Great extra income! Call: (1-800) 377-6000, ext. 8290.

EARN $$ WITH INTEGRITY MUSIC Share your faith and earn extra income for your household. Integrity At Home, a division of Integrity Incorporated, is actively seeking independent consultants for a home-based business opportunity. Be your own boss. Set your own hours. Spread the message of salvation through our award-winning Christian music and videos. Call (888) 323-1210 for a special message and more information.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES

CHRISTIAN BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY Call (1-800) 585-5873 option 3, listen to "Success with Scriptures," a Christian Network-Marketing program. Sign-up is FREE. Call today and receive a free Info Pack. Leave my I.D. #14608.

RETIRED PASTOR/ENTREPRENEUR/LAY LEADER type. Build a lucrative business with cutting-edge technology. My average managers earn $80K/yr. and other perks: cars, travel, profit sharing, & more! Investment required, 0 interest financing for credit-worthy candidates. Sales experience a plus. North America is your territory. If you're success minded, call Doug at Action Jackson Marketing, Inc. (1-888) 426-6826.

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

6,000 GOOD USED BOOKS FOR SALE. Get monthly free book list from Pastor Wayne, 3940 Winewood Ct. SE, Grand Rapids, MI 49508; E-mail: 73223.2010@compuserve.com

EVANGELISTIC MATERIAL IN ARABIC: books, tracts, cassettes. In English: The Bible and Islam ($4.95 U.S./$5.95 Canada). Write: Arabic Dept., Back to God Hour, 6555 W. College Dr., Palos Heights, IL 60463.

BAKER BOOK HOUSE buys libraries, large & small. Phone: (616) 957-3110; fax: (888) 263-7310; E-mail: used.books@bakerbooks.com. Grand Rapids, MI 49546.

REJECTION: TURNING YOUR LEMONS INTO LEMONADE: 185-page book. Send $15 to Marc Royer, Box 575, Granger, IN 46530.

SHORT-RUN BOOK PUBLISHING! We can publish your book professionally in quantities as low as 250 books for less than $1,200 U.S.! Take advantage of the Canadian dollar: For free info contact: Essence Publishing, 103B Cannifton Rd., Belleville, ON, Canada K8N 4V2; (1-800) 238-6376; fax: (613) 962-3055; www.essence.on.ca

THE LIBRARY OF SPIRITUAL CLASSICS. The greatest literature on the deeper Christian life ever penned. Free catalog. Spiritual Classics, 1275 Hwy. 16 W, Newnan, GA 30263; (770) 254-9442.

200,000 USED BOOKS. Libraries purchased. Kregel Used Books, Box 2607, Grand Rapids, MI 49501; (616) 459-9444; fax: (1-888) USD-BOOK; Web: www.kregel.com

THE FALSE DOCTRINE OF SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS: An Evangelical Resource, An Appeal to SDA Leadership, by Dale Ratzlaff: (800) 355-7073, www.ratzlaf.com

HAPPINESS IN 30 DAYS OR LESS: 93-page book. Send $10 to Marc Royer, Box 575, Granger, IN 46530.

THE HOUSE CHURCH MOVEMENT—a catalog of books and tapes available on this fresh, new, revolutionary movement. P.O. Box 285, Sargent, GA 30275; (1-800) 645-2342.

THE RAPTURE IS COMING! Prepare for this great event. Our exciting new book, Heaven Bound, teaches how to protect your possessions from the Antichrist, what the Great Deception is about, how to help those left behind, etc.: $10.00 ppd., Silos Publishing, Dept. CTR, PO Box 26115, Tamarac, FL 33320.

MANUSCRIPTS WANTED, ALL TYPES. Publisher with 75-year tradition. "Author's Guide to Subsidy Publishing"; (1-800) 695-9599.

BOOKS, FILMS, AND TAPES

1000's OF CHRISTIAN USED BOOKS for sale. For free monthly lists write: Corey Smallman, PO Box 9626, Chattanooga, TN 37412.

PUBLISH YOUR BOOK NOW! Your book can be produced and promoted by the leading subsidy book publisher. For free 32-page illustrated booklet TD-66, call (1-800) 821-3990 or write to: Vantage Press, 516 W. 34th St., New York, NY 10001.

☒ WORSHIP MUSIC RESOURCES print music and helps for the classically trained church pianist; recordings by William Phemister; phone/fax: (630) 665-9321; www.wheatonmusres.com

JESUS DID NOT RETURN IN AD 70, a biblical refutation of preterist theology; 28 pp., $3. A Clearer View of the Rapture, premillennial; 110 pp., softcover; $6.00 postpaid. John E. Young, 6 Robert St., Rockaway, NJ 07866.

COMPUTER/VIDEO PROGRAMS

MEMBER ANALYZER SOFTWARE: Now you can track member information with ease, follow attendance, keep track of birthdays and anniversaries. You can follow contributions, generate geographic reports of your members and track skills/talents. Also print mailing labels. All this and more! Special offer $49.95+ $5 ship & hand. 3.5 in or CD-ROM. Send check or money order to Vital Productions LLC/P.O. Box 5718, Aiken SC 29804-5718. Fax order to (803) 641-3895 or call (1-800) 590-7769, 9 am-5 pm EST, M-F, Visa, MC, & Am Ex accepted.

COMPUTER SOFTWARE for church membership, contributions, and accounting. PowerChurch Plus is the most widely used church-administration software package. Call or write today for free information. F1 Software, Dept. CT, 208 Ridgefield Dr., Asheville, NC 28806; (1-800) 486-1800.

CHURCH MANAGEMENT SOFTWARE: Windows, MS-DOS; contributions & membership; financial; $85 each. Free trial. Vian Corporation: (908) 537-4642; http://www.vian.com.

CHURCH MANAGEMENT SOFTWARE, Faithful Steward 1.8, manages: membership, donations, links with accounting software. For Windows 3.1, 95, 98, & Mac. Demo $15, full version $199, Bible CD $50, Pastor's Library CD $70. Call (800) DAKONIA or (909) 861-8787.

DRAMA

☒ CHRISTIAN DRAMA. Hundreds of plays for adults and youth. Free catalog. Eldridge Publishing: (1-800) 95-CHURCH, or http://www.95church.com.

FUNDRAISING

GREAT FUNDRAISING IDEA! Need a fundraising project for your church or group? Call (1-800) 872-1278 now for a free color brochure on full-color commemorative plates offered by Preston-Hopkinson, P.O. Box 1, Lynchburg, VA 24505. Ask for brochure 2026.

TRAVEL

NEAR GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, MONTANA. 3BR log cabin; secluded. Color brochure: (320) 384-7739.

JOIN THE INTERNATIONAL Christian Bed & Breakfast Network. Call (1-800) 881-1940, or write to ICBBN, 550-777 Royal Oak Dr., Box 139, Victoria, BC V8X 4V1 Canada.

TRAVEL

☒ GOLDEN RULE TRAVEL is a Christian agency specializing in wholesale and bulk rate airline tickets for church and missionary travel. Our services are available to individuals as well as all mission and church organizations. We try extra hard to save you money! Mention this ad for a one-time, 2% discount. Call toll-free (1-888) 950-3273 FARE for pricing.

EDUCATION

LET'S FACE IT! A new century is upon us, and a new generation is waiting to be equipped to conquer it. ARE YOU READY? Paul said to Timothy: to diligently present yourself, unashamed to God, able to accurately handle the word of truth. ECUA's proven distance-learning degree programs in Theology, Ministry, Christian Counseling, Education, and Law can get you ready. Call for a free information packet. Evangel Christian University of America; (800) 346-4014; www.ecua.edu

THE VIRTUAL CAMPUS of Reformed Theological Seminary now offers you a world-class theological education right in your own home. Take accredited courses through Distance Education. Find out more by calling (800) 227-2013 or by e-mailing us at: distance.education@rts.edu

CONTINUING EDUCATION

FEED YOUR SPIRITUAL HUNGER
Cultivate your spirituality with a balance of study, prayer, rest, exercise, solitude, and relationships. Academy communities provide laity and clergy time and space to discern direction and develop spiritual disciplines. Participants meet in residence for five days each calendar quarter over a two-year period.

- Academy 14 begins May 1999 in Sinsinawa, WI
- Academy 15 begins October 1999 in Burlingame, CA
- Academy 16 begins July 2000 in Camp Sumatanga, AL

For more information write: The Academy for Spiritual Formation, The Upper Room, P.O. Box 189, Nashville, TN 37202-0189. Phone: (615) 340-7232; E-mail: Academy@bbs.upperroom.org. Visit our Web site at www.upperroom.org/resources/academy.html

POSITIONS WANTED

MINISTER WANTS church to pastor or revivals. Prayer for lost and sick, old-time King James; 240 E. Ruth Ave. 201, Phoenix, AZ 85020.

PUBLICATIONS

THE HEART OF AN ENTREPRENEUR. Personal account from a Christian businessman/layman/average person. Excellent topic for your small group. JD Publishing, P.O. Box 386, Crystal Lake, IL 60039.

PRODUCTS

GOSPEL TRACTS
Send $3 + $3 S&H for over 30 different tracts. Unlimited Concepts Gospel Tracts, P.O. Box 24044 CTM, Ft. Worth, TX 76124.

BE WISE—GET FOOD FOR Y2K: Try our great tasting meals w/5-10 yr storage life—NO preservatives, NO cooking, & NO refig req's. Menus for 1 day-2yrs. For families, churches, and missionaries. To receive 2 sample meals catalog, & Y2K Report, send $10 to: Forever Foods, Box 207, Yamhill, OR 97148 (1-800) 851-2634; www.foreverfoods.com

PRODUCTS

Discount Tapes & Supplies

Save on Cassettes, Duplicators, Video Cassettes, Computer Projectors and more. Call for a full color catalog.

1-800-251-6388

24 hr. ordering on the web at:

www.clwelectronics.com

MINISTRY AIDS

☒ SERMONHELP.COM celebrates the completion of its first year of Internet publication with an exceptional holiday subscription offer. Quality full text sermons, extensive sermon archives, and worship helps. Holiday offer is available only December 15-31. We promise it's worth a visit to www.sermonhelp.com

☒ TROUBLED YOUTH: Starting an outreach? You can avoid major obstacles we survived starting our Camp/Community ministry in 1970. Save time & pain with our Survival Guide. Call Rich at Youth Investment (612) 449-0004.

MINISTRY OPPORTUNITIES

VISIT PRISON IN AN ENVELOPE. By visiting an inmate you can fulfill the Lord's command to remember those in prison. Contact Prison Fellowship Ministries (CT), P.O. Box 17500, Washington, DC 20041; (703) 478-0100, x590; <http://www.pfm.org>

PERSECUTED CHRISTIANS IN VIETNAM

are in need of your prayers and support. Bibles are desperately needed by tribal and House Church Christians. $4.00 a Bible, $2.00 a NT. Contact Vietnamese World Christian Fellowship 13392 Taft St., Garden Grove, CA 92643, (714) 537-2522; (714) 537-5944(F); email: vietchurch@juno.com; web: www.vwcf.org

MINISTRY SERVICE, matching ministers/ministries. Connect with CCRS, P.O. Box 398, Sheffield, MA 01257. Phone: (413) 229-3627; e-mail: churchrectr@juno.com

MISSIONARIES

If you need to change mission boards, consider Ripe for Harvest. We are an independent, evangelical mission agency allowing you to pursue your call to missions as God has gifted and enabled you. Call (619) 435-0432 or write P.O. Box 182184, San Diego, CA 92184.

PREACH CHRIST to nations via shortwave radio: (561) 697-4547; www.flinet.com/~grlmin

MISSION NANNYS. Women 50+ travel and help missionaries with domestic duties. P.O. Box 609, Edgewater, MD 21037

SERVICES

WILDERNESS MINISTRY PROGRAMS for teens! The Jubilee Ranch, British Columbia; (250) 861-0176.

SERVICES

ASPIRING WRITERS

Send for FREE STARTER KIT to: Christian Writers Guild, 65287 Fern, Hume, CA 93628; phone: (209) 335-2333; fax: (209) 335-2770; or: NVRohrer@juno.com

CHRISTIAN PLAYWRIGHTS: Nondenominational drama publisher seeking new playwrights and composers. Call Eldridge Publishing at (1-800) 95 CHURCH for submission guidelines and current needs or visit www.95church.com.

ORDINATION. International Ministerial Fellowship, an association of evangelical churches and ministers, offers many services, including ordination, newsletters, networking, ecclesiastical endorsement, consultation in area of legal, accounting, church planting, biblical/theological training, Internet services (FREE Web site and E-mail address) and a missions sending agency. For free information, check out our Web site: www.i-m-f.org or write: P.O. Box 32366, Minneapolis, MN 55432; (612) 571-5967.

Moving Interstate?

The Service and Thrift Relocation Service offers discounted rates and other benefits to reduce your moving cost on moves within the Continental U.S. For a free, no-obligation estimate call Lewis, CORD northAmerican:

1-800-873-2673

ICCR MC 167012

northAmerican.
VAN LINES/AGENT

DISCOUNTS: DENTAL, VISION, PRESCRIPTIONS! 50-80% for $29.95 per year; (1-800) 268-4333 # SEA.

OUTREACH CENTER MINISTER

If you believe you are called to minister to people in small groups, the National Conservative Christian Church will provide you a course of study, coaching, and assistance to begin a cell group, home church, or an outreach center. Write the N.C.C.C. at 4460 Northgate Court, Sarasota, FL 34234, or phone (941) 365-8115.

DIABETICS with Medicare or insurance, get your diabetic supplies at no cost. Call (1-800) 337-4144.

REAL ESTATE

MOVING? Call us to find a full time, highly recommended Realtor® who:

- *Is committed to utmost integrity and service
- *If requested, will also introduce you to the Christian community, churches and schools

A totally FREE SERVICE (USA/Canada)

The EXODUS Network 1-800-395-8556

INSURANCE

Missionaries Worldwide Health Plan

For Missionaries working overseas!

FHI Benefit Plans/Aetna Global Benefits

800-347-9547

www.rfdriver.com/fhigroup.htm

Shatter the Silence!

Persecuted Christians and the Church in Sudan Need Your Help.

I was enslaved, beaten, raped, starved and forced to convert to Islam. Thank you for saving me and my children. Now we are free to be Christian again.

Akon Akot

"We rejoice that CSI has brought freedom to thousands of Sudanese slaves. But tens of thousands of Christian slaves remain in bondage, and many more Christians are severely persecuted elsewhere in the world.

They pay a heavy price for their faith in our Savior, Jesus Christ. They look to you for help."

Reverend Hans Stuckelberger
Founder and International President,
Christian Solidarity International

To learn more about the enslavement and redemption of Christians in the Sudan, Christian Solidarity International (CSI), has prepared a FREE video and literature for worship, devotion and study. Also, learn how you can daily help suffering brothers and sisters in Christ throughout the world. To receive your FREE video and more information about the work of CSI, call, write or visit our website today.

Christian Solidarity International • 3334 E. Coast Hwy. #295 • Corona del Mar, CA 92625

Phone: 1-888-313-4468 • (949) 640-7885 • Fax: (949) 640-7886

E-Mail: csiusa50@aol.com • Internet: <http://www.csi-int.ch>

“Asbury Seminary enabled me to grow intellectually and spiritually in a way I don’t think I could have grown at any other institution.”

— Dr. William J. Abraham, Albert C. Outler Professor of Wesley Studies Southern Methodist University

“It is rare to find a seminary where love for God in a deeply personal sense is so enthusiastically wedded to study and service in the church.”

Billy Abraham came from Ireland to the United States with serious questions: Can faith and reason cohere? Can the church and academy work together? Can a scholar be devout? Asbury Seminary provided some answers. “Asbury gave me a formation in the faith. It enabled me to put together my experience with God, service in the church and absolutely natural intellectual work.”

Billy went on to earn his doctorate from Oxford, studying under Basil Mitchell. Today he is a world-class philosopher with numerous books to his credit, including his recent ground-breaking work Canon and Criterion in Christian Theology (Oxford Press, 1998). But Billy is not only a first-rate scholar, he is also a gifted evangelist, a respected churchman and, chiefly, a passionate follower of Jesus Christ.

Like so many Asbury graduates, Billy learned that a keen mind need not exclude a warm heart. At Asbury Seminary we take the quest for integration seriously, because effective ministry requires both theological precision and spiritual vitality.

So if you are looking for a seminary where your mind will be challenged and spirit nurtured, call 1-800-2-ASBURY today. Because head and heart should go hand in hand.

ASBURY
THEOLOGICAL
SEMINARY
WILMORE, KY & ORLANDO, FL

What The Prince of Egypt Won't Tell You

Hollywood, having had its fill of religious boy-cotts, is bending over backwards with the new DreamWorks production about Moses, The Prince of Egypt. I felt privileged to be invited not once, but twice to a private screening of the animation in process—until I learned that several hundred other people had made the same pilgrimage to meet with Jeffrey Katzenberg at DreamWorks.

What an industry! For four years, 400 people, many of them skilled artists, have been working on a project that cost well over $100 million. They'll know in two weekends whether it will make or lose a bundle. No wonder they want the religious community on their side.

The Prince of Egypt is a fine film by any standard and takes surprisingly few liberties with the biblical story. Impressed, I agreed to write a chapter for Destiny and Deliverance, the book that will serve as a companion to the film, with the proviso that I could write about Deuteronomy, the recap of Moses' life. That book, often overlooked, contains personal outpourings by Moses as poignant and heart-rending as anything in the Bible.

Consider, for example, Moses' depiction of the horrors awaiting those who disobey the covenant (Deut. 28:64-68):

Then the Lord will scatter you among all nations, from one end of the earth to the other. . . . There the Lord will give you an anxious mind, eyes weary with longing, and a despairing heart. You will live in constant suspense, filled with dread both night and day, never sure of your life. In the morning you will say, "If only it were evening!" and in the evening, "If only it were morning!"—because of the terror that will fill your hearts and the sights that your eyes will see. The Lord will send you back in ships to Egypt on a journey I said you should never make again. There you will offer yourselves for sale to your enemies as male and female slaves, but no one will buy you.

As the Israelites stepped across the Jordan River, curses like these rained down on them from a choir standing on a mountaintop. Antiphonally, another choir shouted out potential blessings. In this natural amphitheater, the two choirs loudly vocalized the stark alternatives of obeying or disobeying the covenant with God.

In addition, Moses set up large stones coated with plaster on which were written the words of the law. God longed for the covenant to succeed: "Oh, that their hearts would be inclined to fear me and keep all my commands always, so that it might go well with them and their children forever!" Repeated rebellions in the wilderness had taken a toll, however. After Sinai, even God spoke of the future with a tone of resignation, like the parent of a drug addict helpless to stop his own child from self-destructing.

Two staged memory lessons were not enough. Write down a song, God said, and teach it to the Israelites as a witness to history. Laws written on stone and plaster, curses and blessings broadcast from the mountaintops—these sights and sounds will fade away. Make them learn my words by heart. Drill the message inside them.

Thus, at the birth of their nation, euphoric over the crossing of the Jordan River, the Israelites premiered a kind of national anthem, the strangest national anthem that has ever been sung. It had virtually no words of pride or hope, only doom.

When I submitted my chapter to the readers at DreamWorks, they were scandalized. Why this pessimism, this fatalism, this latent anti-Semitism in a book celebrating the grand miracle of the Exodus? In the margin beside some of the strongest passages, a Jewish proofreader wrote, "Where is this from?" I pointed out that each questionable quotation came directly from Deuteronomy, part of the sacred Torah.

Modern readers, excited by the thrill of the Exodus, pay little attention to the 400 years of misery that preceded it, or the abysmal failures that followed. Which is why the Bible includes Deuteronomy in the first place, and why we optimistic Americans ought to pay it more mind.

Others have borrowed parts of Moses' message, but no one has quite got it right. Liberationists of all stripes have appropriated the language of Exodus, yet all lack Moses' unstinting realism. They drift into utopian promises of a Promised Land that has never been—and will never be—realized this side of eternity. Often these utopians end up creating a political system more tyrannical than the one they sought liberation from.

Likewise, pietist Christians have borrowed Moses' vision to describe a Victorious Christian Life on the other side of Jordan. The last seven chapters of Deuteronomy should forever disabuse us of that notion. Life with God is never so easy, so settled. Not for the Hebrews then, and not for us living today. The pilgrim must ever progress, uphill, meeting new enemies around every bend.

The Old Testament should come with a warning: Don't read Exodus without also reading Deuteronomy. It would save a lot of disillusionment—for moviemakers, for politicians, and also for preachers.

The Old Testament should come with a warning: Don't read Exodus without also reading Deuteronomy.